Tesla Idles German Plant

Suspected arson cut power to the region, escalating local opposition to factory

By WILLIAM BOSTON

GRÜNHEIDE, Germany—Tesla halted production at its plant outside Berlin after what police said was a suspected arson attack on the power grid by opponents of the factory's planned expansion.

Police said they believe attackers set a high-voltage pylon ablaze overnight about 3 to 6 miles from the plant, knocking down power to it and across the region.

"We are investigating the initial suspicion that it was deliberate arson," said a spokeswoman for the Brandenburg state police. "We are investigating in all directions."

Police said they were analyzing a letter allegedly from a far-left group known as Vulkangruppe, or Volcano Group, claiming responsibility for the attack.

The group is known to Germany's domestic intelligence agencies and is suspected of carrying out a similar attack in the past to cut power during construction of the Tesla plant, the police spokeswoman said.

Tesla Chief Executive Elon Musk lashed out at the attackers on X, formerly Twitter. "These are either the dumbest eco-terrorists on Earth or they're puppets of those who don't have good environmental goals. Stopping production of electric vehicles, rather than fossil fuel vehicles, isst extrem dumm," Musk said.

Andre Thierig, plant manager of Tesla's factory, told reporters that the financial damages would be in the "upper nine-digits," adding: "We don't currently expect to be able to ramp up production again this week."

The local power company, E.Dis, said it had largely re-established power supply to several surrounding towns and villages affected by the power outage, with the exception of a large industrial settlement, a production facility and a logistics center.

The only large industrial site in the area is the Tesla plant, a settlement of factory buildings covering more than a square mile of former woodlands.

The plant has become a focus of criticism from an array of unrelated groups, including Germany's far-right Alternative for Germany party, local conservationists and militant environmental activists.

Opponents say the plant is a drain on precious water supplies that is gobbling up valuable woodlands and mainly bringing jobs for highly qualified outsiders.

Last month, nearly two-thirds of residents in the Brandenburg municipality of Grünheide, where the plant is located, rejected in a nonbinding ballot a plan by the company to expand the factory and build a rail yard, new warehouses and a day-care facility.

From the first announcement in 2019 about setting up a factory in Grünheide, Tesla faced local opposition initially focused on the site's proximity to water-protection zones and conservation areas, causing initial delays to construction.

Tesla has said the plant now has reached a volume of about 6,000 cars a week.

Tesla shipped 60,365 China-made vehicles during the month.

Electric-Vehicle Makers See China Sales Slow in February

By BEN OTTO

Shipments by Tesla and other electric-vehicle makers tumbled in China in February, hurt by weaker demand during the Lunar New Year holiday and rising competition in the world's second largest economy.

Tesla shares slid 3.9% on the news in Monday trading, dragging year-to-date losses to 27%.

The U.S. electric-vehicle maker shipped 60,365 China-made vehicles during the month, its lowest monthly reading since late 2022, preliminary data from the China Passenger Car Association showed on Monday. That marked a decline from 71,447 units in January and 94,139 in December.

Warren Buffett-backed BYD, the Chinese automaker that overtook Tesla as the world's top seller of electric vehicles last quarter, saw its sales drop to 121,748 vehicles in February from 201,493 a month earlier.

EV sales by Chinese companies Huawei-backed Seres and Li Auto also declined sequentially.

Across the industry, total EV sales fell 9% on year—and 34% on-month—to about 450,000 units in February, the CPCA said.

The association attributed the decline to fewer working days in February and holiday closures, and said that overall, the industry remained healthy amid declining levels of inventory.

Vehicle sales typically slow during the Lunar New Year holiday in China, but Tesla also has been facing pressure from heightened competition and industry price cuts amid slowing industry sales and overcapacity in the world's largest market for electric vehicles.

Last week, Tesla rolled out fresh incentives to boost demand for its vehicles, offering discounts on the company's existing inventory of its rear-wheel drive Model 3 and Model Y variants.

Those offers came on the heels of fresh price cuts by BYD, which last month also launched a $233,000 sports car to compete at the premium end of the market.

Police said a high-voltage pylon outside Berlin was set ablaze.
