2. The Cayman Proceeding is recognized as a foreign main proceeding pursuant to section 1517(b)(1) of the Bankruptcy Code.

6. No action taken by the Petitioners or any of their successors, agents, representatives, advisors or counsel, in preparing, disseminating, applying for, implementing or otherwise acting in furtherance of, or in connection with, the Cayman Proceeding, this Chapter 15 Case, this Order or any other order made in this Chapter 15 Case, or any adversary proceeding herein, or any further proceeding commenced hereunder, shall be deemed to constitute a waiver of the immunity afforded such person under sections 306 and 1510 of the Bankruptcy Code.

A. This Court has jurisdiction over this matter pursuant to 28 U.S.C. §§ 157 and 1334, and 11 U.S.C. §§ 109 and 1501 and the Amended Standing Order of Reference from the United States District Court for the District of Delaware dated February 29, 2012.

B. Venue of this proceeding is proper in this judicial district pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1410 (2) because there is an action pending against the Funds within this judicial district, and the Court may enter a final order consistent with Article III of the United States Constitution.

C. This is a core proceeding under 28 U.S.C. § 157(b)(2)(P).

D. The Official Liquidators are the "foreign representatives" of the Funds pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 101(24).

G. The Cayman Liquidations are "foreign proceedings" pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 101(23).

H. The Cayman Liquidations are entitled to recognition by this Court pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 1517.

I. The Cayman Liquidations are pending in the Cayman Islands, the country where the Funds' center of main interests is located, and accordingly the Cayman Liquidations are foreign main proceedings pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 1502(4), and are entitled to recognition as foreign main proceedings pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 1517(b)(1).

J. The Official Liquidators are entitled to all of the relief provided under 11 U.S.C. § 1520 and 1521 without limitation, except as specifically provided for in this Order.

K. The relief granted hereby is necessary and appropriate, in the interests of the public and international comity, consistent with the public policy of the United States, and warranted pursuant to 11 U.S.C. §§ 1507, 1517, 1520 and 1521.

(1) executing against the Funds' property or assets;

(2) taking or continuing any act to obtain possession of, or exercise control over, the Official Liquidators (with respect to the Funds), the Funds, or any of the Funds' property or assets;

(3) taking or continuing any act to create, perfect or enforce a lien or other security interest, set-off or other claim against the Official Liquidator (with respect to the Funds), the Funds or any of the Funds' property or assets as of the date of the filing of the Petition, or otherwise seeking the issuance of or issuing any restraining notice or other process or encumbrance with respect to the Funds or any of the Funds' property or assets; and

(4) transferring, relinquishing or disposing of any property of the Funds to any person or entity other than the Official Liquidators;

and it is further

5. ORDERED, that 11 U.S.C. § 1520(a) shall be effective with respect to the Cayman Liquidations, except that solely the litigation *TMC Consulting Services, LLC v. 6. ORDERED, that TMC is hereby granted relief from the automatic stay imposed under 11 U.S.C. §§ 362 and 1520(a) with respect to the TMC Litigation, however, paragraph 4(1)-(4) shall remain in effect with respect to the TMC Litigation; and it is further

7. ORDERED, that the parties shall work to ensure that scheduling of the TMC Litigation reasonably accommodates the circumstances associated with litigation involving companies undergoing Official Liquidation in the Cayman Islands; and it is further

8. ORDERED, that the Official Liquidators will not object to any application made to the Grand Court by TMC to lift any stay that may be applicable to the TMC Litigation under the Supervision Orders and relevant laws of the Cayman Islands ("Cayman Stay"), and the confirmation of such non-objection will be sent, within two (2) business days of TMC's request, via letter from the Official Liquidators' Cayman Islands counsel, Walkers, to TMC's Cayman Islands counsel Conyers Dill & Pearman; and it is further

9. ORDERED that the Official Liquidators have agreed not to request, and hereby waive, any sanction or penalty in respect of any violation by TMC of the Cayman Stay; and it is further

10. ORDERED that in the event an application by TMC to the Grand Court to lift the Cayman Stay is denied by the Grand Court ("Cayman Stay Denial Order"), the Official Liquidators do not waive any rights whatsoever to seek recognition and enforcement of the Cayman Stay Denial Order in this Court or the Delaware Superior Court and TMC does not waive any right to contest such recognition or enforcement; and it is further

11. ORDERED the Official Liquidators and TMC shall not be deemed to have waived or relinquished any right, duty, obligation or argument not specifically and explicitly provided for herein; and it is further

12. ORDERED, that, except for the TMC Litigation and as set forth in paragraphs 4-8 above, 11 U.S.C. § 1521(a)(1-3) shall be effective with respect to the Cayman Liquidations and/or the stay, as provided for by Section 97(1) of the Companies Law, shall be effective in the United States pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 1507; and it is further

14. ORDERED, that the Official Liquidators are hereby granted authority to assert claims of the Funds against parties that are subject to jurisdiction in the United States; and it is further

15. ORDERED, that the administration or realization of all or part of the assets of the Funds within the territorial jurisdiction of the United States is hereby entrusted to the Official Liquidators and the Official Liquidators are hereby established as the exclusive representatives of the Funds in the United States; and it is further

16. ORDERED, that the Official Liquidators are hereby granted authority to engage in discovery in respect of United States-located documents and witnesses pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 1521(a)(4) in respect of the assets, affairs and liabilities of the Funds; and it is further

IN THE MATTER OF FORMATION GROUP (CAYMAN) FUND I L.P.

COUNTRY GARDEN (HONG KONG) DEVELOPMENT COMPANY LIMITED and FIVE OTHERS v. FORMATION GROUP (CAYMAN) FUND I L.P.

GRAND CT. (Kawaley, J.) April 21st, 2022

Partnership — exempted limited partnership — winding up — pursuant to Exempted Limited Partnership Act (2021 Revision), s.36(3), winding-up petition may be presented against exempted limited partnership

The petitioners sought an order that a partnership be dissolved or wound up.

The petitioners, who contributed approximately 70% of the respondent's capital contributions, sought an order that the respondent be dissolved or wound up in accordance with s.3 of the Exempted Limited Partnership Act (2021 Revision) and s.35(e) of the Partnership Act or, in the alternative, s.36(3) of the Exempted Limited Partnership Act and s.92(e) of the Companies Act (2021 Revision).

The general partner applied for an order that the winding-up petition be struck out on the basis that it was presented against the respondent rather than against the general partner. The general partner submitted that (a) the strike-out application turned on the question of who was the proper respondent to the petition; (b) the respondent was not a legal entity; (c) the Exempted Limited Partnership Act only permitted legal proceedings to be brought against a general partner of an exempted limited partnership not against the exempted limited partnership itself—s.33(1) of the Act provided that "… legal proceedings by or against an exempted limited partnership may be instituted by or against any one or more general partners only, and a limited partner shall not be a party to or named in the proceedings"; (d) winding-up proceedings or proceedings for a decree of dissolution were legal proceedings against an exempted limited partnership, within the meaning of s.33(1); and (e) the consequence of failing to comply with s.33(1) by naming the general partner as the respondent was that the proceedings were a nullity which was incurable.

In response, the petitioners submitted that (a) they were primarily relying on the winding-up jurisdiction under the Companies Act, as applied to exempted limited partnerships by s.36(3) of the Exempted Limited Partnership Act; (b) the true legal question was the broader one of whether an exempted limited partnership could be wound up at all, with the question of whether proceedings could be brought against an exempted limited partnership being merely one element of that broader question; (c) limited partners could petition for the winding up of an exempted limited partnership under Part V of the Companies Act and the respondent was the correct respondent to the petition; (d) s.33 of the Exempted Limited Partnership Act was merely aimed at reversing the general rule which applied to ordinary partnerships where any partner could be named as a defendant in proceedings relating to the liabilities of the partnership, it did not prevent proceedings being issued against an exempted limited partnership; and (e) s.33(1) had to be read consistently with s.36(3), which was specific to winding up and provided "… Part V of the Companies Act (2021 Revision) and the Companies Winding Up Rules, 2018 shall apply to the winding up of an exempted limited partnership and for this purpose—(a) references in Part V to a company shall include references to an exempted limited partnership …"

Held, dismissing the summons:

(1) Section 33 of the Exempted Limited Partnership Act did not prohibit proceedings against an exempted limited partnership. The legislative purpose of s.33(1) was primarily to reinforce the legal status of limited partners as not ordinarily liable to be sued (or entitled to sue) in respect of exempted limited partnership liabilities and rights. This legislative purpose and the language of the provision in its wider statutory context strongly suggested that "may" in s.33(1) was permissive and that there was no general or usual mandatory rule that proceedings could not be issued against an exempted limited partnership in its own name. In any event, s.36(3) of the Act expressly provided that a winding-up petition could be presented against an exempted limited partnership in the same manner as in relation to a company and this special provision overrode the general terms of s.33(1). The fact that an exempted limited partnership generally had no separate legal personality was beside the point when the legislature had expressly extended the company winding-up regime to such entities. The court accepted the submission that it was entirely logical for the business of an exempted limited partnership to be wound up separately and apart from its general partner which might have other separate business concerns. It was true that a general partner was ultimately responsible for an exempted limited partnership's debts, but this responsibility was only triggered when the exempted limited partnership's assets were insufficient to meet those debts. The idea of an exempted limited partnership being wound up was consistent with the statutory scheme because s.4(2) made it clear that such legal entities had their own assets and liabilities distinct from the general partners which managed them and the limited partners which invested in them (paras. 36–45).

(2) If the petition had been liable to be struck out because it was impermissibly presented against the exempted limited partnership, that defect could not have been cured by amendment. It was inconsistent with the statutory winding-up regime to substitute a respondent to a petition (paras. 46–47).

P. Sherwood and N. Smith for the petitioners;
H. Khanbhai for Formation Group GP I L.P. as general partner of the respondent ("the GP").

1 KALAWEY, J.:

Introduction

By their petition dated December 15th, 2021, the petitioners (who contributed approximately 70% of the respondent's capital contributions) claiming to be contingent creditors of the respondent sought the following principal relief, namely an order that:

"1. The Partnership be dissolved or wound up in accordance with Section 3 of the ELP Act and Section 35(e) of the Partnership Act or, in the alternative, Section 36(3) of the ELP Act and Section 92(e) of the Companies Act …"

2 The GP applied by summons dated January 14th, 2022 for the following principal relief, namely an order that:

"1. The Winding Up Petition dated 15 December 2021 be struck out, on the basis that it has been presented against the Respondent rather than against the GP …"

3 Although Mr. Khanbhai for the GP sought to delicately avoid directly engaging with this underlying conflict, the present strike-out application focused on a standing point which reflects conflicting approaches by different judges of the Grand Court. Mostly recently, in In re Padma Fund L.P. (5), Parker, J. held that there was no jurisdiction to wind up an exempted limited partnership ("ELP") under the Companies Act. I took the contrary view, consistent with earlier decisions of this court, in In re XiO Diamond L.P. (9), which Parker, J. in Padma concluded was wrongly decided. Although Mr. Sherwood for the petitioners was keen for obvious forensic reasons to reduce the strike-out argument to a choice between following my own decision and Parker, J.'s conflicting decision, the present application cannot be approached in such a binary fashion. The arguments canvassed in XiO were not precisely the same as those advanced in Padma, and the submissions in the present case are not precisely the same as those advanced in either of the two previous conflicting decisions.

4 Interpreting bespoke legislative instruments such as the Exempted Limited Partnership Act ("the ELP Act") without the benefit of nourishment from persuasive authorities from larger common law jurisdictions is often a challenging endeavour. Through an incremental process in which different judges confront different legal points and similar legal points framed in somewhat different ways, a consensus gradually emerges as to the meaning of the most important statutory provisions. In this context, in my judgment, each judge is entitled to be more willing than might be appropriate in more settled areas of law to depart from previous decisions, even his or her own.

The GP's case for striking out

5 By way of overview, Mr. Khanbhai submitted:

"5. The correct jurisdictional gateway, i.e. between the Companies Jurisdiction and the Partnerships Jurisdiction, is not a question that arises on the Strike Out Application.

6. The Strike Out Application turns only on one discrete point. Who is the proper respondent to a petition seeking the relief sought by the Petitioners?

7. The Petition has been filed against Formation Group (Cayman) Fund I, L.P. (the 'Fund'). The respondent to the Petition is not a legal entity. The Petitioners should have named the GP in its capacity as general partner of the Fund, as the respondent to the Petition. As a result, the Petition is defective and falls to be struck out. That is the end of the matter."

6 The GP's counsel's central thesis was set out in his skeleton argument as follows:

"13. An exempted limited partnership is a creature of statute, comprising at least one general partner and one limited partner. It has no legal personality. It cannot own property in its own right. Its business is carried on by its general partner: section 14 of the ELP Act. Further:

(a) It is the general partner that holds assets of the partnership on trust for the partnership, in accordance with the partnership deed: section 16(1) of the ELP Act.

(b) On the admission or substitution of a general partner, the assets of the exempted limited partnership vest in the new general partner by operation of law: section 17 of the ELP Act.

(c) It is also the general partner that incurs debts or obligations on behalf of the partnership: section 16(2) of the ELP Act.

14. Section 33 of the ELP Act provides expressly in relation to 'Proceedings'. Section 33(1) provides that: 'Subject to subsection (3), legal proceedings by or against an exempted limited partnership may be instituted by or against any one or more of the general partners only, and a limited partner shall not be a party to or named in the proceedings'.

15. Subsection (3) relates to derivative actions brought by limited partners and so is not relevant for present purposes.

16. Winding up proceedings (Companies Jurisdiction) or proceedings for a decree of dissolution (Partnerships Jurisdiction) are 'legal proceedings … against an exempted limited partnership' within the meaning of section 33(1).

17. It follows that the Petition should have named the GP as the Respondent.

18. Proceedings which appear to be duly issued but fail to comply with a statutory requirement are a nullity which is incurable: the third of three classes of nullity referred to by Upjohn LJ in Re Pritchard

19. The consequence of failing to comply with section 33(1) of the ELP Act, when filing the Petition, is that the proceedings are a nullity which is incurable (as opposed to an irregularity which might be capable of being cured).

20. In Padma Fund FSD 201 of 2021 (unrep. 8 October 2021), Parker J was considering a winding up petition presented against an exempted limited partnership. He had to consider two separate issues:

(a) First, in the case of a petition presented against an exempted limited partnership, who was the proper respondent to the petition? In particular, was it the general partner or was it the fund?

(b) Second, on such a petition what is the appropriate jurisdictional gateway, the Companies Jurisdiction or the Partnership Jurisdiction?

21. It is only the first issue (proper respondent) that arises on this Strike Out Application. Padma is the only Cayman Islands decision on that first issue. XiO Diamond LP (unrep. 30 April 2020, FSD 256 of 2019 (IKJ)), for example, is an authority that deals with the second point but not the first.

22. On the proper respondent issue, Parker J held at paragraphs 35 and 36 of Padma that section 33(1) of the ELP Act is determinative of who should be the respondent when the originating process is intended to invoke the court's winding up jurisdiction in relation to an exempted limited partnership:

> '35. There is … no provision within the ELP Act or the Partnership Act which provides that legal proceedings may be instituted against an exempted limited partnership in the name of the partnership. This is because it is through the general partner that its debts and obligations are enforced. Section 33(1) of the ELP says in terms proceedings may be instituted against the general partner(s) only.
> 36. Mr Sherwood relies on Order 81, rule 12 of the Grand Court Rules, 1995 (Revised Edition) which provides that any action by or against an exempted limited partnership may be commenced in the name of the firm. However in my view that does not assist Mr Sherwood because the applicable statutes must take precedence over procedural rules, and the particular rule does not in my view deal with the court's winding up jurisdiction.'"

7 In short, the GP invites this court to follow its earlier decision in Padma (5) and to hold that the ELP Act only permits legal proceedings to be brought against a general partner of an ELP and not against the ELP itself. While it seems clearly right that the GP has only directly based its strike-out application on the s.33(1) of the ELP Act point, it seems difficult as a matter of preliminary analysis to see how the construction of s.33(1) which was applied by Parker, J. in Padma can be properly assessed by entirely divorcing the construction analysis from the wider legal context in which it is embedded.

The petitioners' primary response

8 The petitioners' skeleton argument first made it clear that they were primarily relying upon the winding-up jurisdiction under the Companies Act:

> "3. The petition is for a winding up order under the Companies Act 2021 ('Companies Act'), as applied to ELPs by section 36(3) of the Exempted Limited Partnership Act (2021 Revision) ('ELPA') or, in the alternative, an order for dissolution under the Partnership Act (2013 Revision) ('Partnership Act'). The petition has been presented in this way due to recent conflicting decisions of this Court."

9 Secondly, in defining the issues, Mr. Sherwood effectively submitted that the true legal question was the broader question of whether an ELP could be wound up at all, with the question of whether proceedings could be brought against an ELP being merely one element of that broader jurisdictional question:

> "7. The petitioners say—consistent with a long line of Grand Court decisions including Re XIO Diamond LP (FSD 256 of 2019 (IKJ), 30 April 2020)—that limited partners may petition for the winding up of an ELP under Part V of the Companies Act, and that the Fund is the correct respondent to the petition. The only outlier is the recent decision in Re Padma Fund LP (FSD 201 of 2021 (RPJ), 8 October 2021), in which Parker J determined that Re XIO (and implicitly earlier decisions) was wrongly decided.
> 8. Until Re Padma, there was never any jurisprudential doubt that, procedurally, a just and equitable petition was correctly issued by a limited partner against an ELP (and not the general partner) pursuant to section 36(3) of the ELPA, which imports the winding up jurisdiction and procedure in Part V of the Companies Act …
> 11. The case concerned a creditor's petition on insolvency grounds against an ELP. Despite this, Parker J made wider observations on the source of the Grand Court's jurisdiction to wind up an ELP on just and equitable grounds. This included, at paragraph 61, the observation that the Grand Court's jurisdiction to wind up an ELP by a limited partner on just and equitable grounds arises under section 3 of the ELPA and section 35(e) of the Partnership Act 'only'. His Lordship went on to consider this Court's decision in Re XIO at 76–88, respectfully concluding that it was decided in error at paragraph 87.

12. The ratio in Re Padma is to be found at paragraphs 72, 92 and 93, and it is limited to a finding that a creditor of an ELP must commence its petition against the general partner and not the ELP. This decision was based on two primary findings: (a) First, because the general partner is responsible for the debts of the ELP; (b) Secondly, because section 33(1) of the ELPA absolutely prohibits proceedings being issued against the ELP itself.

13. It is not necessary for this Court to determine the correctness of the ratio in Re Padma as it relates to creditor petitions. But this Court may feel compelled to do so in light of Parker J's heavy if not singular reliance on (respectfully) an incorrect interpretation of section 33(1) of the ELP Act which led to His Lordship's obiter comments regarding just and equitable petitions. His Lordship's interpretation of section 33(1) is also relied on by the Fund in its strike out application."

10 As to the merits of the legal point, it was further argued most pertinently as follows:

"16. First, it is accepted that section 33(1) states that: 'legal proceedings by or against an exempted limited partnership may be instituted by or against any one or more of the general partners only …' However, the literal wording of a statute must be read in its context and the surrounding words and scheme of the legislation must be used as an aid to a purposive reading of the relevant provision.

17. Section 33(1) immediately goes on to provide further guidance as to the true scope of the subsection by saying '… and a limited partner shall not be a party to or named in the proceedings'. Those words cannot be read in isolation to those that preceded them. The mischief at which section 33(1) is aimed is merely to reverse the general rule which applies to ordinary partnerships where any partner may be named as a defendant in proceedings relating to the liabilities of the partnership. Those are the 'legal proceedings' at which section 33(1) is aimed and certainly not collective proceedings for winding up.

18. Subsections (2) and (3) provide exceptions to the general rule stated in subsection (1) and therefore serve as additional context. Subsection (2) confirms that limited partners may become defendants in cases where they have taken part in the management of the ELP (section 20(1)) or because they have received distributions subject to clawback (section 34(1)). Subsection (3) confirms when limited partners may issue proceedings derivatively. These subsections place subsection (1) in context.

19. Accordingly, section 33 as a whole is aimed at setting the parameters for proceedings to be issued by or against limited partners in respect of the ELP. It does not in terms prevent proceedings being issued against an ELP.

20. Second, the interpretation of section 33(1) must be read consistently with the express provisions of section 36(3), which are specific to winding up (and not 'legal proceedings' generally, as that term is used in section 33(1)). The provisions of section 36(3) are not remotely ambiguous. Part V of the Companies Act is imported into the ELPA for winding up purposes. Accordingly, contrary to Parker J's finding at paragraph 43 of Re Padma, there is no need in section 91 of the Companies Act specifically to confer jurisdiction on the Court to wind up ELPs. This is because section 36(3)(a) specifically treats references to 'company' to 'exempted limited partnerships' for the purposes of section 91 and elsewhere in Part V12.

21. Third, to the extent it is necessary, assistance in discerning the legislature's intentions can be found in the Explanatory Memorandum for the Bill which brought in (the forerunner of) section 36(3) of the ELPA and the Official Hansard Report for the second reading of the same, which are set out in the Annex to this skeleton argument.

22. These clearly show that the Legislative Assembly's intention was to apply the winding up provisions of Part V of the Companies Act to ELPs. The legislation was enacted because the existing provisions 'fell far short of a meaningful dissolution framework for exempted limited partnerships'. This is in direct contrast to the conclusion reached at paragraph 60 of Re Padma (where the Court did not have the benefit of these materials) that there was no 'mischief' for the legislation to redress because that dissolution framework already existed."

11 These submissions provoked two initial reactions. First, construing s.33(1) of the ELP Act was a difficult point of statutory interpretation. Secondly, it seemed impossible to engage in a meaningful process of statutory construction of that provision without also making sense of other relevant provisions in the same statute, namely the provisions relating to winding up under the Companies Act.

12 The petitioners advanced alternative arguments as to how, if their primary arguments were rejected, the standing problem could be cured by amendment. I indicated in the course of the hearing, based on the GP's compelling contrary submissions, that this alternative case seemed hopeless. I will address this subsidiary issue briefly below.

Legal findings

The statutory provisions

13 The first key statutory provision is s.33 of the ELP Act:

> "33. (1) Subject to subsection (3), legal proceedings by or against an exempted limited partnership may be instituted by or against any one or more of the general partners only, and a limited partner shall not be a party to or named in the proceedings.
> (2) If the court considers it just and equitable any person or a general partner shall have the right to join in or otherwise institute proceedings against any one or more of the limited partners who may be liable under section 20(1) or to enforce the return of the contribution, if any, required by section 34(1).
> (3) A limited partner may bring an action on behalf of an exempted limited partnership if any one or more of the general partners with authority to do so have, without cause, failed or refused to institute proceedings.
> (4) If any action taken pursuant to subsection (3) is successful, in whole or in part, as a result of a judgment, compromise or settlement of any action, the court may award any limited partner bringing any action reasonable expenses, including attorney's fees, from any recovery in any action or from an exempted limited partnership."

14 The most obvious literal meaning of s.33(1) is that it creates a general rule immunizing limited partners from being sued in respect of an ELP's affairs and conferring the primary right to sue and be sued in respect of an ELP's affairs on the general partner(s). An exception to this general rule is then set out in s.33(3), which Mr. Khanbhai aptly described as "derivative claims." Section 33 does not in terms prohibit proceedings against an ELP altogether. Whether such a prohibition should be inferred accordingly requires further contextual statutory analysis.

15 Mr. Khanbhai submitted that "may" in s.33(1) is mandatory. He placed reliance on the following provisions of s.4 of the ELP Act:

> "(2) An exempted limited partnership shall consist of one or more persons called general partners who shall, in the event that the assets of the exempted limited partnership are inadequate, be liable for all debts and obligations of the exempted limited partnership, and one or more persons called limited partners who shall not be liable for the debts or obligations of the exempted limited partnership save as provided in the partnership agreement and to the extent specified in > sections 20(1) and 34(1), but a general partner, without derogation from that general partner's position as such, may, in addition, take an interest as a limited partner in the exempted limited partnership."

16 This does provide some potential support for the proposition that a general partner is, as s.33(1) arguably implies, the only proper party to sue in respect of partnership debts. However, carefully read, it does not meaningfully advance the thesis at all. Rather, s.4(2) is only explicitly defining two central characteristics of an ELP:

(a) as a general rule, limited partners have no liabilities in respect of ELP debts; and

(b) as a general rule, general partners "shall, in the event that the assets of the exempted limited partnership are inadequate, be liable for all debts and obligations of the exempted limited partnership."

17 The statutory language clearly envisages that an ELP will have its own "assets … debts and obligations" and that a general partner will only be liable in the event that the ELP's assets are "inadequate" to meet its liabilities. In brief, this implies that an ELP has some degree of legal personality as one would expect drawing upon the more longstanding traditional partnership construct. Section 4(2) is ultimately neutral in terms of shedding light on how s.33(1) should be construed, but provides some general support for the proposition that as far as winding up is concerned, an ELP does have its own pot of assets and liabilities which are capable of being wound up separate and apart from the general partner(s). Mr. Sherwood's oral submissions to this effect were quite powerful in conceptual and practical terms.

18 The most important other provisions in the ELP Act for present purposes are the following provisions of s.36:

> "(3) Except to the extent that the provisions are not consistent with this Act, and in the event of any inconsistencies, this Act shall prevail, and subject to any express provisions of this Act to the contrary, the provisions of Part V of the Companies Act (2021 Revision) and the Companies Winding Up Rules, 2018 shall apply to the winding up of an exempted limited partnership and for this purpose—
> (a) references in Part V to a company shall include references to an exempted limited partnership;
> (b) the limited partners shall be treated as if they were shareholders of a company and references to contributories in Part V shall be construed accordingly, except that the application of the provisions shall not cause a limited partner to be subject to any greater liability than that limited partner would otherwise bear under this Act, but for the application of this paragraph;

(c) references in Part V to a director or officer of a company shall include references to the general partner of an exempted limited partnership;

(d) except for sections 123, excluding subsection (1)(b) and (c), 129, 140, 145, and 147 of the Companies Act (2021 Revision), Part V shall not apply to a voluntary dissolution and winding up under subsection (1);

(e) in the case of a voluntary winding-up of an exempted limited partnership under subsection (1) where the partnership was registered under section 9 prior to 11th May 2009, the necessary time period for compliance with the requirements of section 123 (1) of the Companies Act (2021 Revision) shall be at least twenty-eight days prior to the final distribution of the assets of the exempted limited partnership to partners rather than within twenty-eight days of the commencement of its voluntary winding-up;

(f) the Insolvency Rules Committee established pursuant to the Companies Act (2021 Revision)shall have the power to make rules and prescribe forms for the purpose of giving effect to this section or its interpretation; and

(g) on application by a partner, creditor or liquidator, the court may make orders and give directions for the winding up and dissolution of an exempted limited partnership as may be just and equitable."

19 These provisions read in a straightforward and uncomplicated manner appear at first blush to be quite clear and unambiguous. They provide most significantly as follows:

(a) "Part V of the Companies Act (2021 Revision) and the Companies Winding Up Rules, 2018 shall apply to the winding up of an exempted limited partnership," subject to specified modifications;

(b) the word "company" shall be read as "exempted limited partnership";

(c) the word "contributories" shall be read as "limited partners";

(d) the word "director" includes "general partner"; and

(e) subject to specified exceptions, Part V of the Companies Act does not apply to voluntary dissolutions under s.36(1) of the ELP Act.

20 Section 36(3) appears to provide in explicit terms that an ELP may be wound up under Part V of the Companies Act and the Companies Winding

Up Rules and that, minor modifications apart, references in Part V to "company" apply to an ELP and references to a "contributory" apply to a limited partner. By necessary implication, a limited partner may petition to wind up an ELP on the same grounds as would be available to a contributory in relation to a company.

Preliminary view on the proper construction of s.33(1) and s.36(3) of the ELP Act

21 Taking a preliminary view without regard to any judicial or other authority, it would seemingly require equally clear statutory language in some other part of the ELP Act to justify the conclusion that although s.36(3) provides that an ELP can be wound up by the court in the same manner as a company, there is an exception to this general rule to the effect that the general partner and not the ELP itself must be the respondent to the winding-up petition. Section 33(1) does expressly provide that (a) proceedings against an ELP can only be brought against a general and not against a limited partner, and (b) proceedings on behalf of an ELP can only generally be brought by a general partner. But s.33(1) does not with any real clarity suggest or imply that a limited partner may not present a winding-up petition against an ELP, the seemingly clear contrary terms of s.36(3) notwithstanding.

22 One point seems clear beyond serious argument having regard to the most elementary rules of statutory construction. It makes no sense at all to seek to determine a question of standing to present a petition under Part V of the Companies Act, as applied to an ELP by s.36(3) of the ELP Act, by ignoring s.36(3) and focusing solely on s.33(1). Mr. Khanbhai's beguiling invitation to the court to adopt such a blinkered approach seemed indicative of the fact that s.36(3) is the "Achilles heel" of the GP's standing analysis.

23 Mr. Sherwood aptly relied upon the following principles of statutory interpretation. In Shanda Games Ltd. v. Maso Capital Invs. Ltd. (8), Lady Arden (delivering the advice of the Judicial Committee) opined as follows (2020 (1) CILR 293, at para. 27):

> "27 The Board considers that, when and to the extent that any issue … is to be ascertained by statutory interpretation [i]n that situation, the court has to ascertain the intention of the legislature from the words it has used in their context, and also in the light of any material which demonstrates the mischief that it was concerned to redress by the statutory provision." [Emphasis added.]

24 This preliminary view must accordingly be tested by reference to both the relevant authorities and any material relating to the legislative history of the statutory provisions which elucidates their purpose or, in more classical terms, the mischief they were designed to remediate.

The pre-Padma authorities' implicit support for the view that an ELP could be wound up under Part V of the Companies Act

25 Authorities in which it was assumed that a winding-up petition could be presented against an ELP, with no attempt being made to dispute the assumption, can for obvious reasons be mentioned briefly:

(a) Re Cybernaut Growth Fund L.P. (1): the petition was presented against the ELP by limited partners complaining of mismanagement by the general partner. Following a contested hearing at which Richard Hacker, Q.C. appeared for the general partner, a winding-up order was made against the ELP under the then Companies Law. No point was taken that an ELP could not be wound up or that a petition could not be presented against solely against an ELP (although it appears that the GP and another entity involved in the management of the partnership were joined as respondents to the petition at the directions stage);

(b) In re Rhone Holdings LP (7) (unreported): the petition was presented against the ELP and sought its winding up. The general partners, for whom Mr. Tom Lowe, Q.C. appeared, successfully applied to strike out the petition but did not rely on a lack of standing ground or the argument that an ELP could not be wound up. The Court of Appeal refused leave to appeal against Ingrid Mangatal, J.'s decision and expressly confirmed that the ELP Act provided for the winding up of an ELP under the Companies Act: In re Rhone Holdings LP (2016 (1) CILR 273);

(c) In re XiO Diamond L.P. (9): a winding-up petition was presented against an ELP and was opposed by counsel appearing for the ELP. The respondent ELP contended that there was no jurisdiction to wind up under s.36(3)(g) and that jurisdiction did exist to wind up under s.92(e) of the Companies Act which relief it would not oppose. The petition was amended to seek this relief and I ordered that (2020 (2) CILR 270, at para. 4):

> "1. The Partnership be wound up in accordance with sections 92(e) and 94(1)(c) of the Companies Law (2020 Revision) as read with section 36(3) of the Exempted Limited Partnership Law (2018 Revision)."

(d) In re Duet Real Estate Partners 1 L.P. (3): a winding-up petition was presented against an ELP and served at its registered office. It was expressly directed that the ELP (2020 (2) CILR 390, at para. 1) "is properly able to participate in the proceeding." Although the petition was unopposed, I ordered that the ELP (ibid., at para. 5) "be wound up in accordance with section 92(c) of the Companies Law and section 36(3) of the ELP Law."

26 Mr. Sherwood referred to other cases where winding-up orders were made against ELPs without considered judgments being delivered. These cases may be said to provide at best strong, indirect support for the petitioners' construction of s.33(1) as read with s.36(3) of the ELP Act, consistent with the thesis propounded in Surowiecki, The Wisdom of Crowds: Why the Many are Smarter than the Few and How Collective Wisdom shapes Business, Economies, Societies and Nations (2004). The cases demonstrate a fairly broad consensus that s.36(3) means what it says when it purports to confer jurisdiction on this court to wind up an ELP under the Companies Act. This is of course by no means conclusive; there was once a broad and now discredited general consensus that the Earth was flat. But when distinguished commercial silks are briefed to oppose a winding-up petition (as happened in In re Cybernaut Growth Fund L.P. (1) and In re Rhone Holdings L.P. (7)) and fail to raise the standing point raised by the GP in the present case, this strongly suggests that the point now being raised (and first raised in Padma (5)) must be a point which is either counterintuitive or less than obvious at least. It is noteworthy that although s.33(1) was not expressly considered in Re XiO Diamond L.P. (9), counsel for the ELP in that case (a) formally appeared for the ELP, and (b) positively asserted that jurisdiction to wind up existed under the Companies Law (as it was then).

27 It is important to reiterate that what was assumed to reflect the correct legal position in these past cases without direct consideration of the point raised for consideration in relation to the present petition does little more than to cause me to approach the presenting standing point with a healthy degree of scepticism. The construction of s.33(1) of the ELP Act as it applies to winding-up petitions presented pursuant to s.36(3) must be determined on its merits as this is an issue that the previous decisions never directly addressed. It is not unknown for legal points which have not been taken at first instance for several years to be belatedly taken and upheld at the highest appellate level.[1]

In re Padma

28 In In re Padma Fund L.P. (5), the petitioners sought the winding up of an ELP under s.92(d) of the Companies Act (2021 Revision) as creditors. The GP on behalf of the ELP contended the court had no jurisdiction to make the order sought. Justice Raj Parker agreed. Mr. Sherwood, who also appeared for the petitioners in that case, was unable to persuade the judge that In re XiO Diamond Fund L.P. was correctly decided. In the present case, he sought to distinguish Padma as limited to the context of creditors' petitions but sensibly acknowledged that the findings recorded potentially

1 PricewaterhouseCoopers v. Saad Invs. Co. Ltd. (6): the Judicial Committee held that the jurisdiction to wind up overseas companies (which had been assumed to exist in Bermuda since 2000 based on a judgment in a case where there was an unopposed winding petition) did not properly exist.

applied to the winding-up remedy generally. The pivotal finding made in Padma was the following (2021 (2) CILR 556, at para. 35):

> "35 There is however no provision within the ELP Act or the Partnership Act which provides that legal proceedings may be instituted against an exempted limited partnership in the name of the partnership. This is because it is through the general partner that its debts and obligations are enforced. Section 33(1) of the ELP Act says in terms proceedings may be instituted against the general partner(s) only." [Emphasis added.]

29 It is that pivotal preliminary finding which then founds the following key conclusory finding that an ELP cannot be wound up at all under the Companies Act (ibid., at paras. 47–48):

> "47 Section 36(3) of the ELP Act states:
> 'Except to the extent that the provisions are not consistent with this Act, and in the event of any inconsistencies, this Act shall prevail, and subject to any express provisions of this Act to the contrary, the provisions of Part V of the Companies Act (2021 Revision) and the Companies Winding Up Rules, 2018 shall apply to the winding up of an exempted limited partnership and for this purpose …' [Emphasis added.]
> 48 It seems to me that this provision does not give a freestanding right for a creditor to present a winding-up petition against an exempted limited partnership (XiO Diamond (5))."

30 This conclusion was buttressed by proper regard being had to the legislative purpose of s.36(3) (ibid., at paras. 61–70):

> "61 I seems to me that from a proper analysis of the above statutory provisions that the court's jurisdiction to wind up an exempted limited partnership on the application of a partner on the grounds that it is just and equitable to do so arises by virtue of s.3 of the ELP Act and s.35(e) of the Partnership Act only.
> 62 This is relevant for when one examines the decision in XiO Diamond LP … below as, unlike the present case, it concerned an analysis of the situation which applied on the application to wind up by a limited partner.
> 63 I have considered whether there was 'mischief' which the legislature sought to address by introducing s.36(3) of the ELP Act to enable a creditor to present a winding up petition against an exempted limited partnership, as in the present case.
> 64 I have concluded that no mischief existed as the creditor was (and remains) entitled to enforce any debt against the general partner which, unlike the exempted limited partnership, has a legal personality.

65 In any event, the provisions of Part V of the Companies Act referenced in s.36(3) of the ELP Act are subject to s.33(1) of the ELP Act which expressly states that legal proceedings against an exempted limited partnership may be instituted against a general partner only.

66 It seems to me therefore that the legislative purpose of introducing s.36(3) was to apply the applicable provisions of Part V of the Companies Act and the Companies Winding Up Rules, 2018 following the commencement of the winding up in order to facilitate the orderly winding up of the partnership's affairs.

67 This analysis accords with the commercial position and the legal liabilities which arise on the insolvency of a partnership where the business of the partnership is conducted by the general partner, the assets of the partnership are held by the general partner on a statutory trust and the general partner is personally liable for the debts of the partnership.

68 Pursuant to s.2 of the ELP Act, the partnership is deemed to be insolvent when the general partner is unable to pay the debts and obligations of the exempted limited partnership in the ordinary course of business as they fall due out of the assets of the exempted limited partnership, without recourse to the separate assets of the general partner not contributed or committed to the exempted limited partnership.

69 In that scenario the general partner remains personally liable for the partnership's debts and therefore the remedy of any creditor when the partnership is insolvent is to commence proceedings against the general partner. This is consistent with s.33(1) of the ELP Act.

70 The winding up procedure as it relates to exempted limited partnerships also fits with this analysis. When an exempted limited partnership is being wound up, either voluntarily under s.36(1) of the ELP Act or by order of the court pursuant to s.35 of the Partnership Act, the general partner is deemed to be the liquidating trustee of the partnership unless the court orders otherwise." [Emphasis in original.]

31 As a matter of first impression, when Padma was initially decided, I felt that Parker, J.'s well-reasoned judgment articulated a sound and novel basis for concluding that my own contrary previous decisions, particularly In re XiO Diamond Fund LP, had been wrongly decided. This preliminary view entailed accepting:

(a) the hypothesis set out in Padma (ibid., at para. 35) that there was "no provision within the ELP Act or the Partnership Act which provides that legal proceedings may be instituted against an exempted limited partnership in the name of the partnership"; and

(b) the hypothesis set out in Padma (ibid., at paras. 61–70) that the legislative purpose of s.36(3) was not to provide a wide gateway to winding up ELPs in the same manner as companies.

32 The merits of the GP's present strike-out application turn on an assessment of the validity of these two pivotal propositions.

The legislative purpose of s.36(3) of the ELP Act

33 Parker, J. was clearly right in his statutory construction exercise to have regard to the "mischief" the relevant provisions sought to address, although I prefer the modern terminology of seeking to ascertain the "legislative purpose" of new or uncertain provisions. As Professor Burrows (as he then was) has opined extra-judicially, "Thinking about statutes: interpretation, interaction and improvement," The Hamlyn Lectures, at 5–8, 19–20 (2018):

> "… [I]t is tolerably clear today that our judges have moved from an old literal to a modern and contextual approach … the modern approach has subsumed many of the old so-called 'canons of interpretation … they have lost primacy with the demise of literalism and have tended to be swallowed up by the modern contextual and purposive approach … When we talk of 'purpose', we are looking at the policy behind the statute or statutory provision. Identifying the policy is not dependent on identifying any person's intentions … Indeed to expose the practical irrelevance of the legislator's intention, it may be helpful to focus on the statute, rather than the legislator … [and] an advantage of such a switch of focus is that it helps to clarify that what ultimately matters is the judicial analysis, at the time a dispute arises, of what the statute means …"

34 Mr. Sherwood, still bearing the scars of his unsuccessful battle in Padma (5), provided me with more guidance as to the legislative purpose underpinning s.36(3) of the ELP Act in light of its now evident pertinence. Annexed to his skeleton argument were the following important submissions about the legislative history of s.36(3):

> "ANNEX—LEGISLATIVE HISTORY OF THE RELEVANT SECTIONS OF THE ELPA
> Section 36(3) of the ELPA.
> 1. Section 36(3) of the ELPA was originally enacted (as section 15(4)) by the Exempted Limited Partnership (Amendment) Law, 2009 (the '2009 Amendment').

2. Prior to the 2009 Amendment, the relevant dissolution provision (being section 15(2) of the Exempted Limited Partnership Law (2007) Revision) provided only:

> 'On application by a partner or a creditor, the court may decree dissolution of an exempted limited partnership, and may make such orders and give such directions for the winding up of its affairs as may be just and equitable.'

3. That language unambiguously intended to provide a procedure for the winding up of exempted limited partnerships, rather than a supplementary provision to the existing procedure for partnerships, being section 15(1) of the Partnership Act (2002 Revision), which was in effect at the time the Exempted Limited Partnership Law (2007 Revision) was legislated:

> 'On application by a partner the court may decree a dissolution of the partnership in any of the following cases … whenever in any case circumstances have arisen which, in the opinion of the court, render it just and equitable that the partnership be dissolved.'

4. It is in that context that the new section 15(4) (now 36(3)) was enacted. The Exempted Limited Partnership (Amendment) Bill, 2009 (the '2009 Bill') states precisely what was the intention of the Legislative Assembly (as it was then) in legislating new dissolution provisions in its Memorandum of Objects and Reasons:

> 'Clause 10 of the Bill repeals and replaces the provisions governing the winding up and dissolution of an exempted limited partnership. They are brought, so far as is possible, in line with the provisions of the Companies Law (2007 Revision) as amended by the Companies (Amendment) Law 2007.'

5. The Official Hansard Report for the second reading of the 2009 Bill is also instructive (emphasis added):

> 'Clause 10 upgrades section 15 of the principal Law in relation to winding-up and dissolution of exempted limited partnerships. Industry has advised, and government has agreed, that in the current climate the existing section 15 fell far short of a meaningful dissolution framework for exempted limited partnerships. The revised and improved section 15 was developed in close consultation with the Cayman Islands Society of Professional Accountants (CISPA). The provisions in clause 10 take the benefit as far as possible of the provisions for winding up and dissolution in the new (2007) Part V of the Companies Law, and cross-refer to those provisions to the extent > sensible. The ultimate, longer-term objective is to have a self-contained framework for winding up and dissolution within the Exempted Limited Partnership Law itself (that is, without cross-referral), but in the interim, clause 10 is a significant and necessary improvement that addresses a current gap in the Law in the immediate term.'"

35 In my judgment, the quoted extracts from the legislative history of s.36(3), which were not considered by this court in In re Padma, provide compelling support for the preliminary view that s.36(3) means what it says when it provides that an ELP may be wound up in the same manner as a company under Part V of the Companies Act. It was seeking to move further away from the traditional Partnership Act constraints on dissolution and to embrace, according to the Memorandum and Objects of the Bill "so far as is possible," the more flexible winding-up mechanisms applicable to companies. The following explanation given to the Legislative Assembly on the second reading of the Bill, combined with the quoted averments in the Memorandum and Objects, puts the legislative purpose of the then new provisions clear beyond serious argument:

> "… The provisions in clause 10 take the benefit as far as possible of the provisions for winding up and dissolution in the new (2007) Part V of the Companies Law, and cross-refer to those provisions to the extent sensible …"

The proper construction of s.33(1)

36 Having regard to the legislative history of s.36(3), it is clear that this statutory provision may indeed simply be interpreted according to its literal terms. The conceptual underpinnings for the pivotal finding in In re Padma as to the effect of s.33(1) of the ELP Act on the ability to wind up limited partnerships melt away. The finding that there was (ibid., at para. 35) "no provision within the ELP Act or the Partnership Act which provides that legal proceedings may be instituted against an exempted limited partnership in the name of the partnership" is clearly unsupportable because s.36(3) does expressly provide just that. Section 36(3) most importantly provides:

> "… Part V of the Companies Act (2021 Revision) and the Companies Winding Up Rules, 2018 shall apply to the winding up of an exempted limited partnership and for this purpose—

37 Accordingly, and ultimately very simply, s.36(3) expressly provides that a winding-up petition may be presented against an ELP in the same manner as in relation to a company and this special provision overrides the general terms of s.33(1). The fact that an ELP generally has no separate legal personality is entirely beside the point when Parliament has expressly extended the company winding-up regime to such entities. I therefore confirm the preliminary interpretative view I set out above.

38 As already noted above, making sense of such bespoke investment vehicles as ELPs and the statutory provisions which define them is difficult because of the absence of persuasive authority. It is doubly difficult in the absence of judicial experience of how such winding ups actually play out in practice. However, I ultimately accept Mr. Sherwood's oral submissions that it is entirely logical for the business of an ELP to be wound up separate and apart from its general partner which may have other entirely separate business concerns.

39 It is true that a general partner is ultimately responsible for an ELP's debts, but this responsibility is only triggered when the ELP's assets are insufficient to meet those debts. The need to call upon a general partner may not be apparent until the winding up of an ELP which is cash-flow insolvent is incomplete. When an ELP is being wound up on just and equitable grounds and is solvent, the rationale for naming the general partner as respondent to a petition is indecipherable altogether. The idea of an ELP being wound up is consistent with the statutory scheme, because s.4(2) makes it clear that such legal entities have their own assets and liabilities distinct from the general partners who manage them and the limited partners which invest in them.

40 Nor can it be said to be anathema in light of the general partnership law position for an ELP to be a party to legal proceedings for any purposes at all. A traditional partnership can sue and be sued under the firm name under GCR O.81, r.1. Mr. Sherwood was keen to point out that Parker, J. himself had recently joined an ELP to proceedings initially commenced against its general partner: Kuwait Ports Auth. v. Port Link GP Ltd. (4). However, he also pointed out that GCR O.81, rr. 12–15 also contemplate that an ELP may be sued in the firm name:

> "Actions by and against firms within jurisdiction (O.81, r.12)
>
> 12. Any actions by or against an ordinary limited partnership or exempted limited partnership may be commenced in the name of the firm.
> Service of writ (O.81, r.13)
>
> 13. Where an action is commenced against a firm, whether sued in the firm name or in the name of the general partner, the writ shall be served—
> (a) in the case of an ordinary limited partnership, by delivering the writ to its registered principal place of business; and

(b) in the case of an exempted limited partnership, by delivering the writ to its registered office.

Acknowledgment of service in action against firm (O.81, r.14)

14. Where an ordinary limited partnership or exempted limited partnership is sued in its firm name, service may not be acknowledged in the name of the firm but only by the general partner thereof in the general partner's own name, but the action shall nevertheless continue in the name of the firm.

Enforcing judgment or order against firm (O.81, r.15)

15. (1) Where a judgment is given or order made against a firm, execution to enforce the judgment or order may be issued against any property of the firm within the jurisdiction.

(2) Where a judgment is given or order made against a firm, execution to enforce the judgment or order may be issued against any person who—

(a) acknowledged service of the writ in the action as a general partner; or

(b) is registered as a general partner of the firm; or

(c) was admitted in any pleading to be a general partner of the firm; or

(d) was adjudged to be a general partner of the firm pursuant to Section 52(2) of the Partnership Act (as amended and revised), or Section 14 of the Exempted Limited Partnership Act (as amended and revised), as the case may be.

(3) Except as provided by paragraph (2), where a judgment is given or order made against a firm, execution to enforce the judgment or order shall not be issued against any person who is registered as a limited partner."

41 Mr. Khanbhai correctly submitted that rules of court cannot be used as an aid to construing primary legislation. However, the fact that the Rules Committee, like the various judges and lawyers in the previous winding-up cases, clearly assumed that the ELP Act permitted ELPs to be sued is not entirely without forensic effect. The starting assumption ought to be that the Rules Committee did not misconstrue their rule-making powers in relation to ELPs.[2] My preliminary view of s.33(1) was that it did not in terms impose a mandatory requirement that all suits against an ELP must be brought against the general partner of an ELP. Section 33(1) says, it bears remembering:

> "33. (1) Subject to subsection (3), legal proceedings by or against an exempted limited partnership may be instituted by or against any one or more of the general partners only, and a limited partner shall not be a party to or named in the proceedings."

42 Although this conclusion is strictly obiter, I find no reason to depart from my preliminary view (which is confirmed in an indirect sense by GCR O.81 rr. 12–15), that the legislative purpose of s.33(1) is primarily to reinforce the legal status of limited partners as not ordinarily liable to be sued (or entitled to sue) in respect of ELP liabilities and rights. This legislative purpose combined with the statutory language of the relevant provision in its wider statutory context strongly suggests that the "may" in s.33(1) is permissive and that there is no general or usual mandatory rule that proceedings cannot be issued against an ELP in its own name. The legislative history of s.33(1) itself does not undermine these provisional conclusions.

43 ELPs were created by the Exempted Limited Partnership Law 1991. Section 13(1) is substantially the same as s.33(1) today. The Memorandum of Objects and Reasons simply states: "Clause 13 deals with the means of bringing proceedings against such a partnership." The section was not materially changed by the Exempted Limited Partnership Law 2007 or 2009.

44 The central basis for my conclusion that an ELP may be the respondent to a winding-up petition is that, however s.33(1) falls to be construed, s.36(3) expressly permits a petition being presented in such a manner. As Mr. Sherwood rightly contended, even if s.33(3) imposes a mandatory general requirement to sue the general partner, relying on s.36(3) is justified by the following rule of statutory interpretation articulated by Lord Sales in Day v. Governor (2) (and applied to my mind in a somewhat novel way in that case) as follows (2022 (1) CILR 447, at para. 30):

> "This means that the principle of interpretation encapsulated in the Latin maxims 'lex specialis derogat legi generali' (the specific law prevails over the general) and 'generalia specialibus non derogant' (general provisions should not undermine the intended effect of provisions specifically drafted to deal with the particular case), which is a principle of coherent interpretation of legal instruments of any character, is applicable."

45 Despite Mr. Khanbhai's able arguments to the contrary, I am bound to find that, with the greatest of respect to Justice Parker, In re Padma (5) was wrong in finding that s.33(1) as read with s.36(3) of the ELP Act does not permit the presentation of a winding-up petition against an ELP alone because only the general partner may be sued. This conclusion was admittedly consistent with the implicit assumptions made in previous decision, including two of my own. However, the scales were tipped heavily in favour of the ultimate conclusion by the legislative history of s.36(3) which was placed before me and which Justice Parker did not have the benefit of considering. This additional material in my view helps to explain why in the earlier cases (and when the Rules Committee made O.81, rr. 12–15 of the Grand Court Rules) it was clearly assumed that ELPs could be wound up under Part V of the Companies Act.

Alternative findings: application to amend

46 The petitioners submitted (to my mind with little coherence or conviction) that any standing defect could be cured by amendment. The GP contended that if the petition was liable to be struck out because it was impermissibly presented against the ELP, the consequences of this were fatal and could not be cured by amendment. Mr. Khanbhai advanced the following cogent submissions in this regard:

> "28. The proceedings being a nullity, there can be no cure. The originating process has no more effect to commence the proceedings than a dog licence (as Lord Millett said in Strachan v The Gleaner, borrowing the language of Danckwerts LJ in Re Pritchard).
> 29. Further and in any event, there is no power to permit substitution of the respondent to a winding up petition.
>
> (a) The CWR applies, irrespective of the jurisdictional gateway: see section 36(3) of the ELP Act. The CWR expressly provide in relation to amendment of a petition (CWR Order 3 rule 2(3)). The CWR expressly provide in relation to substitution of the petitioner. There is no express rule in the CWR about correcting the name of or changing the respondent to a petition. There would have been one if that was contemplated.
> (b) The analogous rule in the GCR (viz. GCR O.15 r.6), which relates to correcting the name of a party, does not apply in proceedings governed by the CWR."

47 In my judgment it is indeed inconsistent with the statutory winding-up regime to substitute the respondent to a petition. The GP's counsel identified one simple yet fundamental legal conundrum which would arise if this were done: what would the date of the commencement of the proceedings be? Accordingly, if I had found that the petition was liable to be struck out, I would have further found that naming the wrong respondent was fatal and could not be cured by amendment.

Disposition of strike-out application

48 I accordingly find that that the GP's strike-out summons must be dismissed. I will hear counsel, if required, as to:

(a) costs;

(b) the terms of the order to be drawn up to give effect to the present judgment; and

(c) directions in relation to the further conduct of the petition.

Summons dismissed.

(2) If a limited partner takes part in the conduct of the business of an exempted limited partnership in its dealings with persons who are not partners, that limited partner shall be liable, in the event of the insolvency of the exempted limited partnership, for all debts and obligations of that exempted limited partnership incurred during the period that he so participates in the conduct of the business as though he were, for such period, a general partner, provided always that he shall be rendered liable pursuant to the foregoing provision only to a person who transacts business with the exempted limited partnership during such period with actual knowledge of such participation and who then reasonably believed such limited partner to be a general partner.

(3) A limited partner does not take part in the conduct of the business of an exempted limited partnership within the meaning of this section by-

(5) In the event of the dissolution of an exempted limited partnership its affairs shall be wound up by the general partner or such other person as may be appointed pursuant to the partnership agreement unless the court otherwise orders on the application of any partner or creditor of the exempted limited partnership pursuant to section 15(4)(f).

(c) a person may, with the consent of the general partner, and if by assignment, in accordance with paragraph (a) of subsection (7), become a limited partner without the consent of the existing limited partners; and

(d) a limited partner shall not be entitled to dissolve the partnership by notice.

(7) (a) Upon assignment of a limited partnership interest in whole or in part either absolutely or by way of mortgage, in accordance with the terms of the partnership agreement, an assignee shall, to the extent of such assignment, become a limited partner with the rights and subject to the obligations of the assignor (and, subject to paragraph (aa), wholly or partly in place of and to the exclusion of the assignor as the case may be) in accordance with the partnership agreement and this Law in respect of the partnership interest or part thereof assigned.

(aa) An assignee referred to in paragraph (a) shall not assume any liability of the assignor arising pursuant to subsection (2) or section 14(1), and no such assignment shall relieve the assignor of any liability arising under such subsections.

(b) Subject to paragraphs (a) and (aa), a limited partner may mortgage the whole or any part of his partnership interest and the mortgagee shall serve written notice at the address of the registered office of the exempted limited partnership of such mortgage together with a copy thereof and signed by the mortgagor and the mortgagee and pay such fee, if any, as may be provided in the partnership agreement. The general partner shall maintain or cause to be maintained at the registered office, a register of mortgages indicating the identity of the mortgagor and mortgagee, the date of creation of the mortgage, the partnership interest or part thereof subject thereto and the date of receipt of such notice.

(8) Any property of the exempted limited partnership that is conveyed to or vested in or held on behalf of any one or more of the general partners or which is conveyed into or vested in the name of the exempted limited partnership shall be held or deemed to be held by the general partner, and if more than one then by the general partners jointly, upon trust as an asset of the exempted limited partnership in accordance with the terms of the partnership agreement.

(9) Any debt or obligation incurred by a general partner in the conduct of the business of an exempted limited partnership shall be a debt or obligation of the exempted limited partnership.

(2) The Registrar shall maintain a record of each exempted limited partnership registered under this Law and all the statements filed in relation to such exempted limited partnership, which records and statements shall be kept open to public inspection during all usual business hours.

(3) The Registrar shall issue a certificate of registration under his hand and seal of office as soon as the registration of the statement pursuant to subsection (1) has been effected.

(4) No limited partner of an exempted limited partnership formed after the 15th July, 1991 shall have the benefit of limited liability until the date indicated on the certificate referred to in subsection (3) issued by the Registrar, and a partnership registered in accordance with section 21(1) shall obtain the benefit of limited liability under this Law with effect from such date but subject always to section 21(2).

(5) A certificate issued under subsection (3) shall be conclusive evidence that compliance has been made with all the requirements of this Law in respect of the formation and registration of an exempted limited partnership but subject always to section 21(2).

(7) Notwithstanding subsections (1) and (3), the Registrar may refuse to accept the registration of an exempted limited partnership and refuse to issue a certificate of such registration in any case where, in his opinion, the name of the proposed exempted limited partnership is in contravention of the proviso to section 6 (1).

Changes in registered particulars

10. (1) Without prejudice to subsection (2), if, during the continuance of an exempted limited partnership, any change is made or occurs in any matter specified in paragraphs (a) to (e) of the statement filed under section 9(1), a statement signed, subject to section 9(6), by a general partner specifying the nature of the change shall, within sixty days of such change, be filed with the Registrar.

(2) A statement signed in accordance with subsection (1) in respect of any arrangement or transaction consequent upon which any person will cease to be a general partner in any exempted limited partnership, shall, within fifteen days of such arrangement or transaction, be filed with the Registrar and, until such statement is so filed, the arrangement or transaction shall, for the purposes of this Law and the partnership agreement, be deemed to be of no effect.

(3) Save with the written consent of any person thereby affected, no arrangement or transaction shall take effect to the extent that it seeks to relieve or discharge a general partner from the obligations of a general partner with regard to any debt or obligation of the exempted limited partnership to a person incurred before such arrangement or transaction takes effect.

(4) If default is made in compliance with this section, each general partner in default shall incur a penalty of twenty-five dollars for each day that such default continues, which penalty shall be a debt due to the Registrar and such general partner shall indemnify any person who thereby suffers any loss.

(5) The name of an exempted limited partnership shall not be changed so as to contravene the proviso to section 6(1), and the Registrar may refuse to accept a statement under subsection (1) which, in his opinion, seeks to effect such a change.

Register of limited partnership interests

11. (1) The general partner shall maintain or cause to be maintained at the registered office of the exempted limited partnership a register which shall contain the name and address, amount and date of the contribution or contributions of each partner and the amount and date of any payment representing a return of any part of the contribution of any partner, which register shall be updated within twenty-one business days of any change in the particulars therein.

(5) A general partner who knowingly and willfully contravenes subsection (2) or (4) shall be subject to a penalty of five thousand dollars.

Proceedings

13. (1) Subject to subsection (2), legal proceedings by or against an exempted limited partnership may be instituted by or against any one or more of the general partners only, and no limited partner shall be a party to or named in such proceedings:

Provided that if the court deems it just and equitable any person or a general partner shall have the right to join in or otherwise institute proceedings against any one or more of the limited partners who may be liable under section 7(2) or to enforce the return of the contribution, if any, required by section 14(1).

(2) A limited partner may bring an action on behalf of an exempted limited partnership if any one or more of the general partners with authority to do so have, without good cause, refused to institute such proceedings.

Return of contributions

(1) A limited partner who receives a payment representing a return of any part of his contribution to the partnership within six months before an insolvency of the exempted limited partnership shall be liable to repay such payment with simple interest at the rate of ten per cent per annum (calculated on a daily basis) or otherwise as may be specified in the partnership agreement to the extent that such contribution or part thereof is necessary to discharge a debt or obligation of the exempted limited partnership incurred during the period that the contribution represented an asset of the exempted limited partnership.

(2) Repealed by section 9(a) of Law 13 of 2009.

(3) In this section-

"receive" includes the release of any obligation forming part of the capital contribution and, in this context, liabilities to make repayments pursuant to subsection (2) shall be read to refer to due performance of such obligations.

whichever is the earlier.

Dissolution

2012 Revision

(a) references in Part V to a company shall include references to an exempted limited partnership;

(b) the limited partners shall be treated as if they were shareholders of a company and references to 'contributories' in Part V shall be construed accordingly, except that the application of such provisions shall not cause a limited partner to be subject to any greater liability than he would otherwise bear under this Law, but for the application of this paragraph;

(c) references in Part V to a director or officer of a company shall include references to the general partner of an exempted limited partnership;

(d) except for sections 123 (excluding paragraphs (b) and (c)), 140, 145, and 146 thereof, Part V shall not apply to a voluntary dissolution and winding up under subsection (1);

(e) the Insolvency Rules Committee established pursuant to the Companies Law (2012 Revision) shall have the power to make rules and prescribe forms for the purpose of giving effect to this section or its interpretation; and

(f) on application by a partner or a creditor, the court may make such orders and give such directions for the winding up and dissolution of an exempted limited partnership as may be just and equitable.

(5) Subject to any express or implied term of the partnership agreement to the contrary, and subject to subsection (6), an exempted limited partnership shall be immediately dissolved on the date (the "automatic dissolution date") falling ninety days after the date of the service of a notice by the general partner (or its legal representative) on all the limited partners informing the limited partners of -

(a) the death;

(b) the commencement of liquidation or bankruptcy proceedings; or

(c) the withdrawal, removal or making of a winding up or dissolution order, in relation to the sole or last remaining general partner (or such other date or event as may be specified in the partnership agreement).

(6) If a majority of partners specified in the partnership agreement as being entitled to vote to elect a new general partner in accordance with the terms of the partnership agreement (or, if no such majority is specified in the partnership agreement, a simple majority of the partners) elects one or more new general partners before the automatic dissolution date, the business of the exempted limited partnership may be resumed and continued as provided for in the partnership agreement or any subsequent agreement.

(7) Unless the partnership agreement provides otherwise, if a new general partner is not elected by the automatic dissolution date the exempted limited partnership shall be wound up and dissolved in accordance with the partnership agreement or such orders or directions as the court may make or give in accordance with subsection (4).

Inspection

16. (1) Any person may require a certified copy of the certificate of registration, a certificate of good standing or a copy of or extract from any registered statement filed in relation to the exempted limited partnership to be certified as a true copy by the Registrar on payment of such fees as the Governor may, from time to time, by regulation prescribe.

(2) A certificate of registration, a certificate of good standing or a copy of or extract from a registered statement filed with the Registrar issued under this Law, if certified by the Registrar to be a true copy, shall be received in evidence in all legal proceedings.

Tax undertaking

(2) Any undertaking given under subsection (1) may provide, in addition, that the aforesaid taxes and any tax in the nature of estate duty or inheritance tax shall not be payable in respect of the obligations of the exempted limited partnership or the interests of the partners therein.

(3) Any such undertaking as aforesaid may be for a period not exceeding fifty years from the date of the approval of the application and may be in such form as the Governor shall determine.

Regulations

18. The Governor may, from time to time, make regulations in respect of exempted limited partnerships prescribing-

(a) the duties to be performed by the Registrar for the purposes of this Law;
(b) the forms to be used for the purposes of this Law;

(1) An exempted limited partnership shall, on or before the 31st day of January in every year, file with the Registrar a return signed by or on behalf of a general partner certifying that the exempted partnership has, during the prior calendar year, complied with section 10(1) and that there has been no breach of the declaration given in accordance with paragraph (f) of section 9(1) and pay to the Registrar an annual fee of such amount as the Governor shall, from time to time, by regulation prescribe.

20. Subject to any express or implied term of the partnership agreement to the contrary and to the duty imposed upon a general partner by section 4(3), a partner may lend money to, borrow from and transact other business with the exempted limited partnership (so that an asset, debt or obligation of the exempted limited partnership shall thereby be created) and with or without interest or security as the general partner shall determine, and shall have the same rights and obligations with respect thereto as a person who is not a partner, provided that the obligations of the exempted limited partnership to repay a debt to a general partner shall, at all times, be subordinated to the claims of secured and unsecured creditors of the exempted limited partnership.

Re-registration 2011 Revision

21. (1) Any partnership registered under the repealed Limited Partnership Law (Revised) or sections 45 to 54 and 56 to 57 of the Partnership Law (2011 Revision) or any law amending or re-enacting the same shall not be affected by this Law but shall continue to be governed by such law, as the case may be. Any such partnership and any partnership established under the laws of a jurisdiction other than the Islands may, at any time, upon effecting such amendments to the partnership agreement as shall be necessary to comply with this Law, if any, and upon paying a fee of such amount as the Governor may, from time to time, by regulation prescribe and upon filing the statement required by section 9(1), be registered under this Law and, with effect from the date indicated on the certificate of registration issued by the Registrar pursuant to section 9(3), shall be governed exclusively thereafter as an exempted limited partnership in accordance with this Law.

(2) With effect from the date indicated on the certificate of registration described in subsection (1), the exempted limited partnership and the partnership interests of the parties therein and their rights and liabilities, as against any person who is not a partner, shall cease to be governed by the repealed Limited

Partnership Law (Revised), or sections 45 to 54 and 56 to 57 of the Partnership Law (2011 Revision) or the laws of such other jurisdiction, as the case may be, save in respect of any act or omission occurring before such date which shall continue to be governed by such law or the laws of such other jurisdiction, and provided always without prejudice to the foregoing generality that such registration shall not operate to-

(a) create a new legal entity;
(b) affect the property previously acquired by or on behalf of the exempted limited partnership;
(c) affect any act or thing done prior to such registration or the rights, powers, authorities, functions or obligations of the exempted limited partnership, any partner or any other person prior thereto;
(d) render defective any legal proceedings by or against the exempted limited partnership or any partner or any other person, and any legal proceedings that could have been continued or commenced by or against the exempted limited partnership or any partner or any other person before its registration hereunder may, notwithstanding such registration, be continued or commenced after such registration and in respect of which such law or the laws of such other jurisdiction shall be of application.

Electronic business

24. Nothing in this Law shall prohibit an exempted limited partnership from offering, by electronic means, and subsequently supplying, real or personal property, services or information from a place of business in the Islands or through an internet service provider or other electronic service provider located in the Islands.

Recovery of penalties

25. (1) Notwithstanding any provision of this Law which prescribes a specific per diem penalty in respect of a default of any obligation to make a filing or to maintain a record set out in this Law, it shall be lawful for the Registrar, in any case where the aggregate per diem penalty has exceeded the amount of five hundred dollars and he is satisfied that the failure is not due to wilful default, to, at any time, accept payment of a penalty in the amount of five hundred dollars in lieu thereof.

(2) Without prejudice to the powers exercisable by the Registrar under this Law, all sums that he is entitled to recover by way of fees or penalties are recoverable either summarily as a civil debt, or as a simple contract debt, in any court of competent jurisdiction.

(2) Regulations made under this Act may —

(a) make different provision in relation to different cases or circumstances;

Validation of the Exempted Limited Partnership Regulations, 2014

(4) Notwithstanding the inconsistency referred to in subsection (3), during the specified period —

(a) the fees paid without statutory authority to the Registrar in respect of foreign limited partnerships; and

(b) any forms for a translation certificate submitted in respect of foreign limited partnerships, are validated and deemed to have been paid or submitted, as applicable, in accordance with the Exempted Limited Partnership Act, 2014.

(a) validated; and

(b) taken to have been lawfully charged by, paid to and collected by the Registrar, as if the Registrar was empowered under the Exempted Limited Partnership Act (2021 Revision) as amended by Exempted Limited Partnership (Amendment and Validation) Act, 2024 [Act 13 of 2024] to charge and collect those fees.

Orders or determinations by court not affected

53. The Exempted Limited Partnership (Amendment and Validation) Act, 2024 [Act 13 of 2024] does not affect any order or determination made by a court with respect to fees charged by, paid to and collected by the Registrar without statutory authority for any service provided by the Registrar prior to 1-Jan-2020, the commencement date of the Exempted Limited Partnership (Amendment and Validation) Act, 2024 [Act 13 of 2024].

Mode of forming company

5. Any one or more persons associated for any lawful purpose may, by subscribing their names to a memorandum of association, and otherwise complying with this Act in respect of registration, form an incorporated company, with or without limited liability.

Mode of limiting liability of members

6. The liability of the members of a company formed under this Act may, according to the memorandum of association, be limited either to the amount, if any, unpaid on the shares respectively held by them, or to such amount as the members may respectively undertake by the memorandum of association to contribute to the assets of the company in the event of its being wound up.

Memorandum of association

7. (1) The memorandum of association shall, subject to subsections (2), (3) and (4) and to sections 8 and 9, contain —

(a) the name of the proposed company which in the case of an exempted company, may be preceded by or followed with a dual foreign name, with the addition, in the case of any company not being an exempted company or a company formed on the principle of having no limit placed on the liability of its members, in this Act referred to as an "unlimited company", of the word "Limited" or the abbreviation "Ltd." as the last word in such name; and

(b) the part of the Islands in which the registered office of the company is proposed to be situate.

(2) No subscriber shall take less than one share.

(3) Each subscriber of the memorandum of association shall write opposite to that subscriber's name the number of shares that person takes.

(4) The memorandum of association may specify objects for which the proposed company is to be established and may provide that the business of the company shall be restricted to the furtherance of the specified objects. If no objects are specified or if objects are specified but the business of the company is not restricted to the furtherance of those objects, then the company shall have full power and the authority to carry out any object not prohibited by this or any other Law.

Company limited by shares

8. (1) Subject to subsection (2), where a company is formed on the principle of having the liability of its members limited to the amount unpaid on their shares, in this Act referred to as a company limited by shares, the memorandum of association shall also contain —

(a) a declaration that the liability of its members is limited; and

(b) the amount of capital with which it proposes to be registered, divided into shares of a certain fixed amount to be also therein specified:

Provided that the capital with which an exempted company proposes to be registered may be divided into shares without nominal or par value in which case the memorandum of association shall contain the amount of the aggregate consideration for which such shares may be issued:

Provided further that no exempted company shall divide its capital into both shares of a fixed amount and shares without nominal or par value.

(2) Where the capital of such a company is divided into shares of more than one class, the memorandum of association may contain a declaration that in a winding up of the company the liability of members holding the shares of a particular class shall be unlimited.

(3) The capital, fixed amount of shares and aggregate consideration referred to in subsection (1) may be expressed, and subscribed for, in any one or more currencies.

(4) No authorisation or issue, or purported authorisation or issue, by an exempted company of any share without nominal or par value shall, if that company has its capital divided into such shares only, be invalid only by reason of the fact it was authorised or issued, or purportedly authorised or issued, prior to the 20th November, 1989.

Company limited by guarantee

9. (1) Subject to subsection (2), where a company is formed on the principle of having the liability of its members limited to such amount as the members respectively undertake to contribute to the assets of the company in the event of the same being wound up, (in this Act referred to as a company limited by guarantee), the memorandum of association shall also contain a declaration that each member undertakes to contribute to the assets of the company, in the event of the same being wound up during the time that that person is a member, or within one year afterwards, for payment of the debts and liabilities of the company contracted before the time at which that person ceases to be a member, and of the costs, charges and expenses of the winding up of the company, and for the adjustment of the rights of the contributories amongst themselves, such amount as may be required, not exceeding a specific amount to be therein named.

(2) Where such a company has more than one class of member, the memorandum of association may contain a declaration that in a winding up of the company the amount of the undertaking of the members of a particular class shall be unlimited.

(3) A company limited by guarantee may have a share capital.

Memorandum of association may be altered

10. Subject to section 13, a company may, by special resolution, alter its memorandum of association with respect to any objects, powers or other matters specified therein.

Address of registered office may be changed

11. (1) A company may, by resolution of the directors, change the address of the registered office of the company to another address in the Islands, and shall, within thirty days from the date on which the resolution is made, file with the Registrar a certified copy of the resolution of the directors authorising the change together with the prescribed amendment fee.

(2) Until subsection (1) is complied with, the company shall not be deemed to have complied with this Act with respect to having a registered office.

Signature and effect of memorandum of association

12. The memorandum of association shall be signed by each subscriber in the presence of and be attested by at least one witness. It shall, when registered, bind the company and the members thereof to the same extent as if each member had subscribed that person's name and affixed that person's seal thereto and there were in the memorandum contained on the part of that person, that person's heirs, executors and administrators, a covenant to observe all the conditions of such memorandum, subject to this Act, and all monies payable by any member to the company under such memorandum shall be deemed to be a debt due from such member to the company.

Power of company limited by shares to alter its share capital

13. (1) A company limited by shares or a company limited by guarantee and having a share capital, if so authorised by its articles, may alter the conditions of its memorandum to —

(a) increase its share capital by new shares of such amount as it thinks expedient:

Provided that an exempted company having no shares of a fixed amount may increase its share capital by such number of shares without nominal or par value, or may increase the aggregate consideration for which such shares may be issued, as it thinks expedient;

(b) consolidate and divide all or any of its share capital into shares of larger amount than its existing shares;

(c) convert all or any of its paid-up shares into stock, and reconvert that stock into paid-up shares of any denomination;

(d) subdivide its shares or any of them, into shares of an amount smaller than that fixed by the memorandum, so, however, that in the subdivision the proportion between the amount paid and the amount, if any, unpaid on each reduced share shall be the same as it was in case of the share from which the reduced share is derived; and

(e) cancel shares which, at the date of the passing of the resolution in that behalf, have not been taken or agreed to be taken by any person, and diminish the amount of its share capital by the amount of the shares so cancelled or, in the case of shares without nominal or par value, diminish the number of shares into which its capital is divided.

(1A) Paragraphs (b), (c) and (d) shall have no application to shares without nominal or par value.

(2) The powers conferred by subsection (1) may not be exercised except by a resolution of the members of the company.

(3) If a currency in which any of the capital of a company limited by shares or by guarantee is replaced by the euro, the provisions of the company's memorandum of association and articles of association shall automatically be altered so as to re-denominate in euros the capital that is denominated in the replaced currency, at the conversion rate specified in, or otherwise calculated in accordance with, the relevant regulations adopted by the Council of the European Union, and the company, by resolution of the directors, may —

(a) take such action to round up or down the euro nominal or par value of each share in the company or the euro guarantee amount to such multiple of the euro as the directors may deem appropriate;

(b) notwithstanding the requirement for a special resolution in section 31, if the name of the company includes a reference to a currency replaced by the euro, or an abbreviation thereof —

(i) alter the name of the company to delete the reference or to substitute the reference with a reference to the euro or an abbreviation thereof; and

(ii) add such further distinguishing wording as the directors consider appropriate; and

(c) if the memorandum of association or articles of association of the company include a reference or references to a currency replaced by the euro, alter any or all such references in either or both of the memorandum of association and the articles of association by substituting such references with references to the euro or an abbreviation thereof.

(4) A company may, by resolution of the directors, reverse or vary the re-denomination of currency or any other action taken under subsection (3).

(5) A copy of any resolution passed under subsection (3) or (4) shall be forwarded to the Registrar within fifteen days and shall be recorded by that person.

(6) A cancellation of shares or a rounding down of the nominal or par value of shares under this section shall not be deemed to be a reduction of share capital within the meaning of this Act.

(7) If any action is taken by the company under paragraph (a) of subsection (3) to —

(a) round up the euro nominal or par value of any issued share in the company, then an amount equal to the increase in nominal or par value of that share shall be transferred from the share premium account or from the profit and loss account (as the directors shall, in their discretion, determine) and shall thereafter be deemed to be and treated as paid up share capital of the company; or

(b) round down the euro nominal or par value of any issued share in the company, then an amount equal to the decrease in the nominal or par value of that share shall be transferred from the paid up share capital of the company to the share premium account and shall thereafter be deemed to be and treated as share premium for the purposes of this Act.

Special resolution for reduction of share capital

14. (1) Subject to section 37 and to confirmation by the Court, a company limited by shares or a company limited by guarantee and having a share capital may, if so authorised by its articles, by special resolution reduce its share capital in any way, and in particular (but without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing power) may —

(a) extinguish or reduce the liability on any of its shares in respect of share capital not paid up;

(b) either with or without extinguishing or reducing liability on any of its shares, cancel any paid-up share capital which is lost or unrepresented by available assets; or

(c) either with or without extinguishing or reducing liability of any of its shares, pay off any paid-up share capital which is in excess of the needs of the company, and may, if and so far as is necessary, alter its memorandum by reducing the amount of its share capital and of its shares accordingly.

(2) A special resolution under subsection (1) is, in this Act, referred to as "a resolution for reducing share capital".

Application to court for confirming order, objections by creditors

15. (1) Where a company has passed a resolution for reducing share capital, it may apply by petition to the Court for an order confirming the reduction.

(2) Where the proposed reduction of share capital involves either diminution of liability in respect of unpaid share capital or the payment to any shareholder of any paid-up share capital, and, in any other case, if the Court so directs, subject to subsection (3), the following shall have effect —

(a) every creditor of the company who at the date fixed by the Court is entitled to any debt or claim which, if that date were the commencement of the winding up of the company, would be admissible in proof against the company, shall be entitled to object to the reduction;

(b) the Court shall settle a list of creditors so entitled to object, and for that purpose shall ascertain as far as possible without requiring an application from any creditor, the names of those creditors and the nature and amount of their debts or claims, and may publish notices fixing a day or period on or within which creditors not entered on the list are to claim to be so entered or are to be excluded from the right of objecting to the reduction; and

(c) where a creditor entered on the list whose debt or claim is not discharged or has not determined does not consent to the reduction, the Court may, if it thinks fit, dispense with the consent of that creditor, on the company securing payment of that person's debt or claim by appropriating as the Court may direct, the following amount —

(i) if the company admits the full amount of the debt or claim, or, though not admitting it, is willing to provide for it, then the full amount of the debt or claim; or

(ii) if the company does not admit and is not willing to provide for the full amount of the debt or claim, or, if the amount is contingent or not ascertained, then an amount fixed by the Court after the like enquiry and adjudication as if the company were being wound up by the Court.

(3) Where a proposed reduction of share capital involves either the diminution of any liability in respect of unpaid share capital or the payment to any shareholder of any paid-up share capital the Court may, if having regard to any special circumstances of the case it thinks proper so to do, direct that subsection (2) shall not apply as regards any class or any classes of creditors.

Order confirming reduction and powers of Court on making such order

16. (1) The Court, if satisfied with respect to every creditor of the company who under section 15 is entitled to object to the reduction, that either that person's consent to the reduction has been obtained or that person's debt or claim has been discharged or has determined, or has been secured, may make an order confirming the reduction on such terms and conditions as it thinks fit.

(2) Where the Court makes any such order, it may —

(a) if for any special reason it thinks proper so to do, direct that the company shall, during such period, commencing on or at any time after the date of the order, as is specified in the order, add to its name as the last word thereof the words "and reduced"; and

(b) require the company to publish as the Court directs the reasons for reduction or such other information in regard thereto as the Court may think expedient with a view to giving proper information to the public, and, if the court thinks fit, the causes which led to the reduction.

(3) Where a company is ordered to add to its name the words "and reduced", those words shall, until the expiration of the period specified in the order, be deemed to be part of the name of the company.

Registration of order and minute of reduction

17. (1) The Registrar, on delivery to that person of a copy of an order of the Court confirming the reduction of the share capital of a company, and of a minute approved by the Court, showing, with respect to the share capital of the company as altered by the order, the amount of the share capital, the number of shares into which it is to be divided and the amount of each share, and the amount, if any, at the date of the registration of the order and minute deemed to be paid up on each share, shall register the order and minute.

(2) On the registration of the order and minute, and not earlier, the resolution for reducing share capital as confirmed by the order so registered shall take effect.

(3) Notice of the registration shall be published in such manner as the Court may direct.

(4) The Registrar shall certify under that person's hand the registration of the order and minute, and that person's certificate shall be conclusive evidence that all the requirements of this Act with respect to reduction of share capital have been complied with, and that the share capital of the company is such as is stated in the minute.

(5) The minute, when registered, shall be deemed to be substituted for the corresponding part of the memorandum, and shall be valid and alterable as if it had been originally contained therein.

Liability of members in respect of reduced shares

18. Provided that, if any, creditor entitled in respect of any debt or claim to object to the reduction of share capital is, by reason of that person's ignorance of the proceedings for reduction or of their nature and effect with respect to that person's claim, not entered on the list of creditors, and after the reduction the company is unable, within the meaning of this Act with respect to winding up by the Court, to pay the amount of that person's debt or claim, then —

(a) every person who was a member of the company at the date of the registration of the order for reduction and minute shall be liable to contribute for the payment of that debt or claim an amount not exceeding the amount which that person would have been liable to contribute if the company had commenced to be wound up on the day before the said date; and

(b) if the company is wound up, the Court, on the application of any such creditor and proof of that person's ignorance as aforesaid, may if it thinks fit, settle accordingly a list of persons so liable to contribute, and make and enforce calls and orders on the contributories in a winding up.

PART 3 - Distribution of Capital and Liability of Members of Companies and Associations

Distribution of Capital

(ii) any restriction or condition on the transfer of the shares or interest set out in the regulations of the company is observed.

(2) The shares in a company having a capital divided into shares must each be distinguished by an appropriate number except that if, at any time —

(a) all the issued shares in the company; or

(b) all the issued shares in the company of a particular class, are fully paid up and rank pari passu for all purposes, none of those shares need thereafter have a distinguishing number so long as it remains fully paid up and ranks pari passu for all purposes with all the shares in the company or all the shares of the particular class of shares, as the case may be, for the time being issued and fully paid up.

(3) A company limited by shares, or a company limited by guarantee and having a share capital, if so authorised by its articles, may issue fractions of a share and, unless and to the extent otherwise provided in its articles, a fraction of a share shall be subject to and carry the corresponding fraction of liabilities (whether with respect to nominal or par value, premium, contribution, calls or otherwise howsoever), limitations, preferences, privileges, qualifications, restrictions, rights and other attributes of a whole share of the same class of shares; and in this Act the expression "share" includes a fraction of a share and no issue or purported issue of a fraction of a share shall be invalid by reason only of the fact that it was issued or purportedly issued prior to the 30th September, 1985.

(4) The nominal or par value of a share may be expressed in an amount which is a fraction or a percentage of the lowest available unit of legal tender of the currency in which the capital of the company is expressed.

Share premium account

34. (1) Where a company issues shares at a premium, whether for cash or otherwise, a sum equal to the aggregate amount of the value of the premiums on those shares shall be transferred to an account called "the share premium account". Where a company issues shares without nominal or par value, the consideration received shall be paid up share capital of the company.

(2) The share premium account may be applied by the company subject to the provisions, if any, of its memorandum or articles of association in such manner as the company may, from time to time, determine including, but without limitation —

(a) paying distributions or dividends to members;

(b) paying up unissued shares of the company to be issued to members as fully paid bonus shares;

(c) any manner provided in section 37;

(d) writing off the preliminary expenses of the company; and

(e) writing off the expenses of, or the commission paid or discount allowed on, any issue of shares or debentures of the company.

Provided that no distribution or dividend may be paid to members out of the share premium account unless, immediately following the date on which the distribution or dividend is proposed to be paid, the company shall be able to pay its debts as they fall due in the ordinary course of business; and the company and any director or manager thereof who knowingly and wilfully authorises or permits any distribution or dividend to be paid in contravention of the foregoing provision commits an offence and is liable on summary conviction to a fine of fifteen thousand dollars and to imprisonment for five years.

(3) Where a company had, before the 18th day of January, 1988, issued any shares at a premium, this section shall apply as if the shares had been issued after such date.

(4) At the option of the company, subsection (1) shall not apply to premiums on shares of a company allotted in pursuance of any arrangement in consideration for the acquisition or cancellation of shares in any other company, whether a company within the meaning of this Act or not, and issued at a premium.

(5) At the option of the company, an amount corresponding to any amount representing the premiums or part of the premiums on shares issued by a company which, by virtue of subsection (4), is not included in such company's share premium account may also be disregarded in determining the amount at which any shares or other consideration provided for the shares issued is to be included in such company's balance sheet.

(6) For the purposes of subsection (4) —

"arrangement" means any agreement, scheme or arrangement, whether of reconstruction, merger, consolidation, take-over, acquisition, purchase or otherwise whereby the allotting company acquires a controlling interest in the company whose shares it acquires or cancels.

(7) The relief allowed by subsections (4) and (5) shall apply even if the issue of shares took place prior to the 18th day of January, 1988.

Power to issue shares at a discount

35. (1) Subject as provided in this section, it shall be lawful for a company to issue, at a discount, shares in the company of a class already issued:

Provided that —

(a) the issue of the shares at a discount has been authorised by resolution of the company, and has been sanctioned by the Court;

(b) the resolution specify the maximum rate of discount at which the shares are to be issued;

(c) not less than one year, at the date of the issue, has elapsed since the date on which the company was entitled to commence business; and

(d) the shares to be issued at a discount are issued within one month after the date on which the issue is sanctioned by the Court or within such extended time as the Court may allow.

(2) Where a company has passed a resolution authorising the issue of shares at a discount, it may apply to the Court for an order sanctioning the issue, and on any such application the Court, if, having regard to all the circumstances of the case, it thinks proper so to do, may make an order sanctioning the issue on such terms and conditions as it thinks fit.

(3) Every prospectus relating to the issue of the shares must contain particulars of the discount allowed on the issue of the shares or of so much of that discount as had not been written off at the date of the issue of the prospectus and if default is made in complying with this subsection, the company and every officer of the company who is in default is liable to a default fine.

(4) This section does not apply to shares issued, or proposed to be issued, without nominal or par value.

Power of company to pay commissions

36. (1) A company has the power, and shall be deemed always to have had the power, to pay a commission to any person in consideration of that person subscribing or agreeing to subscribe (whether absolutely or conditionally) for any shares in the company, or procuring or agreeing to procure subscriptions (whether absolute or conditional) for any shares in the company, if the payment of the commission is authorised by the articles of association of the company.

(2) Nothing in subsection (1) affects the power of a company to pay such brokerage as has previously been lawful.

(3) A vendor to, or promoter of, or other person who receives payment in money or shares from a company has, and is deemed always to have had, power to apply any part of the money or shares so received in payment of any commission, the payment of which, if made directly by the company, would have been lawful under subsection (1).

Redemption and purchase of shares

37. (1) Subject to this section, a company limited by shares or limited by guarantee and having a share capital may, if authorised to do so by its articles of association, issue shares which are to be redeemed or are liable to be redeemed at the option of the company or the shareholder and, for the avoidance of doubt, it shall be lawful for the rights attaching to any shares to be varied, subject to the provisions of the company's articles of association, so as to provide that such shares are to be or are liable to be so redeemed.

(2) Subject to this section, a company limited by shares or limited by guarantee and having a share capital may, if authorised to do so by its articles of association, purchase its own shares, including any redeemable shares.

(3) (a) No share may be redeemed or purchased unless it is fully paid.

(b) A company may not redeem or purchase any of its shares if, as a result of the redemption or purchase, there would no longer be any issued shares of the company other than shares held as treasury shares.

(c) Redemption or purchase of shares may be effected in such manner and upon such terms as may be authorised by or pursuant to the company's articles of association.

(d) If the articles of association do not authorise the manner and terms of the purchase, a company shall not purchase any of its own shares unless the manner and terms of purchase have first been authorised by a resolution of the company.

(da) For the avoidance of doubt —

(i) a company's articles of association; or

(ii) a resolution of the company, may authorise the company's directors to determine the manner or any of the terms of, any such redemption or purchase not being inconsistent with such articles of association or resolution and subject to such restrictions (if any) as may be provided therein.

(e) The premium, if any, payable on redemption or purchase must have been provided for —

(i) out of either or both of the profits of the company or the company's share premium account, before or at the time the shares are redeemed or purchased; or

(ii) in the manner provided for in subsection (5).

(f) Shares may be redeemed or purchased out of profits of the company, out of the share premium account or out of the proceeds of a fresh issue of shares made for the purposes of the redemption or purchase or in the manner provided for in subsection (5).

(g) Subject to section 37A, shares redeemed or purchased under this section shall be treated as cancelled on redemption or purchase, and the amount of the company's issued share capital shall be diminished by the nominal value of those shares accordingly; but the redemption or purchase of shares by a company is not to be taken as reducing the amount of the company's authorised share capital.

(h) Without prejudice to paragraph (g), where a company is about to redeem or purchase shares, it has power to issue shares up to the nominal value of the shares to be redeemed or purchased as if those shares had never been issued:

Provided that where new shares are issued before the redemption or purchase of the old shares the new shares shall not, so far as relates to fees payable on or accompanying the filing of any return or list, be deemed to have been issued in pursuance of this subsection if the old shares are redeemed or purchased within one month after the issue of the new shares.

(4) (a) Where, under this section, shares of a company are redeemed or purchased wholly out of either or both of the company's profits or share premium account, the amount by which the company's issued share capital is diminished in accordance with paragraph (g) of subsection (3) on cancellation of the shares redeemed or purchased shall be transferred to a reserve called the "capital redemption reserve" and the share premium account or company's profits, as the case may be, shall be adjusted accordingly.

(b) If the shares are redeemed or purchased wholly or partly out of the proceeds of a fresh issue and the aggregate amount of those proceeds is less than the aggregate nominal value of the shares redeemed or purchased, the amount of the difference shall be transferred to the capital redemption reserve.

(c) Paragraph (b) does not apply if the proceeds of the fresh issue are applied by the company in making a redemption or purchase of its own shares in addition to a payment out of capital under subsection (5).

(d) The provisions of this Act relating to the reduction of a company's share capital apply as if the capital redemption reserve were paid-up share capital of the company, except that the reserve may be applied by the company in paying up its unissued shares to be allotted to members of the company as fully paid bonus shares.

(5) (a) Subject to this section, a company limited by shares or limited by guarantee and having a share capital may, if so authorised by its articles of association, make a payment in respect of the redemption or purchase of its own shares otherwise than out of its profits, share premium account, or the proceeds of a fresh issue of shares.

(b) References in subsections (6) to (9) to payment out of capital are, subject to paragraph (f), references to any payment so made, whether or not it would be regarded apart from this subsection as a payment out of capital.

(c) The amount of any payment which may be made by a company out of capital in respect of the redemption or purchase of its own shares is such an amount as, taken together with —

(i) any profits and share premium of the company being applied for purposes of the redemption or purchase; and

(ii) the proceeds of any fresh issue of shares made for the purpose of the redemption or purchase, is equal to the price of redemption or purchase, and the payment out of capital permitted under this paragraph is referred to in subsections (6) to (9) as the capital payment for the shares.

Nothing in this paragraph shall be taken to imply that a company shall be obliged to exhaust any profits and share premium before making any capital payment.

(d) Subject to paragraph (f), if the capital payment for shares redeemed or purchased and cancelled is less than their nominal amount, the amount of the difference shall be transferred to the company's capital redemption reserve.

(e) Subject to paragraph (f), if the capital payment is greater than the nominal amount of the shares redeemed or purchased the amount of any capital redemption reserve or fully paid share capital of the company may be reduced by a sum not exceeding, or by sums not in the aggregate exceeding, the amount by which the capital payment exceeds the nominal amount of the shares.

(f) Where the proceeds of a fresh issue are applied by a company in making any redemption or purchase of its own shares in addition to a payment out of capital under this subsection, the references in paragraphs (d) and (e) to the capital payment are to be read as referring to the aggregate of that payment and those proceeds.

(6) (a) A payment out of capital by a company for the redemption or purchase of its own shares is not lawful unless immediately following the date on which the payment out of capital is proposed to be made the company shall be able to pay its debts as they fall due in the ordinary course of business.

(b) The company and any director or manager thereof who knowingly and wilfully authorises or permits any payment out of capital to effect any redemption or purchase of any share in contravention of paragraph (a) commits an offence and is liable on summary conviction to a fine of fifteen thousand dollars and to imprisonment for five years.

(7) (a) Where a company is being wound up and, at the commencement of the winding up, any of its shares which are or are liable to be redeemed have not been redeemed or which the company has agreed to purchase have not been purchased, the terms of redemption or purchase may be enforced against the company, and when shares are redeemed or purchased under this subsection they shall be treated as cancelled.

Provided that this paragraph shall not apply if —

(i) the terms of redemption or purchase provided for the redemption or purchase to take place at a date later than the date of the commencement of the winding up; or

(ii) during the period beginning with the date on which the redemption or purchase was to have taken place and ending with the commencement of the winding up the company could not, at any time, have lawfully made a distribution equal in value to the price at which the shares were to have been redeemed or purchased.

(b) There shall be paid in priority to any amount which the company is liable by virtue of paragraph (a) to pay in respect of any shares —

(i) all other debts and liabilities of the company (other than any due to members in their character as such); and

(ii) if other shares carry rights whether as to capital or as to income which are preferred to the rights as to capital attaching to the first mentioned shares, any amount due in satisfaction of those preferred rights, but subject to that, any such amount shall be paid in priority to any amounts due to members in satisfaction of their rights (whether as to capital or income) as members.

(8) (a) Any redeemable preference shares issued by a company before the 18th day of January, 1988, are subject to redemption in accordance with this section.

(b) Any capital redemption reserve fund established by a company before the 18th day of January, 1988, is to be known as the company's capital redemption reserve and to be treated as if it had been established for the

238. (1) A member of a constituent company incorporated under this Act shall be entitled to payment of the fair value of that person's shares upon dissenting from a merger or consolidation.

(2) A member who desires to exercise that person's entitlement under subsection (1) shall give to the constituent company, before the vote on the merger or consolidation, written objection to the action.

(3) An objection under subsection (2) shall include a statement that the member proposes to demand payment for that person's shares if the merger or consolidation is authorised by the vote.

(4) Within twenty days immediately following the date on which the vote of members giving authorisation for the merger or consolidation is made, the constituent company shall give written notice of the authorisation to each member who made a written objection.

(5) A member who elects to dissent shall, within twenty days immediately following the date on which the notice referred to in subsection (4) is given, give to the constituent company a written notice of that person's decision to dissent, stating —

(a) that person's name and address;

(b) the number and classes of shares in respect of which that person dissents; and

(c) a demand for payment of the fair value of that person's shares.

(6) A member who dissents shall do so in respect of all shares that that person holds in the constituent company.

(7) Upon the giving of a notice of dissent under subsection (5), the member to whom the notice relates shall cease to have any of the rights of a member except the right to be paid the fair value of that person's shares and the rights referred to in subsections (12) and (16).

(8) Within seven days immediately following the date of the expiration of the period specified in subsection (5), or within seven days immediately following the date on which the plan of merger or consolidation is filed, whichever is later, the constituent company, the surviving company or the consolidated company shall make a written offer to each dissenting member to purchase that person's shares at a specified price that the company determines to be their fair value; and if, within thirty days immediately following the date on which the offer is made, the company making the offer and the dissenting member agree upon the price to be paid for that person's shares, the company shall pay to the member the amount in money forthwith.

(9) If the company and a dissenting member fail, within the period specified in subsection (8), to agree on the price to be paid for the shares owned by the member, within twenty days immediately following the date on which the period expires —

(a) the company shall (and any dissenting member may) file a petition with the Court for a determination of the fair value of the shares of all dissenting members; and

(b) the petition by the company shall be accompanied by a verified list containing the names and addresses of all members who have filed a notice under subsection (5) and with whom agreements as to the fair value of their shares have not been reached by the company.

(10) A copy of any petition filed under subsection (9)(a) shall be served on the other party; and where a dissenting member has so filed, the company shall within ten days after such service file the verified list referred to in subsection (9)(b).

(11) At the hearing of a petition, the Court shall determine the fair value of the shares of such dissenting members as it finds are involved, together with a fair rate of interest, if any, to be paid by the company upon the amount determined to be the fair value.

(12) Any member whose name appears on the list filed by the company under subsection (9)(b) or (10) and who the Court finds are involved may participate fully in all proceedings until the determination of fair value is reached.

(13) The order of the Court resulting from proceeding on the petition shall be enforceable in such manner as other orders of the Court are enforced, whether the company is incorporated under the laws of the Islands or not.

(14) The costs of the proceeding may be determined by the Court and taxed upon the parties as the Court deems equitable in the circumstances; and upon application of a member, the Court may order all or a portion of the expenses incurred by any member in connection with the proceeding, including reasonable attorneys' fees and the fees and expenses of experts, to be charged pro rata against the value of all the shares which are the subject of the proceeding.

(15) Shares acquired by the company pursuant to this section shall be cancelled and, if they are shares of a surviving company, they shall be available for re-issue.

(16) The enforcement by a member of that person's entitlement under this section shall exclude the enforcement by the member of any right to which that person might otherwise be entitled by virtue of that person holding shares, except that this section shall not exclude the right of the member to institute proceedings to obtain relief on the ground that the merger or consolidation is void or unlawful.

Limitation on rights of dissenters

239. (1) No rights under section 238 shall be available in respect of the shares of any class for which an open market exists on a recognised stock exchange or recognised interdealer quotation system at the expiry date of the period allowed for written notice of an election to dissent under section 238(5), but this section shall not apply if the holders thereof are required by the terms of a plan of merger or consolidation pursuant to section 233 or 237 to accept for such shares anything except —

(a) shares of a surviving or consolidated company, or depository receipts in respect thereof;

(b) shares of any other company, or depository receipts in respect thereof, which shares or depository receipts at the effective date of the merger or consolidation, are either listed on a national securities exchange or designated as a national market system security on a recognised interdealer quotation system or held of record by more than two thousand holders;

SCHEDULE 1

Table A

Regulations for Management of a Company Limited by Shares

Preliminary

1. (1) In these regulations —

"principal Act" means the Companies Act (2025 Revision).

(2) Where any provision of the principal Act is referred to, the reference is to that provision as modified by any law for the time being in force.

(3) Unless the context otherwise requires, expressions defined in the principal Act or any statutory modification thereof in force at the date at which these regulations become binding on the company, shall have the meanings so defined.

Shares

2. Subject to the provisions, if any, in that behalf of the memorandum of association, and without prejudice to any special rights previously conferred on the holders of existing shares, any share may be issued with such preferred, deferred or other special rights, or such restrictions, whether in regard to dividend, voting, return of share capital or otherwise as the company may, from time to time, by special resolution determine, and any preference share may, with the sanction of a special resolution, be issued on the terms that it is, or at the option of the company is liable, to be redeemed.

3. If, at any time, the share capital is divided into different classes of shares, the rights attached to any class (unless otherwise provided by the terms of issue of the shares of that class) may be varied with the consent in writing of the holders of seventy-five per cent of the issued shares of that class or with the sanction of a special resolution passed at a separate general meeting of the holders of the shares of the class. To every such separate general meeting the provisions of these regulations relating to general meetings shall, mutatis mutandis, apply, but so that the necessary quorum shall be two persons at least holding or representing by proxy one-third of the issued shares of the class and that any holder of shares of the class present in person or by proxy may demand a poll.

4. Every person whose name is entered as a member in the register of members shall, without payment, be entitled to a certificate of the company specifying the share or shares held by that person and the amount paid up thereon:

   Provided that in respect of a share or shares held jointly by several persons the company shall not be bound to issue more than one certificate, and delivery of a certificate for a share to one of several joint holders shall be sufficient delivery to all.

5. If a share certificate is defaced, lost or destroyed it may be renewed on payment of such fee, if any, not exceeding twenty cents and on such terms, if any, as to evidence and indemnity, as the directors think fit.

Lien

6. The company shall have a lien on every share (not being a fully paid share) for all moneys (whether presently payable or not) called or payable at a fixed time in respect of that share, and the company shall also have a lien on all shares (other than fully paid shares) standing registered in the name of a single person for all moneys presently payable by that person or that person's estate to the company; but the directors may, at any time, declare any share to be wholly or in part exempt from this regulation. The company's lien, if any, on a share shall extend to all dividends payable thereon.

7. The company may sell, in such manner as the directors think fit, any shares in which the company has a lien, but no sale shall be made unless some amount in respect of which the lien exists is presently payable nor until the expiration of fourteen days after a notice in writing, stating and demanding payment of such part of the amount in respect of which the lien exists as is presently payable, has been given to the registered holder for the time being of the share, or the persons entitled thereto by reason of that person's death or bankruptcy.

8. For giving effect to any such sale the directors may authorise some person to transfer the shares sold to the purchaser thereof. The purchaser shall be registered as the holder of the shares comprised in any such transfer and that person shall not be bound to see to the application of the purchase money, nor shall that person's title to the shares be affected by any irregularity or invalidity in the proceedings in reference to the sale.

9. The proceeds of the sale shall be received by the company and applied in payment of such part of the amount in respect of which the lien exists as is presently payable, and the residue shall (subject to a like lien for sums not presently payable as existed upon the shares prior to the sale) be paid to the person entitled to the shares at the date of the sale.

Calls on Shares

10. The directors may, from time to time, make calls upon the members in respect of any moneys unpaid on their shares provided that no call shall exceed twenty-five per cent of the nominal amount of the share, or be payable earlier than one month from the last call; and each member shall (subject to receiving at least fourteen days' notice specifying the time or times of payment) pay to the company at the time or times so specified the amount called on that person's shares.

11. The joint holders of a share shall be jointly and severally liable to pay calls in respect thereof.

12. If a sum called in respect of a share is not paid before or on the day appointed for payment thereof, the person from whom the sum is due shall pay interest upon the sum at the rate of six per cent per annum from the day appointed for the payment thereof to the time of the actual payment but the directors shall be at liberty to waive payment of that interest wholly or in part.

13. The provisions of these regulations as to the liability of joint holders and as to payment of interest shall apply in the case of non-payment of any sum which, by the terms of issue of a share, becomes payable at a fixed time, whether on account of the amount of the share, or by way of premium, as if the same had become payable by virtue of a call duly made and notified.

14. The directors may make arrangements on the issue of shares for a difference between the holders in the amount of calls to be paid and in the times of payment.

15. The directors may, if they think fit, receive from any member willing to advance the same all or any part of the moneys uncalled and unpaid upon any shares held by that person; and upon all or any of the moneys so advanced may (until the same would, but for such advance, become presently payable) pay interest at such rate (not exceeding, without the sanction of the company in general meeting, six per cent) as may be agreed upon between the member paying the sum in advance and the directors.

Transfer and Transmission of Shares

16. The instrument of transfer of any share shall be executed by or on behalf of the transferor and transferee, and the transferor shall be deemed to remain a holder of the share until the name of the transferee is entered in the register of members in respect thereof.

17. Shares shall be transferred in the following form, or in any usual or common form approved by the directors —

I, A.B., of in consideration of the sum of $ paid to me by C.D., of (hereinafter called "the said transferee") do hereby transfer to the said transferee the share (or shares) numbered in the undertaking called the Company Limited, to hold unto the said transferee, subject to the several conditions on which I hold the same; and I, the said transferee, do hereby agree to take the said share (or shares) subject to the conditions aforesaid.

As witnessed our hands the day of , 20 .

Witness to the signatures of, etc.

18. The directors may decline to register any transfer of shares, not being fully paid shares, to a person of whom they do not approve, and may also decline to register any transfer of shares on which the company has a lien. The directors may also suspend the registration of transfers during the fourteen days immediately preceding the ordinary general meeting in each year. The directors may decline to recognise any instrument of transfer unless —

(a) a fee not exceeding fifty cents is paid to the company in respect thereof; and

(b) the instrument of transfer is accompanied by the certificate of the shares to which it relates and such other evidence as the directors may reasonably require to show the right of the transferor to make the transfer:

Provided that if the directors refuse to register a transfer of any shares, they shall, within two months after the date on which the transfer was lodged with the company, send to the transferee notice of the refusal.

19. The legal personal representative of a deceased sole holder of a share shall be the only person recognised by the company as having any title to the share. In the case of a share registered in the names of two or more holders, the survivors, survivor or the legal personal representatives of the deceased survivor, shall be the only person recognised by the company as having any title to the share.

20. Any person becoming entitled to a share in consequence of the death or bankruptcy of a member shall, upon such evidence being produced as may from time to time be properly required by the directors, have the right either to be registered as a member in respect of the share or, instead of being registered, to make such transfer of the share as the deceased or bankrupt person could have made; but the directors shall, in either case, have the same right to decline or suspend registration as they would have had in the case of a transfer of the share by the deceased or bankrupt person before the death or bankruptcy.

21. A person becoming entitled to a share by reason of the death or bankruptcy of the holder shall be entitled to the same dividends and other advantages to which that person would be entitled if that person were the registered holder of the share, except that that person shall not, before being registered as a member in respect of the share, be entitled in respect of it to exercise any right conferred by membership in relation to meetings of the company.

Forfeiture of Shares

22. If a member fails to pay any call or instalment of a call on the day appointed for payment thereof, the directors may, at any time thereafter during such time as any part of such call or instalment remains unpaid, serve a notice on that person requiring payment of so much of the call or instalment as is unpaid, together with any interest which may have accrued.

23. Such notice shall name a further day (not earlier than the expiration of fourteen days from the date of the notice) on or before which the payment required by the notice is to be made, and shall state that, in the event of non-payment at or before the time appointed, the shares in respect of which the call was made will be liable to be forfeited.

24. If the requirements of such notice are not complied with, any share in respect of which the notice has been given may at any time thereafter, before the payment required by the notice has been made, be forfeited by a resolution of the directors to that effect.

25. A forfeited share may be sold or otherwise disposed of on such terms and in such manner as the directors think fit, and at any time before a sale or disposition the forfeiture may be cancelled on such terms as the directors think fit.

26. A person whose shares have been forfeited shall cease to be a member in respect of the forfeited shares, but shall, notwithstanding, remain liable to pay to the company all moneys which at the date of forfeiture were payable by that person to the company in respect of the shares, but that person's liability shall cease if and when the company receives payment in full of the nominal amount of the shares.

27. A statutory declaration in writing that the declarant is a director of the company, and that a share in the company has been duly forfeited on a date stated in the declaration, shall be conclusive evidence of the facts therein stated as against all persons claiming to be entitled to the share. The company may receive the consideration, if any, given for the share on any sale or disposition thereof and may execute a transfer of the share in favour of the person to whom the share is sold or disposed of and that person shall thereupon be registered as the holder of the share, and shall not be bound to see to the application of the purchase money, if any, nor shall that person's title to the share be affected by any irregularity or invalidity in the proceedings in reference to the forfeiture, sale or disposal of the share.

28. The provisions of these regulations as to forfeiture shall apply in the case of non-payment of any sum which by the terms of issue of a share becomes payable at a fixed time, whether on account of the amount of the share, or by way of premium, as if the same had been payable by virtue of a call duly made and notified.

29. The company may, by ordinary resolution, convert any paid-up shares into stock, and reconvert any stock into paid-up shares of any denomination.

30. The holders of stock may transfer the same, or any part thereof, in the same manner and subject to the same regulations as and subject to which the shares from which the stock arose might prior to conversion have been transferred, or as near thereto as circumstances admit; but the directors may, from time to time, fix the minimum amount of stock transferable and restrict or forbid the transfer of fractions of that minimum, but the minimum shall not exceed the nominal amount of the shares from which the stock arose.

31. The holders of stock shall, according to the amount of the stock held by them, have the same rights, privileges and advantages as regards dividends, voting at meetings of the company and other matters as if they held the shares from which the stock arose, but no such privilege or advantage (except participation in the dividends and profits of the company) shall be conferred by any such aliquot part of stock as would not, if existing shares, have conferred that privilege or advantage.

32. Such of the regulations of the company as are applicable to paid-up shares shall apply to stock, and the words "share" and "shareholder" therein shall include "stock" and "stockholder".

Alteration of Capital

33. The company may, from time to time by ordinary resolution, increase the share capital by such sum, to be divided into shares of such amount, as the resolution shall prescribe.

34. Subject to any direction to the contrary that may be given by the company in general meeting, all new shares shall, before issue, be offered to such persons as at the date of the offer are entitled to receive notices from the company of general meetings in proportion, as nearly as the circumstances admit, to the amount of the existing shares to which they are entitled. The offer shall be made by notice specifying the number of shares offered, and limiting a time within which the offer, if not accepted, will be deemed to be declined, and after the expiration of that time, or on receipt of an intimation from the person to whom the offer is made that that person declines to accept the shares offered, the directors may dispose of those shares in such manner as they think most beneficial to the company. The directors may likewise so dispose of any new shares which (by reason of the ratio which the new shares bear to shares held by persons entitled to an offer of new shares) cannot, in the opinion of the directors, be conveniently offered under this article.

35. The new shares shall be subject to the same provisions with reference to the payment of calls, lien, transfer, transmission, forfeiture and otherwise as the shares in the original share capital.

36. The company may, by ordinary resolution —

    (a) consolidate and divide all or any of its share capital into shares of larger amount than its existing shares;

(b) sub-divide its existing shares, or any of them, into shares of smaller amounts than is fixed by the memorandum of association, subject nevertheless to section 13 of the principal Act; and

(c) cancel any shares which, at the date of the passing of the resolution, have not been taken or agreed to be taken by any person.

37. The company may, by special resolution, reduce its share capital and any capital redemption reserve fund in any manner and with, and subject to, any incident authorised and consent required by law.

General Meetings

38. A general meeting shall be held once in every calendar year at such time (not being more than fifteen months after the holding of the last preceding general meeting) and place as may be resolved by the company in general meeting, or in default, at such time in the third month following that in which the anniversary of the company's incorporation occurs, and at such place as the directors shall appoint. In default of a general meeting being so held, a general meeting shall be held in the month next following, and may be convened by any two members in the same manner as nearly as possible as that in which meetings are to be convened by the directors.

39. Such general meetings shall be called ordinary general meetings; all other general meetings shall be called extraordinary general meetings.

40. The directors may, whenever they think fit, convene an extraordinary general meeting. If, at any time, there are not in the Island sufficient directors capable of acting to form a quorum, any director or any two members of the company may convene an extraordinary general meeting in the same manner as nearly as possible as that in which meetings may be convened by the directors.

Notice of General Meetings

41. Subject to section 60 of the principal Act relating to special resolutions, at least seven days' notice (exclusive of the day on which the notice is served or deemed to be served, but inclusive of the day for which notice is given) specifying the place, day and hour of meeting and, in case of special business, the general nature of that business shall be given in manner hereinafter provided, or in such other manner, if any, as may be prescribed by the company in general meetings, to such persons as are, under the regulations of the company, entitled to receive such notices from the company; but with the consent of all the members entitled to receive notice of some particular meeting, that meeting may be convened by such shorter notice and in such manner as those members may think fit.

42. The accidental omission to give notice of a meeting to, or the non-receipt of a notice of a meeting by any member shall not invalidate the proceedings at any meeting.

Proceedings at General Meetings

43. All business shall be deemed special that is transacted at any extraordinary meeting, and also all that is transacted at an ordinary meeting, with the exception of sanctioning a dividend, consideration of the accounts, balance sheets and the ordinary report of the directors and auditors, election of directors and other officers in the place of those retiring by rotation, and fixing of the remuneration of the auditors.

44. No business shall be transacted at any general meeting unless a quorum of members is present at the time when the meeting proceeds to business; save as herein otherwise provided, three members personally present shall be a quorum.

45. If, within half an hour from the time appointed for the meeting, a quorum is not present, the meeting, if convened upon the requisition of members, shall be dissolved; in any other case it shall stand adjourned to the same day in the next week, at the same time and place, and if at the adjourned meeting a quorum is not present within half an hour from the time appointed for the meeting the members present shall be a quorum.

46. The chairperson, if any, of the board of directors shall preside as chairperson at every general meeting of the company.

47. If there is no such chairperson, or if at any meeting that person is not present within fifteen minutes after the time appointed for holding the meeting or is unwilling to act as chairperson, the members present shall choose one of their number to be chairperson.

48. The chairperson may, with the consent of any meeting at which a quorum is present (and shall if so directed by the meeting), adjourn the meeting from time to time and from place to place, but no business shall be transacted at any adjourned meeting other than the business left unfinished at the meeting from which the adjournment took place. When a meeting is adjourned for ten days or more, notice of the adjourned meeting shall be given as in the case of an original meeting. Save as aforesaid it shall not be necessary to give any notice of an adjournment or of the business to be transacted at an adjourned meeting.

49. At any general meeting a resolution put to the vote of the meeting shall be decided on a show of hands, unless a poll is (before or on the declaration of the result of the show of hands) demanded by at least three members present in person or by proxy entitled to vote or by one member or two members together holding not less than fifteen per cent of the paid up capital of the company, and, unless a poll is so demanded, a declaration by the chairperson that a resolution has, on a show of hands, been carried, carried unanimously, carried by a particular majority or lost, and an entry to that effect in the book of the proceedings of the company, shall be conclusive evidence of the fact without proof of the number or proportion of the votes recorded in favour of, or against, that resolution.

50. If a poll is duly demanded it shall be taken in such manner as the chairperson directs, and the result of the poll shall be deemed to be the resolution of the meeting at which the poll was demanded.

51. In the case of an equality of votes, whether on a show of hands or on a poll, the chairperson of the meeting at which the poll is demanded shall be entitled to a second or casting vote.

52. A poll demanded on the election of a chairperson or on a question of adjournment shall be taken forthwith; a poll demanded on any other question shall be taken at such time as the chairperson of the meeting directs.

Votes of Members

53. On a show of hands every member present in person shall have one vote. On a poll every member shall have one vote for each share of which that person is the holder.

54. In the case of joint holders the vote of the senior who tenders a vote, whether in person or by proxy, shall be accepted to the exclusion of the votes of the other joint holders, and for this purpose seniority shall be determined by the order in which the names stand in the register of members.

55. A member of unsound mind, or in respect of whom an order has been made by any court having jurisdiction in lunacy, may vote, whether on a show of hands or on a poll, by that person's committee or other person in the nature of a committee appointed by that court, and any such committee or other person may, on a poll, vote by proxy.

56. No member shall be entitled to vote at any general meeting unless all calls or other sums presently payable by that person in respect of shares in the company have been paid.

57. On a poll votes may be given either personally or by proxy.

58. The instrument appointing a proxy shall be in writing under the hand of the appointor or that person's attorney duly authorised in writing or, if the appointor is a corporation, either under seal or under the hand of an officer or attorney duly authorised. A proxy need not be a member of the company.

59. The instrument appointing a proxy and the power of attorney or other authority, if any, under which it is signed, or a notarially certified copy of that power or authority shall be deposited at the registered office of the company not less than forty-eight hours before the time for holding the meeting or adjourned meeting at which the person named in the instrument proposes to vote, and in default the instrument of proxy shall not be treated as valid.

60. An instrument appointing a proxy may be in the following form or any other form approved by the directors —

Company Limited

I, , of being a member of the Company Limited hereby appoint of as my proxy, to vote for me and on my behalf at the (ordinary or extraordinary, as the case may be) general meeting of the company to be held on the day of , 20 , and at any adjournment thereof.

Signed this day of , 20 .

61. The instrument appointing a proxy shall be deemed to confer authority to demand or join in demanding a poll.

Corporations Acting by Representatives at Meetings

62. Any corporation which is a member of the company may, by resolution of its directors or other governing body, authorise such person as it thinks fit to act as its representative at any meeting of the company or of any class of members of the company, and the person so authorised shall be entitled to exercise the same powers on behalf of the corporation which that person represents as that corporation could exercise if it were an individual member of the company.

Directors

63. The number of the directors and the names of the first directors shall be determined in writing by a majority of the subscribers of the memorandum of association.

64. The remuneration of the directors shall, from time to time, be determined by the company in general meeting.

65. The qualification of a director shall be the holding of at least one share in the company.

Powers and Duties of Directors

66. The business of the company shall be managed by the directors, who may pay all expenses incurred in setting up and registering the company and may exercise all such powers of the company as are not, by the principal Act or these articles, required to be exercised by the company in general meeting, subject nevertheless, to any regulation of these articles, to the principal Act and to such regulations, being not inconsistent with the aforesaid regulations or principal Act, as may be prescribed by the company in general meeting; but no regulation made by the company in general meeting shall invalidate any prior act of the directors which would have been valid if that regulation had not been made.

67. The directors may, from time to time, appoint one or more of their body to the office of managing director or manager for such term and at such remuneration (whether by way of salary, commission or participation in profits, or partly in one way and partly in another) as they may think fit and a director so appointed shall not, while holding that office, be subject to retirement by rotation, or taken into account in determining the rotation or retirement of directors; but that person's appointment shall be subject to determination ipso facto if that person ceases from any cause to be a director, or if the company in general meeting resolves that that person's tenure of the office of managing director or manager be determined.

68. The amount for the time being remaining undischarged of moneys borrowed or raised by the directors for the purposes of the company (otherwise than by the issue of share capital) shall not, at any time, exceed the issued share capital of the company without the sanction of the company in general meeting.

69. The directors shall cause minutes to be made in books provided for the purpose —

(a) of all appointments of officers made by the directors;

(b) of the names of the directors present at each meeting of the directors and of any committee of the directors; and

(c) of all resolutions and proceedings at all meetings of the company, and of the directors and of committees of directors, and every director present at any meeting of directors or committee of directors shall sign that person's name in a book to be kept for that purpose.

The Seal

70. Any seal of the company shall not be affixed to any instrument except by the authority of a resolution of a board of directors, and in the presence of a director and of the secretary or such other person as the directors may appoint for the purpose; and that director and the secretary or other person as aforesaid shall sign every instrument to which any seal of the company is so affixed in their presence.

Disqualification of Directors

71. The office of director shall be vacated, if the director —

(a) without the consent of the company in general meeting holds any other office of profit under the company except that of managing director or manager;

(b) becomes bankrupt;

(c) is found to be or becomes of unsound mind;

(d) resigns that person's office by notice in writing to the company; or

(e) is directly or indirectly interested in any contract with the company or participates in the profits of any contract with the company:

Provided however, that a director shall not vacate that person's office by reason of that person being a member of any corporation which has entered into contract with or done any work for the company if that person has declared the nature of that person's interest at the first meeting of the directors of the company held after that person became interested in the contract, but the director shall not vote in respect of any such contract or work or any matter arising thereout, and if that person does so vote that person's vote shall not be counted.

Rotation of Directors

72. At the first ordinary general meeting of the company the whole of the directors shall retire from office, and at the ordinary general meeting in every subsequent year one-third of the directors for the time being, or, if their number is not three or a multiple of three, then the number nearest one-third, shall retire from office.

73. The directors to retire in every year shall be those who have been longest in office since their last election but as between persons who became directors on the same day those to retire shall (unless they otherwise agree among themselves) be determined by lot.

74. A retiring director shall be eligible for re-election.

75. The company at the general meeting at which a director retires in manner aforesaid may fill the vacated office by electing a person thereto and in default the retiring director shall be deemed to have been re-elected unless at such meeting it is resolved not to fill such vacated office.

76. The company may, from time to time in general meeting, increase or reduce the number of directors, and may also determine in what rotation the increased or reduced number is to go out of office.

77. Any casual vacancy occurring in the board of directors may be filled by the directors, but the person so chosen shall be subject to retirement at the same time as if that person had become a director on the day on which the director in whose place that person is appointed was last elected a director.

78. The directors shall have power, at any time and from time to time, to appoint a person as an additional director, who shall retire from office at the next following ordinary general meeting, but shall be eligible for election by the company at that meeting as an additional director.

79. The company may, by special resolution, remove a director before the expiration of that person's period in office, and may, by an ordinary resolution, appoint another person in that person's stead. The person so appointed shall be subject to retirement at the same time as if that person had become a director on the day on which the director in whose place that person is appointed was last elected a director.

Proceedings of Directors

80. The directors may meet together for the despatch of business, adjourn and otherwise regulate their meetings, as they think fit. Questions arising at any meeting shall be decided by a majority of votes. In case of an equality of votes the chairperson shall have a second or casting vote. A director may, and the secretary on the requisition of a director shall, at any time, summon a meeting of the directors.

81. The quorum necessary for the transaction of the business of the directors may be fixed by the directors, and unless so fixed shall, when the number of directors exceeds three, be three, and when the number of directors does not exceed three, be two.

82. The continuing directors may act notwithstanding any vacancy in their body, but, if and so long as their number is reduced below the number fixed by or pursuant to the regulations of the company as the necessary quorum of directors, the continuing directors may act for the purpose of increasing the number of directors to that number, or of summoning a general meeting of the company, but for no other purpose.

83. The directors may elect a chairperson of their meetings and determine the period for which that person is to hold office; but if no such chairperson is elected, or if at any meeting the chairperson is not present within five minutes after the time appointed for holding the same, the directors present may choose one of their number to be chairperson of the meeting.

84. The directors may delegate any of their powers to committees consisting of such member or members of their body as they think fit; any committee so formed shall, in the exercise of the powers so delegated, conform to any regulations that may be imposed on it by the directors.

85. A committee may elect a chairperson of its meetings; if no such chairperson is elected, or if at any meeting the chairperson is not present within five minutes after the time appointed for holding the same, the members present may choose one of their number to be chairperson of the meeting.

86. A committee may meet and adjourn as it thinks proper. Questions arising at any meeting shall be determined by a majority of votes of the members present and, in case of an equality of votes, the chairperson shall have a second or casting vote.

87. All acts done by any meeting of the directors or of a committee of directors, or by any person acting as a director, shall, notwithstanding that it be afterwards discovered that there was some defect in the appointment of any such director or person acting as aforesaid, or that they or any of them were disqualified, be as valid as if every such person had been duly appointed and was qualified to be a director.

Dividends and Reserve

88. The company in general meeting may declare dividends, but no dividend shall exceed the amount recommended by directors.

89. The directors may, from time to time, pay to the members such interim dividends as appear to the directors to be justified by the profits of the company.

90. No dividends shall be paid otherwise than out of profits.

91. Subject to the rights of persons, if any, entitled to shares with special rights as to dividends, all dividends shall be declared and paid according to the amounts paid on the shares, but if and so long as nothing is paid up on any of the shares in the company, dividends may be declared and paid according to the amounts of the shares. No amount paid on a share in advance of calls shall, while carrying interest, be treated for the purposes of this article as paid on the share.

92. The directors may, before recommending any dividend, set aside out of the profits of the company such sums as they think proper as a reserve or reserves which shall, at the discretion of the directors, be applicable for meeting contingencies or for equalising dividends or for any other purpose to which the profits of the company may be properly applied, and pending such application may, at the like discretion, either be employed in the business of the company or be invested in such investments (other than shares of the company) as the directors may, from time to time, think fit.

93. If several persons are registered as joint holders of any share, any of them may give effectual receipts for any dividend or other moneys payable on or in respect of the share.

94. Any dividend may be paid by cheque or warrant sent through the post to the registered address of the member or person entitled thereto or in the case of joint holders to any one of such joint holders at that person's registered address or to such person and such address as the member or person entitled or such joint holders, as the case may be, may direct. Every such cheque or warrant shall be made payable to the order of the person to whom it is sent or to the order of such other person as the member or person entitled or such joint holders, as the case may be, may direct.

95. No dividend shall bear interest against the company.

Accounts

96. The directors shall cause proper books of account to be kept with respect to —

    (a) all sums of money received and expended by the company, and the matters in respect of which the receipt and expenditure takes place; and

    (b) all sales and purchases of goods by the company and the assets and liabilities of the company.

97. The books of account shall be kept at the registered office of the company, or at such other place or places as the directors think fit, and shall always be open to the inspection of the directors.

98. The directors shall, from time to time, determine whether and to what extent, at what times and places and under what conditions or regulations the accounts and books of the company or any of them shall be open to the inspection of members not being directors, and no member (not being a director) shall have any right of inspecting any account, book or document of the company except as conferred by law or authorised by the directors or by the company in general meeting.

99. At the ordinary general meeting in every year the directors shall cause to be prepared and shall lay before the company a profit and loss account and a balance sheet for the period since the preceding account or, (in the case of the first ordinary general meeting) since the commencement of business by the company, made up to a date not more than six months before such meeting.

100. A copy of every balance sheet (including every document required by law to be annexed thereto) which is to be laid before the company in general meeting together with a copy of the auditor's report shall, not less than seven days before the date of the meeting, be sent to all persons entitled to receive notices of general meetings of the company.

Audit

101. The accounts relating to the company's affairs shall be audited in such manner as may be determined from time to time by the company in general meeting or, failing any such determination, by the directors.

Notices

102. (1) A notice may be given by the company to any member either personally or by sending it by post to that person to that person's registered address, or (if that person has no registered address in the Islands) to the address, if any, in the Islands supplied by that person to the company for the giving of notices to that person.

(2) Where a notice is sent by post, service of the notice shall be deemed to be effected by properly addressing, prepaying and posting a letter containing the notice, and to have been effected in the case of a notice of a meeting at the expiration of twenty-four hours after the letter containing the same is posted, and in any other case at the time at which the letter would be delivered in the ordinary course of post.

103. If a member has no registered address in the Islands and has not supplied to the company an address in the Islands for the giving of notices to that person, a notice addressed to that person and advertised in a daily newspaper circulating in the Islands shall be deemed to be duly given on that person at noon on the day following the day on which the newspaper is circulated and the advertisement appeared therein.

104. A notice may be given by the company to the joint holders of a share by giving the notice to the joint holder named first in the register of members in respect of the share.

105. A notice may be given by the company to the persons entitled to a share in consequence of the death or bankruptcy of a member by sending it through the post in a prepaid envelope addressed to them by name, by the title of representatives of the deceased or trustee of the bankrupt or by any like description, at the address, if any, within the Islands, supplied for the purpose by the persons claiming to be so entitled, or (until such an address has been so supplied), by giving the notice in any manner in which the same might have been given if the death or bankruptcy had not occurred.

106. Notice of every general meeting shall be given in some manner hereinbefore authorised to —

(a) every member except those members who (having no registered address in the Islands) have not supplied to the company an address in the Islands for the giving of notices to them; and

(b) every person entitled to a share in consequence of the death or bankruptcy of a member who, but for that person's death or bankruptcy, would be entitled to receive notice of the meeting.

No other person shall be entitled to receive notices of general meetings.

JUDGMENT

Field JA

Introduction

1. This is an appeal from the order of Justice Doyle ("the judge") dated 13 June 2022 winding up the appellant exempted limited partnership ("ALP") on the just and equitable basis on four separate grounds. The order was preceded by a judgment dated 10 June 2022 ("the Judgment").

2. ALP was formed on 16 February 2017 under the Exempted Limited Partnership Act ("the ELPA"). The petitioner seeking the winding up order was the respondent Dr Xiaohu Fan ("Dr Fan") who became a limited partner in ALP having executed on 25 May 2017 a subscription agreement ("the Subscription Agreement), an Amended and Restated Limited Partnership Agreement ("the LPA") and an acknowledgement agreement ("the Acknowledgement"). The judge referred to this suite of agreements as "the 2017 Agreement" and I shall do likewise.

3. The sole asset owned by ALP was and remains its holding of 30,320,000 ordinary shares of US$0.0001 each in Legend Biotech Corporation ("Legend Cayman"), a Cayman Islands exempted limited company listed on NASDAQ. This holding represented 15.6% of Legend Cayman's issued shares in 2017.

4. Legend Cayman is the parent company in a group of companies ("the Legend Group") which carry on business developing novel cell therapies for oncology. The Legend Group's principal operations and employees are located in Nanjing and Zhenjiang in the PRC.

5. At all material times the general partner of ALP ("the GP") was and remains GenScript Corporation ("GenScript"), a Delaware corporation registered in the Cayman Islands under Part IX of the Companies Act. From the start, Genscript was and remains under the control of its majority shareholder, Dr Fangliang Zhang ("Dr Zhang").

6. In addition to Dr Fan, the other limited partners of ALP are the Ye Wang Family Trust and GenScript. The respective percentage shares of the three limited partners in ALP's sole asset are 65.96%, 32.98% and 1.06%. The interest held by the Ye Wang Family Trust is the result of a transfer by Ms Ye Wang of her original interest of 32.98%. Dr Fan's 65.96% interest equates to 19,999,072 ordinary shares in Legend Cayman.

7. It was in July 2002 that Dr Zhang, Dr Larry Wang and Ms Ye Wang ("Ms Wang") founded the GenScript Group of companies which subsequently became subsidiaries of Legend Cayman. In 2014 the GenScript Group decided to form a subsidiary company named "Legend" to develop novel biological drugs and they invited Dr Fan, who was working within the GenScript Group doing important research on cell therapy, immunology and cell biology, to be involved in this venture. Dr Fan accepted the invitation and was appointed Chief Scientific Officer of the new project.

8. In November 2014, GenScript incorporated Nanjing Legend Biotechnology Co Ltd ("Legend Nanjing") in the PRC with a view to it issuing an IPO. In order to incentivise Dr Fan, Legend Nanjing, acting by Dr Zhang, entered into an agreement with him dated 1 January 2016 ("the 2016 Agreement") under which Legend Nanjing agreed to grant Dr Fan a 10% holding of the shares in Legend Nanjing (10,000,000 shares) on terms that he pay RMB 100,000 annually for five years and that, prior to Legend Nanjing's IPO, he could not transfer these shares or create any security interest over them without Legend Nanjing's approval.

9. Since late 2014, Dr Fan had been significantly involved in critical developments of a number of therapies for the treatment of myeloma. In March 2016, he was responsible for the invention of citacabtageneautoleucel (Cilta-cel), a ground-breaking investigational B-cell maturation antigen directed chimeric antigen receptor T cell (CAR-T) therapy.

10. Subsequently, it was decided that instead of proceeding with an IPO by Legend Nanjing, the listing vehicle should be Legend Cayman which would proceed with an IPO on NASDAQ. In conjunction with this change of strategy, Dr Zhang set out to persuade Dr Fan: (a) to enter into an arrangement based on the establishment of a Cayman Islands exempted limited partnership ("ELP") which would hold approximately 15% of Legend Cayman's shares and whose limited partners would be Dr Fan, Ms Wang and GenScript; and (b) to accept that the 2016 Agreement would terminate when he became a limited partner in the ELP.

11. The implementation of Dr Zhang's plan to persuade Dr Fan to become a limited partner in a Cayman ELP began around mid to late July 2016. (Earlier, on 7 June 2016, Ms Wang had sent Dr Fan a draft agreement in Chinese for the establishment of an PRC partnership but nothing came of this). By mid to late July 2016, there had been good progress in the first dosing of Cilta-cel. The persuasion of Dr Fan was largely delegated to Ms Wang, who was a director of GenScript, acting on Dr Zhang's instructions, although Dr Zhang also played a direct role. Thus, it was Ms Wang who sent to Dr Fan the developing and the final versions of the LPA for signature and the Subscription Agreement and the Acknowledgement by which Dr Fan acknowledged that the 2016 Agreement contained only "general provisions and principles" and would terminate upon his becoming a limited partner in ALP. It was principally Ms Wang, reflecting the views of Dr Zhang, who dealt with Dr Fan's questions and comments on the documents she sent him.

12. When Dr Fan was approached with Dr Zhang's new strategy, his chief concern was that he should still be entitled after the IPO to be registered as the owner of 10% of the shares in the listing entity, as he had been under the 2016 Agreement in respect of 10% of the shares in Legend Nanjing. He made this very clear on several occasions to Ms Wang and Dr Zhang who both assured him that the 2016 Agreement would be "rolled over" into the arrangement involving a Cayman ELP. Dr Fan relied on these assurances when signing the 2017 Agreement: he would not have signed the constituent agreements if the assurances had not been given. His interest in the partnership under the 2017 Agreement was the equivalent of 10% of the shares in Legend Cayman which was the same percentage he was promised in respect of the shares in Legend Nanjing. In the light of these matters the judge held that Dr Fan had a legitimate expectation and reasonable understanding that 6 months after the Legend Cayman IPO he would be entitled to have access to 10% of the shares in Legend Cayman[1].

13. Legend Cayman was listed on NASDAQ on 5 June 2020, at which time GenScript and Dr Zhang owned 169,680,000 and 34,234,267 Legend Cayman shares respectively, which holdings constituted 76.9% and 15.2% of the company's issued share capital.

14. On 12 October 2017, Dr Fan paid RMB 2,500,000 in respect of the 10% of the Legend Cayman shares he had been assured would be registered in his name and available for disposition six months after the Legend Cayman IPO. He was then reimbursed RMB 2 million over a four-year period. RMB 2,500,000 was the sum that was payable under the 2016 Agreement.

15. Following the end of the 6 month lock in period, Dr Fan informed Ms Wang and Dr Zhang that he wanted access to 10% of the Legend Cayman shares held by ALP. He first suggested that ALP be dissolved to achieve this and was invited to serve a written request that his Legend Cayman shares be sold subject to the GP exercising its discretion accordingly. He then proposed that 2 million Legend Cayman ADS shares (equivalent to 20 million ordinary shares) be sold as an interim measure whilst the differences between him and Dr Zhang and Ms Wang were sorted out. At a meeting on 26 February 2021, Dr Zhang refused Dr Fan's sales plan, mentioning that maybe Dr Fan would be able to sell about 30,000 Legend Cayman

[1] It was a term of the Legend Cayman IPO that the shares in Legend Cayman were to be the subject of a 6 month lock up period.

ADS shares raising about US$ 1 million, which would have meant that it would have taken over 300 years for Dr Fan's total shares to be sold. Dr Zhang's declared reason for this response was that the company needed to raise funds and Dr Fan's sales plan would "crash the stock price". Dr Fan then asked Dr Zhang on 5 March 2021 for an offer to allow the sale of a reasonable amount of his shares to which Dr Zhang responded the same day, stating that the Legend Cayman management team and board were only prepared to sell 200,000 ADS shares producing around $US 4.5 million and this was a final offer. This offer Dr Fan accepted, but no steps were taken by the GP to implement it. Instead, Dr Zhang let Dr Fan know that he had been instructed not to sell the shares. Following a chasing letter from Dr Fan's attorneys, Travers Thorp Alberga ("TTA"), ALP's then attorneys, Dentons, stated in a letter dated 21 May 2021 that Dr Fan had not adopted the correct methodology for attempting to transfer his interest in the partnership and added that he could not be allowed to sell 10% of the Legend Cayman shares on account of the impact this would have on the share price. Five days later, by a letter dated 26 May 2021, Dentons, on behalf of ALP, offered to release 5% of the Legend Cayman shares held under Dr Fan's interest in the partnership followed by 3.5% every year thereafter but Dr Fan rejected this offer.

16. The winding up petition was due to come on for trial on 17 September 2021 but the hearing was adjourned at very short notice to accommodate an application by ALP for the petition to be struck out on the ground that it was an abuse of the process. That application was dismissed with detailed reasons by the judge on 26 October 2021 ("the strike out judgment") and on the same day Dr Fan served an Amended Petition that began to be heard on 26 January 2022. However, at the end of the first day, the GP applied for another adjournment, this time because its Cayman Islands' registration as a foreign company had been terminated on the grounds that it had failed to maintain a registered office and its registration in the Cayman Islands. The application was granted with indemnity costs against the GP and the hearing of the Amended Petition re-commenced on 20 April 2022, over six months after the date it had first came on for trial before the Grand Court.

17. On 11 March 2022, Dr Fan resigned from his position in Legend Cayman shortly after learning that he was no longer described on the company's website as a "Co-Founder" of the company.

The judgment below

The judge's four distinct grounds for winding up ALP

18. The distinct grounds that the judge found justified an order for the winding up of ALP on just and equitable grounds were:

(1) Frustration of Dr Fan's legitimate expectation that the GP would transfer 10% of the shares in Legend Cayman shares into his name as the beneficial owner thereof: see para [167] of the Judgment:

> "Dr Fan had a legitimate and reasonable understanding outside the 2017 Agreement. The legitimate expectations and reasonable understanding was that 6 months after the IPO he would be entitled to have access to 10% of the shares in Legend Cayman. The legitimate expectation and understanding was created and encouraged by Dr Zhang and Ms Wang on Dr Zhang's behalf. The legitimate expectation and understanding has been unreasonably frustrated by the Partnership, the GP and Dr Zhang".

(2) Irretrievable breakdown in the relationship between Dr Fan and Dr Zhang that had begun as one of mutual trust and confidence.

Paras [182] – [184] of the Judgment read:

> "It is plain to me that at the early stage when Dr Fan joined up with Dr Zhang that their relationship was one of mutual trust and confidence but that relationship has now irretrievably broken down and, on an objective analysis, Dr Fan has lost trust and confidence in Dr Zhang, the GP and the Partnership. Dr Fan's relatively recent resignation was not, in my judgment, a tactical ploy. It is plain that Dr Fan could not work in the environment created by Dr Zhang. Dr Zhang has attempted to belittle Dr Fan's role and contribution. Dr Zhang has preferred his own interests over the interests of Dr Fan. The GP, for reasons best known to itself, filed evidence that made reference to Dr Fan and an insider dealing incident. It had no relevance to the issues before the court for determination. It was not referred to in the comprehensive legal submissions before the court but the filing of it is a further indication of the lack of trust and confidence between the parties". [182]

"The GP agreed via Dr Zhang's communication of 5 March 2021 to permit 200,000 shares to be sold, but then reneged even on this meagre offering. There is significant hostility and lack of trust between the parties. Dr Fan has now resigned. That must have been a very difficult decision for him. Mutual trust and confidence no longer exists. This situation cannot continue indefinitely. The Partnership and the GP have already dragged these proceedings out for far too long". [183]
"This is not a case of a dissatisfied investor, having been treated fairly, simply wanting an early exit and a return on his investment outwith the terms of the agreements he signed up to and the relevant constitutional documents. In my judgment there is plainly "something more" in this case and fairness requires equitable considerations to trump the strict rights and obligations of the parties pursuant to the contractual and constitutional documents". [184]

(3) The justifiable loss of trust and confidence in the management of the Partnership judged to the requisite objective standards in the circumstances of this case.

See para [166] and para [10(12)] of the judge's judgment refusing ALP's application to strike out the winding up petition ("the strike out judgment") referred to in the Judgment at [158]:

"Dr Fan has proved a justifiable loss of trust and confidence in the management of the Partnership by the GP judged to the requisite objective standards in the circumstances of this case. Moreover, in my judgment the affairs of the Partnership have been conducted by the GP (with Dr Zhang being in the driving seat in that respect] in a manner which is oppressive and in breach of Dr Fan's legitimate expectation and understanding." [166]

"It is well established that a company can be wound up on the just an equitable ground if it is established that there has been a justifiable loss of confidence in management, for example, on account of serious misconduct or serious mismanagement of the affairs of the company by the management or the majority owners (paragraph 22 Martin JA in Tianrui). For a loss of confidence ground to succeed it has to be a justifiable loss of confidence in the conduct and management of the company's affairs and not a subjective loss of confidence arising from dissatisfaction about the conduct of the domestic policy of the company (RCB Thai v Asia Fund 1996 CILR 9 at pages 22-23 per Smellie J, as he then was). This loss or lack of confidence must be grounded on the conduct of management, not in regard to their private lives or affairs, but in regard to the company's business; lack of probity in the conduct of the companies affairs may make it just and equitable that the company be wound up (Lord Shaw, in the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in Loch v Blackwood Ltd [1924] AC 783 at 788." [10 (12)]

(4) The GP's conflict of interest and breach of the fiduciary duty to act in good faith.

See [171] – [179], especially [171] and [179] of the Judgment which read:

> "There is considerable strength in Dr Fan's point that the GP has been acting in breach of its fiduciary duties in particular its duty to act in good faith and in the best interests of the Partnership. Dr Zhang is in control of the GP. Dr Zhang is hopelessly conflicted. He is the beneficial owner of shares in Legend Cayman. He also has control of the Partnership's shares in Legend Cayman. The GP (through the actions of Dr Zhang) is not acting in the best interests of the Partnership. The clearest example of this is the GP's approach when it receives a request from Dr Fan for his portion of the shares to be transferred to him. A general partner acting in good faith and in the best interests of the Partnership would primarily have regard to the position of the limited partners and yet remarkably there is no evidence of the GP consulting Ms Wang and seeking her views. I also note that Ms Wang as a limited partner has not opposed the making of a winding up order". [171]
> "The conflicted position of the GP (under the control of Dr Zhang) and its preference of the interests of Dr Zhang, Legend Cayman and the Legend Biotech group as a whole over and above the interests of Dr Fan a limited partner (holding almost 70%) persuades me that the position of the GP is unsustainable and the Partnership must be brought to an end in the best interests of the limited partners. Dr Fan applies for a winding up order and this has not been opposed by Ms Wang, the only other limited partner". [179]

19. In respect of all four of the above grounds for winding up ALP, the judge held that there was no reasonable alternative remedy to a winding up order. In his view, Dr Fan was entitled to the shares represented by his interest in the limited partnership and only a winding up order would give him his shares.

Jurisdiction

20. Referring to the decisions of Parker J in Padma Fund LP (unreported FSD judgment 8 October 2021 and Kawaley J in Formation Group (Cayman) Fund I (unreported FSD judgment 21 April 2022)[2], the judge noted that there is an unresolved issue as to whether the jurisdiction of the Court to hear a petition presented by a limited partner to wind up a limited partnership on just and equitable grounds is derived from section 35 of the Partnership Act, pursuant to section 3 of the ELPA, and/or Part V of the Companies Act pursuant to section 36 (3) of the ELPA. In light of the fact that it was common ground that the Court had jurisdiction under one or other or both of those statutory provisions, the judge decided it was unnecessary to pronounce on the issue, observing that "it may require a judgment of the Court of Appeal or the Privy Council or legislation to finally determine and put these knotty jurisdictional issue to bed".

21. For my part, I would have been disposed to this Court deciding the issue if we had received written and oral submissions on the point. However, perhaps unsurprisingly, neither side advanced any submissions before us on the point and in these circumstances it would plainly be inappropriate to decide the question.

The legal principles relied on by the judge

22. The judge proceeded on the basis[3] that the success of Dr Fan's winding up petition depended on its factual basis being within the reach of those situations where the context was not an out and out conventional partnership but was sufficiently akin to that relationship in accordance with the indicia identified by Lord Wilberforce in Ebrahimi v Westbourne Galleries [1973] AC 360 to justify a winding up on just and equitable grounds.

23. It will be recalled that in Ebrahimi, the appellant Mr Shokrollah Ebrahimi and Mr Asher Nazar had carried on the business as dealers in Persian carpets as partners equally sharing management and profits for a number of years. In 1945, however, the business was taken over by the respondent company with Mr Ebrahami and Mr Asher Nazar each becoming directors and holding 500 shares. Soon after the formation of the company, Mr Asher Nazar's son, George Nazar, was appointed a director and Mr Ebrahimi and Mr Asher Nazar each transferred to him 100 shares. The profits of the company were distributed as directors' remuneration. About ten years later, the Nazars, father and son, secured the passing of an ordinary resolution effective by virtue of section 184 of the Companies Act 1948 ("the 1948 Act") removing Mr Ebrahami from the office of director. Mr Ebrahami presented a petition under section 222 (f) of the 1948 Act that the company be wound up on the ground that it was just and equitable so to do.

24. Although they have frequently been cited in numerous subsequent cases I think it appropriate to set out the key passages in Lord Wilberforce's judgment that followed his review of numerous English, Scottish and some Commonwealth decisions.

[3] See [10 (11)] and [10 (12) of the strike out judgment referred to in [158] of the Judgment.

"My Lords, in my opinion these authorities represent a sound and rational development of the law which should be endorsed. The foundation of it all lies in the words " just and equitable " and, if there is any respect in which some of the cases may be open to criticism, it is that the courts may sometimes have been too timorous in giving them full force. The words are a recognition of the fact that a limited company is more than a mere legal entity, with a personality in law of its own: that there is room in company law for recognition of the fact that behind it, or amongst it, there are individuals, with rights, expectations and obligations inter se which are not necessarily submerged in the company structure. That structure is defined by the Companies Act and by the articles of association by which shareholders agree to be bound. In most companies and in most contexts, this definition is sufficient and exhaustive, equally so whether the company is large or small. The "just and equitable" provision does not, as the respondents suggest, entitle one party to disregard the obligation he assumes by entering a company, nor the court to dispense him from it. It does, as equity always does, enable the court to subject the exercise of legal rights to equitable considerations; considerations, that is, of a personal character arising between one individual and another, which may make it unjust, or inequitable, to insist on legal rights or to exercise them in a particular way. It would be impossible, and wholly undesirable, to define the circumstances in which these considerations may arise. Certainly the fact that a company is a small one, or a private company, is not enough. There are very many of these where the association is a purely commercial one, of which it can safely be said that the basis of association is adequately and exhaustively laid down in the articles. The superimposition of equitable considerations requires something more, which typically may include one, or probably more, of the following elements: (i) an association formed or continued on the basis of a personal relationship, involving mutual confidence—this element will often be found where a pre-existing partnership has been converted into a limited company; (ii) an agreement, or understanding, that all, or some (for there may be "sleeping " members), of the shareholders shall participate in the conduct of the business; (iii) restriction upon the transfer of the members' interest in the company —so that if confidence is lost, or one member is removed from management, he cannot take out his stake and go elsewhere." [emphasis added]

"It is these, and analogous, factors which may bring into play the just and equitable clause, and they do so directly, through the force of the words themselves. To refer, as so many of the cases do, to " quasi-partnerships " or " in substance partnerships " may be convenient but may also be confusing. It may be convenient because it is the law of partnership which has developed the conceptions of probity, good faith and mutual confidence, and the remedies where these are absent, which become relevant once such factors as I have mentioned are found to exist: the words " just and equitable " sum these up in the law of partnership itself. And in many, but not necessarily all, cases there has been a pre-existing partnership the obligations of which it is reasonable to suppose continue to underlie the new company structure. But the expressions may be confusing if they obscure, or deny, the fact that the parties (possibly former partners) are now co-members in a company, who have accepted, in law, new obligations. A company, however small, however domestic, is a company not a partnership or even a quasi-partnership and it is through the just and equitable clause that obligations, common to partnership relations, may come in."

25. In paragraph [159] of the Judgment the judge referred approvingly to the decision of the Hong Kong Court of Final Appeal in Re Yung Kee Holdings Ltd [2015] 6 HKC 644 where, following Ebrahimi, the court proceeded on the basis that considerations of a personal character arising between individuals might make it unjust, or inequitable to insist on legal rights, or to exercise them in a particular way which might come in the form of a mutual understanding and there could be situations in which equity might find sufficient unfairness or breaches of good faith so as to attract relief but the discretion had to be exercised in a principled manner.

26. In paragraphs [160- 161], the judge said:

> [160] "Lord Wilberforce in Ebrahimi wisely stated that it "would be impossible and wholly undesirable to define the circumstances in which these considerations may arise". Lord Wilberforce referred to relationships being sometimes adequately and exhaustively laid down in the relevant constitutional documents adding: "The superimposition of equitable considerations requires something more", typically including an element of a personal relationship involving mutual confidence and/or an agreement or understanding over and above what is specified in the constitutional documents".
> [161] "… I agree that when courts at the first instance are considering whether there is "something more" they must conduct such exercise in a principled way and with full regard to the desirability of legal certainty especially in matters of commerce. They should not however sacrifice justice, equity and fairness on the altar of legal certainty".

The judge's findings of fact

27. The judge conducted a detailed review of the evidence which consisted of affidavits and oral testimony from, inter alios, Dr Fan, Dr Zhang and Ms Wang, a large number of emails and WeChat messages between these three witnesses, and other documents including the Subscription Agreement, the LPA, the Acknowledgement and the 2016 Agreement. There is no appeal from any of his significant findings of fact[4] (as distinct from the legal significance he found them to have).

[4] ALP submitted that the judge erred in stating that there was no evidence of the GP consulting Ms Wang and seeking her views on Dr Fan's request to have access to his 10% of the shares in Legend Cayman. Support for this submission was said to be the fact that Ms Wang rejected a request Dr Fan sent to her seeking the transfer of Legend Cayman shares. In my view, this submission lacks merit given the evidence that throughout Ms Wang was essentially acting as Dr Zhang's conduit who was the GP's controlling shareholder.

28. In paragraph [168] the judge set out 13 "obvious examples" of the "ample evidence" that supported his finding expressed in [167]. Since the judge's findings of fact are of great importance in this appeal, I proceed to set out some of these examples, occasionally together with the relevant text of the emails referred to:

(1) The evidence of Dr Fan which he preferred to the evidence of Dr Zhang and Ms Wang where his evidence differed from that given by those two witnesses.

(2) The evidence of Ms Wang was that they intended to honour what Dr Zhang had promised by way of the 2016 Agreement and Dr Zhang seemed to accept this.

(3) I do not accept Dr Zhang's evidence that where he was referring … to "your stock" he was referring to "some stock in the limited partnership". The references to "your stock" were, I find, to the shares in the company which was the subject of the IPO. [The email in question dated 15 June 2017 reads: "A good leader should take care of the employees first. If their employees are not successful, the leader cannot possibly be successful. Since it has taken a long time [to] take care of your stock, can we spend some time to take care of your employees first?"]

(4) Dr Fan's uncontradicted legitimate expectation and understanding is plain from his email to Ms Wang (cc Dr Zhang) dated 26 September 2016 ["Recently Frank told me that you are helping roll over the share purchase plan to Legend Cayman …] and his reference to "roll over the share purchase plan to Legend Cayman."

(5) Dr Zhang in his WeChat with Dr Fan on 19 February 2017 referred to "After all, it is the company, not you, that proposed your shareholdings in Legend first, correct?...the new investment agreement is executed only to make things clearer.."

(6) Ms Wang in her WeChat with Dr Fan on 3 June 2017 openly confirmed the position: "The best news for you is that your stake in Nanjing Legend will be turned into shares in Cayman Legend. The entity to be listed will definitely be Cayman Legend and can't be Nanjing Legend by any means. This_is what really matters."

(7) Ms Wang also recognised that Dr Fan had a 10% share in her email dated 7 June

2017. ["Attached please find the Legend subscription agreement. Please keep it confidential. Your percentage of share may not be straightforward stated as 10% in this document. I will forward another email from the attorney explaining how it was set up. The document hasn't been completed yet, mainly they have to determine if RMB can be accepted in this document. Do let me know first if you have any question."]

(8) Dr Fan's legitimate expectation and understanding was further confirmed by Ms Wang by way of a WeChat exchange on 8 June 2021. Ms Wang confirmed that the 2017 Agreement "is not to change any material personal interest of yours. It's only intended to make the original he intended to make the original agreement legitimate and to create scope for future development." I find that the reference to the "original agreement" in that context was the 2016 Agreement. I also find that Ms Wang was at pains to provide reassurance to Dr Fan that his "material personal" interests would not be changed by way of the 2017 Agreement.

(9) Dr Zhang in effect confirmed this again by his email to Dr Fan on 14 of June 2017 and the reference to "your stock".

(10) Furthermore when Dr Fan in his email dated 17 February 2021 to Dr Zhang and Ms Wang refers to "my shares in Legend" neither of them sought to contradict him.

29. In addition to the factual findings stated in the paragraphs of the Judgment referred to in paragraph [18] above, I draw attention to the following:

(A) The findings in paras [169] – [170].

(a) Dr Fan in entering into the 2017 Agreement trusted Dr Zhang and Ms Wang to do the right thing and to honour the roll over of Dr Fan's Legend Nanjing shares to Legend Cayman shares. Dr Zhang and the GP have betrayed that trust and it can easily be seen how Dr Fan legitimately and reasonably believes, after his significant contribution to the increasing value of Legend Cayman, that he has been badly let down by the GP and those that control the GP. Dr Fan has been unfairly treated. It was not mere "wishful thinking" by Dr Fan. It was a reasonable and legitimate expectation that he would get the Legend Shares after the IPO, whatever was stated in the 2017 Agreement. [169]

(b) It is only fair, just and equitable that he shares in the benefits now rather than having to wait 300 years (as originally in effect suggested by the GP) or 26 years (as subsequently in effect suggested by the GP) to obtain his shares. The GP's consideration of and reactions to Dr Fan's reasonable requests for the shares shows the GP in a bad light. Such is indicative of the GP's breach of its fiduciary duties and its failure to act in the best interests of the Partnership and its limited partners. Dr Fan had nearly a 70% interest. He should have been treated with respect and fairness. He was not so treated. He was left with no reasonable alternative but to file the petition. [170]

(B) The following WeChat message from Ms Wang to Dr Fan on 8 June 2017 very shortly before Dr Fan signed the LPA

> "The agreement is not to change any material personal interest of your's. It's only to make the original agreement legitimate, and to create scope for future development." [124]:

ALP's/GP's case on appeal

30. The principal case advanced on behalf of ALP by the GP is that the judge erred in holding that the facts on which Dr Fan's petition is founded fell within Lord Wilberforce's indicia of those relationships which are sufficiently related to conventional partnership to justify a winding up on just and equitable grounds. Two distinct submissions were advanced by Mr Smith KC under this broad rubric:

(i) In the light of the Subscription Agreement, the LPA and the ELPA, ALP lacks any of the characteristics that, pursuant to Ebrahimi, are necessary for the relationship between ALP (acting by the GP) and Dr Fan to constitute the type of "quasi-partnership" or other relationship sufficiently akin to partnership required for it to be open to the Court to wind up ALP on the just and equitable ground.

(ii) The LPA, which was specifically negotiated and agreed over a quite a lengthy period of time, and the Subscription Agreement preclude resort to the just and equitable winding up ground since those agreements are and were intended to be an exhaustive statement of the parties' rights and obligations and specifically deal with the limited partner's rights to withdraw or transfer his/her/its interest in the partnership and to a distribution. Accordingly, the judge erred in proceeding on the basis of his finding that Dr Fan had a legitimate expectation that 10% of the Legend Cayman shares would be transferred into his ownership conditioned the rights and obligations of the GP under the LPA.

31. In support of these submissions, Mr Smith drew attention to the following differences between a partnership under the Partnership Act and an ELP under the ELPA that were adverted to by this Court in Kuwait Ports Authority et al v Port Link GP Ltd et al at [24] [unreported 20 January 2023]:

(i) Limited partners of an ELP are not liable for the debts of the ELP (see section 4 (2) of the ELPA) whereas the General Partner is liable for the debts and obligations of the ELP.

(ii) Limited partners are prohibited from having any active involvement in the business of the ELP which is carried on by the General Partner who enters into all contracts by and on behalf the ELP.

(iii) Section 19 (1) of the ELPA imposes an express duty of good faith on the General Partner of an ELP requiring the General Partner to act in the best interests of the ELP.

(iv) Whereas in an ordinary partnership, mutual and reciprocal rights and obligations are owed to each other by partners, section 19(2) of the ELPA provides that unless the partnership agreement provides to the contrary, a limited partner owes no fiduciary duty either to the ELP or to other partners.

32. Mr Smith submitted that it followed from (ii) and (iv) that, unlike in the usual quasi-partnership type of case, Dr Fan as a limited partner had no expectation that he would participate in ALP's business which in any event consisted of simply acting as a vehicle to hold shares in Legend Cayman. There was also nothing in the LPA that provided that Dr Fan owed a fiduciary duty to the ELP, the General Partner or to other limited partners. Thus, there was no mutuality of obligations of good faith between Dr Fan quo ad Ms Wang in her capacity as a limited partner or quo ad the GP, acting by Dr Zhang and/or Ms Wang as directors thereof, which was one of the classic indicia of a quasi-partnership. Indeed, despite the word "partnership" in the name "exempted limited partnership" given by the ELPA to an entity formed under section 9 thereof, such an entity lacked any of Lord Wilberforce's indicia of a relationship akin to conventional partnership and thus no just and equitable winding up petition to wind it up based on such a relationship could ever succeed.

33. Mr Smith took us to section 32(3) ELPA that provides in relevant part that "where the requirements for all conditions to an admission contained in the partnership agreement have been complied with in accordance with the terms… any person however admitted shall … be deemed to have adhered to and agreed to be bound by the terms and conditions of the partnership agreement and shall have the rights and be subject to the obligations contained in the partnership agreement, and this Act …"

34. Mr Smith also referred us to the following provisions in the LPA and the Subscription Agreement:

The LPA

(i) Clause 3.1, that sets out the limited liability of a limited partner and Clause 3.2 that sets out five broadly drawn limitations on the authority of limited partners including a lack of authority to take part in the conduct, administration, control, management or conduct of the partnership business;

(ii) Clause 6.2 of the LPA, that provides that for a subscriber to become a limited partner he, she or it must execute an effective deed of adherence to the LPA;

(iii) Clause 7.1, that provides that the limited partners are to have capital accounts in respect of their interests in the partnership and Clause 7 .7 that provides that no limited partner will be permitted to withdraw from the partnership or to withdraw any part of his, her or its capital account save with the General Partner's prior consent which consent may be given or withheld for any reason or no reason at all in the sole absolute discretion of the General Partner;

(iv) Clause 9: "At the time or times determined by the General Partner, the General Partner shall cause the Partnership to distribute any assets of the Partnership that it does not, in its discretion, consider to be necessary to the operation of the Partnership. Any distribution pursuant to this Clause 9 shall be made to the Partners pro rata in accordance with the Partners' respective interests determined by reference to their Capital Contribution from time to time."

(v) Clause 12. 2, that states that it was not anticipated that meetings of the partners will be held;

(vi) Clause 12.11 -- the Entire Agreement Clause - that provides: "This Agreement, together with the other documents required to be delivered pursuant hereto, constitutes the entire agreement between the parties to this Agreement with respect to the subject matter of this Agreement, and cancels and supersedes any prior understandings and agreements between the parties with respect to such subject matter. There are no representations, warranties, terms, conditions, undertakings, or collateral agreements, express, implied or statutory, between the parties with respect to the subject matter of this Agreement, other than those expressly set forth in this Agreement, and/or the other documents required to be delivered pursuant to such agreements".

The Subscription Agreement

(i) Paragraph 4 of the introduction to the agreement

EACH ACQUIROR OF A PARTNERSHIP INTEREST MUST BE PREPARED TO BEAR THE ECONOMIC RISK OF INVESTMENT THEREIN FOR AN INDEFINITE PERIOD OF TIME. THE SUBSCRIBERS ARE ENCOURAGED TO SEEK INDEPENDENT LEGAL, ACCOUNTING, INVESTMENT AND TAX ADVICE REGARDING THEIR INDIVIDUAL CIRCUMSTANCES AND FINANCIAL OBJECTIVES IN DETERMINING WHETHER TO SUBSCRIBE FOR AN INTEREST IN THE PARTNERSHIP

(ii) Clause 3 (e): "… the subscriber agrees to comply with the terms of the Partnership Agreement …"

(iii) Clause 5: "To induce the Partnership to accept this subscription, the Subscriber hereby makes the following representations, warranties and covenants to the General Partner, the Partnership and ...":

> "The Subscriber further understands the Interest is transferable only with the consent of the General Partner." [5 (b)]
> "The Subscriber … will not sell, transfer, distribute or otherwise dispose of the Interest without the consent of the General Partner, which may be granted or withheld in its sole discretion …" [5 (c)]
> "… in formulating a decision to invest in the Partnership, the Subscriber has not relied or acted on the basis of any representation or other information purported to be given on behalf of the Partnership or the General Partner except as set forth in the Partnership Agreement (it being understood that no person has been authorised by the Partnership or the General Partner to furnish any such representation or other information)." [5 (e)]

(iv) Clause 7: The Subscriber hereby represents and warrants to the General Partner …

> "the Subscriber has reviewed and understands the Partnership Agreement and this Subscription Agreement …" (b)
> "the Subscriber acknowledges and agrees that, except as set forth in the Partnership Agreement, this Subscription Agreement or an additional written document (executed by a director or officer of the General Partner) which clearly and explicitly indicates that the Subscriber is entitled to rely thereon, the Subscriber has neither received, nor is entitled to rely upon, any representations or warranties from the Partnership, the General Partner, or any partner, member, director, officer, employee or agent thereof". (c)
>
> "the Subscriber is aware that except as provided in the Partnership Agreement, the Subscriber will have no right to withdraw from the Partnership or to receive distributions in liquidation of the Partnership Interest". (d)
> "the Subscriber is not relying on the Partnership, the General Partner, or any of their partners, members, directors, officers, employees agents or representatives for legal, accounting, investment or tax advice, and the Subscriber has sought independent legal, accounting, investment and tax advice to the extent the Subscriber has deemed necessary or appropriate in connection with the Subscriber's decision to subscribe for the Partnership Interest."(g)

> When referring hereafter to 'the entire agreement clauses', I include clause 12.11 of the LPA, clauses 5(e) and 7(c) of the Subscription Agreement and similar provisions in the Acknowledgement.

35. Mr Smith pointed out that the disclosed documents showed there were occasions when Dr Fan commented on and suggested amendments to certain provisions in the drafts of the LPA sent to him from the beginning of February 2017. (The first draft he received in early February 2017 can be ignored since this related to a PRC partnership). In respect of later drafts of the LPA, Dr Fan's suggestions included an observation that clause 7.8 (dealing with when a limited partner can be required to withdraw his interest) was too harsh and his provision of a marked-up version of the LPA showed proposed changes in red, including changes to clause 7.8. Some of Dr Fan's proposed amendments were accepted and some not. Mr Smith also relied on Dr Fan's acceptance in his oral evidence that he paid attention to detail and that he had read and signed the Subscription Agreement and had read the LPA.

> The words [just and equitable] are a recognition of the fact that a limited company is more than a mere legal entity, with a personality in law of its own: that there is room in company law for recognition of the fact that behind it, or amongst it, there are individuals, with rights, expectations and obligations inter se which are not necessarily submerged in the company structure. That structure is defined by the Companies Act and by the articles of association by which shareholders agree to be bound. In most companies and in most contexts, this definition is sufficient and exhaustive, equally so whether the company is large or small. The just and equitable provision does not, as the respondents suggest entitle one party to disregard the obligation he assumes by entering a company, nor the court to dispense him from it. It does, as equity always does, enable a court to subject the exercise of legal rights to equitable considerations, that is, of a personal character arising between one individual and another, which may make it unjust, or inequitable, to insist on legal rights, or to exercise them in a particular way.

37. In Mr Smith's submission, Lord Wilberforce was here concerned with a case where the rights, expectations and obligations are not set out in the documents of the company. Mr Ebrahami and Mr Nazar père had not concluded any agreement as to the circumstances in which the former might be removed as a director. Whereas, if the arrangements and relationships between the parties are set out (submerged) in the constitutional and/or contractual documents, this is sufficient and exhaustive and does not allow for the intervention of equitable considerations derived from the words "just and equitable". In short, the agreements "occupied the field". It follows that the just and equitable jurisdiction is not available in the instant case in light of the detailed provisions in the LPA and the Subscription Agreement, particularly those that declare that the GP has a sole and absolute discretion as to the transfer or withdrawal of a limited partner's interest and distributions and the entire agreement clauses. What Dr Fan is attempting to do, contended Mr Smith, is impermissibly to circumvent the clear meaning of the 2017 Agreement, by seeking to bring his case within the scope of Lord Wilberforce's judgment in Ebrahimi, when the proper course was for him to establish by an action in contract that he is not bound by those provisions in the 2017 Agreements that constitute very substantial obstacles in establishing his "frustration of a legitimate expectation" case. Indeed, to permit Dr Fan to challenge the effect of the 2017 Agreements by petitioning for a winding up on just and equitable grounds rather than bringing proceedings in contract would set a very undesirable precedent as it would open the door to an investor avoiding the effects of a relevant agreement governing his investment by establishing that its terms do not properly reflect his own subjective expectation at the time of entering into the agreement.

38. Mr Smith further relied on a number of passages in the judgments in the following "unfair prejudice" cases[5] : O'Neill v Phillips [1999] 1WLR 1092; Re Coroin Ltd (No 2) [2012] EWHC 2343 (Ch); and Cool Seas (Seafoods) Ltd v Interfish Ltd et al [2018] EWHC 2038 (Ch).

O'Neill

Lord Hoffmann at p. 1102 B –

> In In re Saul D. Harrison & Sons Plc. [1995] 1 B.C.L.C. 14, 19, I used the term "legitimate expectation," borrowed from public law, as a label for the "correlative right" to which a relationship between company members may give rise in a case when, on equitable principles, it would be regarded as unfair for a majority to exercise a power conferred upon them by the articles to the prejudice of another member. I gave as an example the standard case in which shareholders have entered into association upon the understanding that each of them who has ventured his capital will also participate in the management of the company. In such a case it will usually be considered unjust, inequitable or unfair for a majority to use their voting power to exclude a member from participation in the management without giving him the opportunity to remove his capital upon reasonable terms. The aggrieved member could be said to have had a "legitimate expectation" that he would be able to participate in the management or withdraw from the company. It was probably a mistake to use this term, as it usually is when one introduces a new label to describe a concept which is already sufficiently defined in other terms. In saying that it was "correlative" to the equitable restraint, I meant that it could exist only when equitable principles of the kind I have been describing would make it unfair for a party to exercise rights under the articles. It is a consequence, not a cause, of the equitable restraint. The concept a legitimate expectation should not be allowed to lead a life of its own, capable of giving rise to equitable restraints in circumstances to which the traditional equitable principles have no application. That is what seems to have happened in this case".

[5] Brought in O'Neill under s.459(1) of the Companies Act 1985 as amended by the Companies Act 1989 and in Coroin and Cool Seas under s. 994 of the Companies Act 2006

Coroin

Richards J (as he then was)

[635] "For part of his case, however, Mr McKillen relies also on legitimate expectations of participation in the management of the company. In my judgment, this is not sustainable. The importance of the passage from the speech of Lord Wilberforce in In re Ebrahimi Ltd cited by Lord Hoffmann in O'Neill v Phillips is that it indicates the circumstances in which reliance may be placed on equitable considerations (Lord Hoffmann deprecates the use of the expression 'legitimate expectations', regretting that he introduced it into this area of the law: see p.1102) as giving rise to a possible case of unfair prejudice. It is very important to note that in that passage, having identified that the structure of a company is defined by company law and the articles of association, Lord Wilberforce observed that;

> "In most companies and in most contexts, this definition is sufficient and exhaustive, equally so whether the company is large or small."

Equitable considerations, affecting the manner in which legal rights can be exercised, will arise only in those cases where there exist considerations of a personal character between the shareholders which makes it unjust or inequitable to insist on legal rights or to exercise them in a particular way. Typically that will be in the case of a company formed by a small number of individuals on the basis of participation by all or some of them in the management of the company."

[636] "In my judgment, there is no room for equitable considerations of this kind in the present case. The company was formed by a group of highly sophisticated and experienced business people and investors with a view to the purchase of a well-known group of hotels for a price running into many hundreds of millions of pounds and to retaining and managing some of those hotels. There was little prior relationship between many of the investors and some were unknown to each other until a few days before the company was formed. More importantly, articles of association and a shareholders agreement were negotiated and drafted, containing lengthy and complex provisions governing their relations with each other and with the company. I find it hard to imagine a case where it would be more inappropriate to overlay on those arrangements equitable considerations of the sort discussed by Lord Wilberforce and Lord Hoffmann."

[637] "This part of Mr McKillen's case arises in relation to his allegation that he has been unfairly prejudiced by exclusion from participation in management. His right to participate in the management of the company is defined by his right as the holder of a particular class of shares to appoint a director to the board of the company. He exercised that right by appointing himself and by appointing Mr Cunningham as his alternate. There has been no interference with that right and no interference with the rights of either Mr McKillen, or in his absence, Mr Cunningham to attend board meetings. On the contrary, they, but mainly Mr Cunningham, have attended all or most of the board meetings held since the purchase of Misland by the Barclay interests. It is clear from the evidence that Mr McKillen and Mr Cunningham have been in no respect inhibited from exercising their rights as directors and from arguing their position. Mr McKillen submits that he has been put in a position of being a permanent minority because directors appointed by the Barclay interests and by Mr Quinlan formed a majority. But there is clearly nothing in the articles or the shareholders' agreement which entitles directors to more than the votes at board meetings conferred on them by the shareholders' agreement. Nor do the articles or the shareholders agreement prohibit particular groups of shareholders from co-operating with each other unless they have done so in a way which triggers the pre-emption provisions or which constitutes in some way a breach of the obligations of good faith to which I shall later return. The fact that the directors appointed by the Barclay interests and Mr Quinlan may take a position different to that of Mr McKillen does not involve any exclusion of Mr Quinlan or any unfairness unless the position which they take is taken in breach of their duties as directors."

Cool Seas

Rose J (as she then was)

[126] "Applying the principles from those authorities[6] to the present case I am fully satisfied that there was no legitimate expectation that Mr Anderson and Colin Anderson would continue as directors once they ceased to be employed by the company for whatever reason. The relationship between all the participants in the transaction in January 2014 and thereafter was as set out in the contractual documents and there are no overlying equitable considerations applicable here. The factors I have taken into account when arriving at that conclusion are as follows."

[127] "First, there was no previous personal relationship, such as a partnership or family connection, between these parties. Prior to 2013, the only business dealings between Fresh Catch (on the one hand) and Interfish and Altaire (on the other hand) had been a short business relationship for around a year in the 1990s when Interfish placed a large order with Fresh Catch for mackerel fillets..."

[6] Re Saul D Harrison & Sons; Ebrahimi; O'Neill; Fisher v Cadman et al [2005] EWHC 377 (Ch); Grace v Biagiolo et al [2005] EWCA (Civ) 1222.

> [128] "… I accept Mr Colam's evidence was that he viewed the relationship between Interfish and Cool Seas as a commercial relationship on terms that had been negotiated and agreed between them in detailed contractual documents which were developed with the benefit of professional advice. I do not believe that Mr Anderson can have formed any different view."
> [129] "Secondly, this is not a case where the constitution of the company is an off-the-shelf draft which is not revised to reflect the underlying agreement between the parties as to how the business would be run. On the contrary the agreements entered into on 2 January 2014 were bespoke agreements carefully drafted by each side's solicitors, going through several drafts following the signature of the initial Heads of Terms."

39. Turning to the judge's second ground for winding up ALP on just and equitable grounds – the irretrievable breakdown in the relationship between Dr Fan and Dr Zhang – Mr Smith contended that this ground required it being established that the relationship between the individuals involved was that of a "quasi partnership" of the sort contemplated in Ebrahimi and the judge had erred in proceeding on the basis that this requirement had been met. For the first part of this contention Mr Smith relied on Lau v Chu [2020 UKPC 24 at [14] – [17] where Lord Briggs distinguished between "functional deadlock" in the management of a company and an "irretrievable break down in trust and confidence" between the participating members where the company is a "quasi partnership".

40. Turning to the second part of his contention, Mr Smith relied on the submissions based on Ebrahimi he advanced when contesting the judge's first ground for winding up ALP – frustration of a legitimate expectation. In particular, Mr Smith laid stress on the fact that Dr Fan was simply a limited partner with no role in the conduct of the business of the partnership so that it would have made no difference to the management and administration of the partnership if the two doctors never met or spoke to each other. In this regard, Dr Fan's situation was to be contrasted with that in the well-known case of In Re Yenidje Tobacco Company Ltd [1916] 2 Ch 426 where it was held that it was just and equitable to wind up a private company formed by two traders in tobacco products who held equal shareholdings and constituted the board of directors and had become so hostile that neither spoke to the other. In Lord Cozens-Hardy MR's view, the court was "bound to say that circumstances which would justify the winding up of a partnership between these two by action are circumstances which should induce the Court to exercise its jurisdiction under the just and equitable clause to wind up the company".

41. In regard to the judge's third ground for winding up ALP – justifiable loss of trust and confidence in the management of the partnership – Mr Smith first summarised uncontroversially the law applicable to this ground by reference to paragraph [22] in Martin JA's judgment in Tianrui (International) Holding Co Ltd v China Shanshui Cement Group Ltd [2019(1) CILR 481:

> "It is well established that a company may be wound up on the just and equitable ground if it is established that there has been a justifiable loss of confidence in the management, for example on account of serious misconduct or serious mismanagement of the affairs of the company by the directors or the majority shareholders: Loch v John Blackwood Ltd ([1924] AC at 788)".

42. Mr Smith then went on to submit that the judge had failed properly to apply the test inherent in this statement of the law because he did not identify in paragraph [166] the material on which he was relying for his conclusion. What the judge should have done was to identify the relevant material before the court calling into question the conduct and management of the affairs of the partnership and then to have determined on the basis of that material whether Dr Fan had justifiably lost trust and confidence in the management of the partnership on account of serious misconduct or serious mismanagement of the partnership's affairs. If the judge had proceeded as he ought to have done, he would have been bound to find that there was no material from which he could conclude that this third ground for winding up ALP was sustainable.

43. Mr Smith further argued that, even if it be permissible to look at findings made by the judge in paragraphs other than [166], the common thread of these is that they are all premised on Dr Fan's case that he had a legitimate expectation and understanding arising from a relationship akin to partnership as contemplated by Lord Wilberforce in Ebrahimi, which case is misconceived for the reasons he (Mr Smith) had already advanced. In short, the GP should not be condemned and found guilty of serious misconduct and mismanagement for acting in accordance with the 2017 Agreement.

44. Mr Smith then turned to the judge's fourth ground for winding up ALP – the GP's conflict of interest and breach of the fiduciary duty to act in good faith. He submitted that if the judge reached his conclusion that the GP failed to act in good faith because it frustrated Dr Fan's legitimate expectation by refusing his request to have transferred to him 10% of the Legend Cayman shares, the judge erred because his legitimate expectation finding was misconceived for the reasons he (Mr Smith) had earlier advanced. This left the question whether the GP's decision to decline to approve Dr Fan's request for the transfer of 10% of the Legend Cayman shares was outwith the discretion conferred by Clauses 7.7 and 9 of the LPA.

45. Arguing that the section 19 ELPA good faith duty was owed to the partnership as a whole and not to an individual limited partner apart from any other such partners, Mr Smith contended that it was open to the GP to take into account the wider interest of the partnership in Legend Cayman continuing to thrive and not have regard simply to the interest of Dr Fan as a limited partner, and this is what the GP did. The evidence provided in Dr Zhang's second affidavit showed that the reason the GP declined to grant the approval sought by Dr Fan was that, although Cayman Legend had great potential and had achieved a high initial capitalisation, it was spending so much capital on activities such as research and clinical trials that it was loss making and needed to raise fresh capital from the market on a regular basis which would be jeopardised if a large block of shares became available at the same time. In Dr Zhang's view, "if Dr Fan's request to sell $ 56 million worth of stock to the public had been granted, Legend [Cayman] would not have been able to raise $300 million in May 2021, impacting Legend's survival. Therefore, approval and control of inside selling is vital for Legend to survive …".

46. Mr Smith also argued that Dr Fan was clearly aware of the role of Dr Zhang at the time he entered into the 2017 Agreement and thereby consented to and/or waived any conflict of interest which did exist by reason of Clause 10 of the Subscription Agreement:

> "The Subscriber further acknowledges and is aware that the General Partner, its directors or any of its associates may invest in, directly or indirectly, or manage or advise other collective investment schemes or accounts which invest in assets which may also be purchased or sold by the Partnership".

47. Finally, Mr Smith contended that there was an adequate alternative remedy open to Dr Fan, namely a direct claim against the GP for breach of the section 19 good faith duty. In support of this submission, Mr Smith referred to [64] of the judgment of this Court in Kuwait Ports Authority[7]. We were also referred to [23] of the judgment of this Court in Tianrui where Martin JA stated that it is well settled that a winding up petition will not succeed if there exists an adequate alternative remedy which the petitioner has unreasonably failed to pursue. Mr Smith submitted that the court hearing a breach of the section 19 duty case would have available a more flexible range of remedies to meet the situation as it sees fit, than the court hearing a winding up petition which was effectively a "nuclear" all or nothing option.

Dr Fan's case in response

48. The overall submission made on behalf of Dr Fan by Mr Valentin KC was that the judge's winding up order was validly made for the reasons the judge gave in both of his judgments. The judge did not err in finding that the relationship between Dr Fan and Dr Zhang was a close and personal one akin to the relationship that exists between partners of the sort identified by Lord Wilberforce in Ebrahimi both at the time when: (i) before ALP was constituted, Dr Fan was assured by Dr Zhang and his delegate, Ms Wang, that 6 months after the IPO he would be given access to the Legend Cayman shares represented by his interest in the partnership that was the equivalent of 10% of Legend Cayman's issued capital; and (ii) when, after the establishment of ALP, Dr Fan's request that those shares be transferred into his ownership was repeatedly refused by Dr Zhang on behalf of the GP, at which time the GP was also under the duty to act at all times in good faith in the interest of the exempted partnership imposed by section 19 (1) ELPA and under an equitable duty to avoid a conflict between Dr Zhang's interest in Cayman Legend's share capital and Dr Fan's interest in obtaining his shares.

49. Mr Valentin drew support for this submission from the following passages, amongst others, in Lord Wilberforce's judgment:

(1) "No doubt, in order to present a petition [the petitioner] must qualify as a shareholder, but I see no reason for preventing him from relying upon any circumstances of justice or equity which affect him in his relations with the company or, in a case such as the present, with other shareholders." [p.375A]

(2) "It would be impossible, and wholly undesirable, to define the circumstances in which these considerations [of a personal character arising between one individual and another, which may make it unjust, or inequitable to insist on legal rights, or to exercise them in a particular way], may arise." [p.379 C/D & E]

(3) Elements (i) and (iii) referred to on p. 379E-G that may require equitable considerations, namely: (i) an association formed or continued on the basis of a personal relationship, involving mutual confidence, an element that will often be found where a pre-existing partnership has been converted into a limited company; (iii) a restriction upon the transfer of the member's interest in the company – so that if confidence is lost, or one member is removed from management, he cannot take out his stake and go elsewhere.

50. Mr Valentin challenged Mr Smith's contention that no petition to wind up an exempted limited partnership established in conformity with section 9 ELPA based on an alleged relationship between the petitioning limited partner and another limited partner and/or the GP of the sort identified by Lord Wilberforce, could ever be properly granted. Mr Valentin submitted that Mr Smith could not escape from the fact that an exempted limited partnership was a partnership, albeit of a particular kind, and section 36 ELPA expressly provides that "on application by a partner, creditor or liquidator, the court may make orders and give directions for the winding up and dissolution of an exempted limited partnership as may be just and equitable". [emphasis supplied]

51. Mr Valentin also challenged Mr Smith's reliance[8] on the penultimate and ultimate sentences of the passage set out in paragraph [36] above. In Mr Valentin's submission, in these sentences Lord Wilberforce was not positively adopting the submission that the phrase "just and equitable" does not operate so as to entitle one party to disregard the obligation he assumes by entering a company, nor the court dispensing him from it; rather, he was dismissing the argument advanced by junior counsel for the respondent that is reported at p.369C-D:

> "The words of section 222 (f) are ex facie unlimited in scope. There are five considerations which should be borne in mind in construing it. (1) … (2) … (3) It is an accepted principle of our law that pacta sunt servanda, and when one is construing even words as wide as " just and equitable " that principle should be borne in mind; it would follow that, certainly in the absence of bad faith, the majority of the shareholders should not be punished for carrying out a power which, as well as being in the Act, is part of the express contract between the parties. (4) …"

(i) Mr Smith's submission is inconsistent with the Ebrahimi decision where the company had the contractual right under the articles and the statutory right to remove Mr Ebrahimi from his office as a director but nonetheless equity intervened to wind up the company.

(ii) Dr Fan's complaint is not that the entirety of the provisions of the 2017 Agreement that established the partnership are void or voidable on grounds of misrepresentation, mistake or non est factum. Instead, given the assurances conveyed to Dr Fan that after the IPO 10% of the shares in Legend Cayman would be his to sell, the GP should be held to that assurance, this being something within the power of the GP under Clause 7.7[9].

(iii) Lord Wilberforce's observation at p.380B-E that, even where there is a statutory power to remove a director and the articles provide for other removal powers, the just and equitable provision nevertheless comes to [the director's] assistance if he can point to, and prove, some special underlying obligation of his fellow members in good faith, or confidence…" supports Dr Fan's case.

(iv) The decisions in O'Neill, Coroin and Cool Seas are all distinguishable from the instant case since in none of the former was there an assurance made outside the pertinent agreements that a power would be exercised in a particular way in favour of shareholder which was not honoured by the assurer.

(v) ALP is not entitled to rely on the entire contract clause in the ELP or Clause 7(c) in the Subscription Agreement because to do so would be contrary to general considerations of equity arising from the relationship between Dr Fan and Dr Zhang in light of the assurance given and also because reliance on this provision would be: (i) a breach of the section 19 ELPA good faith duty; and (ii) an implied duty to act in good faith; see Familymart China Holding Co. Ltd. v Ting Chuan (Cayman Islands) Holding Corporation [CICA Appeals 7 & 8 of 2019, unreported, 23 April 2020]

[9] When making his oral submissions Mr Valentin rightly accepted that Clause 7.7 rather than clause 9 was the power that best suited his argument.

53. Familymart was a case involving a petition to wind up a joint venture company ("the Company") on, inter alia, the just and equitable ground that an "understanding" as to how part of the business was to be operated had been abandoned after several years by the majority shareholder. The Company had been incorporated pursuant to Foundation Agreements which were amended from time to time leading, inter alia, to a Shareholders Agreement ("the SHA"), clause 20.2 of which provided: "without prejudice to any other provisions under this Agreement, this Agreement … upon the Effective Date, constitute (sic) the entire agreement and supersedes all prior agreements and understandings, both written and oral, among the Parties with respect to the subject matters hereof." [emphasis added]. The lead judgment was delivered by Sir Alan Moses JA with the concurrence of Rix and Martin JAA. The Court of Appeal reversed the decision of the judge below that reliance in the petition on the "understanding" should be struck out by reason of clause 20.2. In para 37 of his judgment Moses JA said:

> "Even where parties to a commercial joint venture agreement include an entire agreement clause, as in the instant case, an obligation to act in good faith may be imposed. (See Ross v Waverley Commercial [2004] BCLC 545] and Sheikh Tahnoon Al Nehayan v Kent [2018] EWHC 333 (Com)."

The Court of Appeal also reversed Kawaley J's order staying the petition on the ground that the dispute was governed by an arbitration agreement contained in the SHA. On 20 September 2023 the Privy Council set aside the Court of Appeal's order on the sole ground that the dispute was indeed covered by the arbitration agreement[10].

54. When dealing with the second just and equitable ground upheld by the judge – irretrievable breakdown in the relationship between Dr Fan and Dr Zhang that had begun as one of mutual trust and confidence – Mr Valentin accepted that this ground depended on the establishment of a relationship akin to partnership of the sort envisaged by Lord Wilberforce and submitted that the judge correctly stated the law in paragraphs [182] – [183] of the Judgment and paragraphs [74] – [75] in the strike out judgment which the judge correctly applied to the relevant facts in reaching his conclusion that this ground was established.

55. Turning to the judge's third winding up ground – justifiable loss of trust and confidence in the management of the partnership – Mr Valentin submitted that the judge's statement of the applicable law in [10(12)] of the strike out judgment was impeccable. The establishment of this ground did not depend upon there being a relationship between Dr Fan and Dr Zhang that was akin to partnership in accordance with criteria set in Ebrahimi. Responding to Mr Smith's contention that there was no material from which to conclude that there had been an objectively verifiable loss of confidence in the GP, Mr Valentin identified the following findings made by the judge:

(i) "in my judgment the affairs of the Partnership have been conducted by the GP (with Dr Zhang in the driving seat in that respect) in a manner which is oppressive and in breach of Dr. Fan's legitimate expectation and understanding"[166]. Mr Valentin submitted that this is a reference to the judge's (correct) findings at [167] that Dr Zhang had created and encouraged Dr. Fan to believe that six months after the IPO, he would be entitled to have access to 10% of the Legend Cayman shares, but that expectation and understanding had then been unreasonably frustrated by the Partnership, the GP and Dr. Zhang. The "oppression" of Dr. Fan consisted in the failure by the GP (represented by Dr. Zhang) to honour what Dr. Zhang had promised Dr Fan in respect of the Legend Cayman shares. It also includes the attempts of Dr Zhang to belittle Dr Fan's role and contribution referred to by the judge in [182] and [154]).

(ii) "Dr. Fan in entering into the 2017 Agreement trusted Dr. Zhang and Ms Wang to do the right thing and to honour the roll over of Dr. Fan's Legend Nanjing shares to Legend Cayman. Dr. Zhang and the GP have betrayed that trust and it can easily be seen how Dr Fan legitimately and reasonably believes, after his significant contribution to the increasing value of Legend Cayman, that he has been badly let down by the GP and those that control the GP. Dr Fan has been unfairly treated." [169]

(iii) "The GP's consideration of and reactions to Dr Fan's reasonable requests for the shares shows the GP in a bad light. Such is indicative of the GP's breach of its fiduciary duties and its failure to act in the best interests of the Partnership and its limited partners. Dr. Fan had nearly a 70% interest. He should have been treated with respect and fairness. He was not so treated. He was left with no reasonable alternative but to file the petition." [170]

56. In regard to the judge's fourth winding up ground – the GP's conflict of interest and breach of the fiduciary duty to act in good faith – Mr Valentin disputed Mr Smith's contentions that: (a) the GP was entitled to be regarded as acting in the overall interest of the partnership consistently with the section 19 (1) good faith duty and in accordance with the 2017 Agreement in declining to allow Dr Fan to have access to 10% of the Legend Cayman's issued shares at a time when the company needed to raise capital to fund its clinical trials and research; and (b) there was in any event no conflict between the interests of the partnership, Legend Cayman and Dr Zhang, all of whom had an interest in protecting and enhancing the value of Legend Cayman. Mr Valentin argued that in considering what is in the interest of the partnership viz the limited partners, the GP must ignore its and its majority shareholder's interest in Legend Cayman, and this the GP, acting by Dr Zhang, manifestly failed to do as the judge was fully entitled to find in [178]. Further, even if the sole interest of Dr Zhang and Legend Cayman was in protecting and enhancing the value of Legend Cayman (a proposition not supported by the evidence), it does not follow that this was Dr Fan's interest (or sole interest). It is also to the point that Ms Wang did not oppose Dr Fan's petition.

57. Mr Valentin, next turned to Mr Smith's contention that by Clause 10 of the Subscription Agreement[11], Dr Fan had consented to or waived any conflict of interest that the GP (through Dr Zhang) might have had. In Mr Valentin's submission, the judge had plainly been correct to hold in [178] that there was nothing in Clause 10 that could come to the rescue of the GP in this case.

58. Finally, Mr Valentin challenged Mr Smith's contention that a more suitable and reasonable remedy than a winding up petition for Dr Fan to take was a claim for breach of the section 19 (1) good faith duty against the GP wherein the court would have available a more flexible range of remedies to meet the situation as it saw fit. Mr Valentin submitted that Dr Fan wanted the shares in Legend Cayman he had been promised and a winding up petition was by far the most straightforward way of achieving this objective.

59. In support of this submission, Mr Valentin relied on paragraphs 36 and 37 of Martin JA's judgment in Tianrui. In that case the appellant ("Tianrui") presented a petition to wind up the respondent ("the Company") on the just and equitable basis on the ground, inter alia, that two of the other three significant shareholders of the Company, ACC and CNBM, had acted unfairly and/or oppressively towards Tianrui and/or that the affairs of the Company had been conducted with a lack of probity and Tianrui had justifiably lost confidence in the management of the Company. At first instance, Mangatal J struck the petition out on the ground that the Tianrui had available alternative remedies which could be reasonably pursued. Paragraphs 36 and 37 of Martin JA's judgment read:

> 36. "If the allegations set out in the petition are true, it seems to us clear that they are capable of establishing that it would be just and equitable to wind up the company. Put simply, Tianrui's position as evinced by its petition is that it cannot be expected to remain in association with CNBM and ACC in light of their conduct towards it. None of the remedies identified by the judge deals with that underlying complaint".

[11] "The Subscriber acknowledges and is aware that the General Partner, its directors or any of its associates may invest in, directly or indirectly, or manage or advise other collective investment schemes or accounts which invest in assets which may also be purchased or sold to the Partnership".

> 37. "The company suggests that if the underlying complaint is as we have identified, Tianrui can bring its association with CNBM and ACC, and with the company, to an end by selling its shares on the Hong Kong stock exchange. It accepts that Tianrui could only sell the shareholding it now has, and that a 21.40% shareholding might fetch proportionately less than the 28.16% shareholding that Tianrui originally had, since its former shareholding enabled Tianrui to block special resolutions; but the company says that the effect of selling would be to crystallize a claim for damages which could then be pursued by means of an action for conspiracy. In our view, these assertions epitomize what is wrong with the company's position. If the actions of the company, prompted by directors appointed at the instance of a majority of its shareholders, have resulted in a justifiable loss of confidence in the management of the company, Tianrui has a statutory right to petition for the winding up of the company on the just and equitable ground. It cannot be deprived of that right merely because the company can point to other remedies which, alone or in combination, might arguably go all or some of the way to compensating Tianrui for what has occurred. In our judgment, Tianrui may legitimately take the view that it prefers the company to be wound up to having to pursue piecemeal a series of actions, by litigation or otherwise, or by a combination of litigation and other steps, that might be capable of redressing some, or even all, of its concerns."

Discussion and decision

The first winding up ground

60. Upon signing the 2016 Agreement Dr Fan had an unconditional and unqualified contractual right to have transferred into his ownership 10% of the issued shares in Legend Nanjing after completion of the company's contemplated IPO, regardless of the effect on the value of the company's shares if he chose to sell his 10% shareholding. As a consequence of the assurances he received from Dr Zhang and Ms Wang that he would have the exact equivalent of his entitlement under the 2016 Agreement in respect of shares in Legend Cayman's shares ("the assurances"), Dr Fan signed the 2017 Agreement (the LPA, the Subscription Agreement and the Acknowledgement) on 9 June 2017. Dr Zhang and Ms Wang were directors of Genscript and Dr Zhang held the majority of the shares in that company. ALP was established on 16 February 2017 with Genscript as its General Partner. The assurances began to be given from about mid-June 2016 and continued on and off until shortly before Dr Fan executed the 2017 Agreement. As recorded above, in her email to Dr Fan dated 3 June 2017 Ms Wang stated: "The best news for you is that your stake in Nanjing Legend will be turned into shares in Cayman Legend". This was followed by her WeChat message of 8 June 2017: "This agreement is not to change any material interest of your's. It's only intended to make the original agreement legitimate, and to create scope for future development." As Dr Zhang and Ms Wang must have realised, Dr Fan accepted their assurances without seeking independent legal advice because he trusted them having worked closely with them for Genscript since 2014. As the judge found at [169], he relied on them to honour the assurances whatever was stated in the 2017 Agreement.

61. In my opinion, the repudiation by the GP (Genscript) of the assurances it gave to Dr Fan through Dr Zhang and Ms Wang is an egregious act of bad faith and the judge was right for the reasons that follow to order the winding up of ALP on the ground that the GP had frustrated Dr Fan's legitimate expectation that the GP would transfer to him 10% of the issued shares in Legend Cayman following the IPO and the end of the ensuing six month lockdown period.

62. ALP is very different from a conventional partnership under the Partnership Act for the reasons identified by Mr Smith. Nonetheless, under the law of the Cayman Islands it is a partnership, albeit an exempted limited partnership, and a partner therein has a statutory right under section 36 (3) (g) to petition for its winding up on the ground that it is just and equitable to do so.

63. As recorded above, Dr Fan received the assurances both before and after Genscript had become the General Partner of ALP. The assurances were not included in the 2017 Agreement and were intended to induce Dr Fan to become a limited partner of ALP and succeeded in doing so as a result of Dr Fan having a close and trusting relationship with the assurers. Honouring the assurances depended on the necessary action being taken by the GP which alone had authority (acting by Dr Zhang) to conduct the business of ALP. Furthermore, as envisaged at (iii) of the indicia for the existence of 'something more' for the superimposition of equitable considerations in the passage from Ebrahimi quoted at paragraph [24] above, Dr Fan could not exit from ALP without the consent of the GP. It follows in my judgment that, as the judge held, the relationship between Dr Fan and Dr Zhang was sufficiently akin to partnership of the sort contemplated by Lord Wilberforce in Ebrahimi for the assurances to be of a character arising between one individual and another that made it inequitable for the GP to insist on a claimed entitlement to refuse to agree to Dr Fan's request to have 10% of the Legend Cayman shares transferred to him.[12]

64. I reject Mr Smith's submission that the GP had a duty to do what it considered to be in the best interests of the partnership which was that they were best served by refusing Dr Fan's request for else the fortunes of Legend Cayman and ALP's interest in the company would be adversely affected. As stated above, Dr Fan had an unqualified right under the 2016 Agreement to own, and sell if he chose to do so, 10% of the shares in Legend Nanjing post the IPO, regardless of the effect that this might have on the value of Legend Cayman's shares; and the assurances he was given were that he would have the equivalent right in respect of the Legend Cayman shares. ALP (effectively the limited partners) should therefore have taken the consequences resulting from the honouring of the assurances for the value of Legend shares, those assurances having been given by Dr Zhang of the GP (also a limited partner) and Ms Wang, a limited partner.

65. As will be apparent from [64], I am not persuaded by Mr Smith's submission that the terms of the 2017 Agreement, including in particular Clause 7.7 and the entire agreement clauses, preclude a winding up on just and equitable grounds. As Mr Valentin submitted, the decisions in O'Neill, Coroin and Cool Seas are all distinguishable from the case in hand and, as Mr Valentin noted, Dr Fan's petition is consistent with the 2017 Agreement since the GP had power under Clause 7.7 of the LPA to honour the assurances by acceding to Dr Fan's request for the transfer of 10% of the Legend Cayman shares. In my view, the case falls squarely within the emphasised passage in Ebrahimi quoted at paragraph [24] above. The existence of the assurances made it unjust and inequitable for the GP to exercise the power conferred on it by clause 7.7 in a particular way, i.e. by refusing consent to the withdrawal rather than consenting. I would also point out that the assurances were not merely Dr Fan's own subjective expectation at the time of concluding the 2017 Agreement, as suggested by Mr Smith[13], but were objectively found by the judge to have been repeatedly given, from which finding there is no appeal.

66. So far as the entire agreement clauses are concerned, I am of the view that reliance thereon in the circumstances of this case would be inconsistent with the free-standing duty to act in good faith which I find to be engaged in respect to the assurances, the honouring of which is a matter that I find affected the conscience of the GP; see Familymart at [37] (quoted at paragraph [53] above) and the following passage in the judgment of Smith J in In re Wondoflex Textiles Pty Ltd [1951] VLR 458, cited with strong approval[14] by Lord Wilberforce) in Ibrahimi at 378E-H:

> " It is also true, I think, that, generally speaking, a petition for winding up, based upon the partnership analogy, cannot succeed if what is complained of is merely a valid exercise of powers conferred in terms by the articles: .. . To hold otherwise would enable a member to be relieved from the consequences of a bargain knowingly entered into by him: . . . But this, I think, is subject to an important qualification. Acts which, in law, are a valid exercise of powers conferred by the articles may nevertheless be entirely outside what can fairly be regarded as having been in the contemplation of the parties when they became members of the company; and in such cases the fact that what has been done is not in excess of power will not necessarily be an answer to a claim for winding up. Indeed, it may be said that one purpose of [the just and equitable provision] is to enable the court to relieve a party from his bargain in such cases." [emphasis supplied].

67. I am also of the view that to rely on the entire agreement clauses would be a breach by the GP of the section 19 (1) EPLA duty of good faith. The duty is owed to "the exempted limited partnership" which must mean the limited partners, which include Dr Fan and, in my opinion the other limited partners, the GP, Ms Wang and later the Ye Wang Family Trust -- would surely have no standing to dissent because the GP and Ms Wang gave and repudiated the assurances. If I am wrong about this, the free-standing duty of good faith that I have held in [66] to apply to the assurances will be unaffected.

68. In my judgment, the judge did not err in holding that proceedings by Dr Fan for breach of the section 19 (1) duty to act fairly would not be a more reasonable remedy than his winding up petition. As the judge observed, Dr Fan is seeking the transfer into his ownership from the shares held by ALP the equivalent of 10% of Legend Cayman's issued shares which will be the result if his winding up petition succeeds, and this represents a much more straightforward proceeding than a claim under section 19(1) ELPA.

The second winding up ground

69. Mr Smith's challenge to this winding up ground is founded on Lord Briggs' statement in Lau v Chu at [15]: that: "where the company is a corporate quasi-partnership, an irretrievable breakdown in trust and confidence between participating members may justify a just and equitable winding up" [emphasis added].

70. I have already held that by reason of Dr Fan having been induced to become a limited partner of ALP by the assurances given by the GP (acting by Dr Zhang and Ms Wang) and the existence of (iii) of the indicia indicated in Ebrahimi, the relationship between Dr Fan and the GP was sufficiently akin to a partnership to engage the applicability of the just and equitable winding up ground consistently with Lord Wilberforce's judgment in Ebrahimi, as the judge found.

71. I turn to consider whether it is necessary for the establishment of this second ground that, in addition to there being a relationship akin to partnership consistent with Ebrahimi, the petitioner has to have been a participant in the running of the business. In paragraph [9] of Lau v Chu, Lord Briggs observed that the jurisdiction to wind up a BVI company on the just and equitable ground was entirely statutory following the similar jurisdiction in UK with the result that the UK case-law was the primary source of authority for the scope of the jurisdiction. He then went on to say in [17] that where the company is a corporate quasi-partnership a winding up on just and equitable grounds "is the response of equity to a state of affairs between individuals who agreed to work together on the basis of mutual trust and confidence where that trust and confidence has completely gone." [emphasis supplied]. In light of the fact that the judge and the parties in the proceedings below also took the approach that the UK case-law was the primary source of authority for the scope of the just and equitable jurisdiction in the case of a Cayman Islands ELP, with the judge stating in [158] that he had had regard to Lau v Chu, I find I find myself constrained to conclude that in respect of this second winding up ground, Dr Fan had to establish that he was a participant in running the business of ALP which was a condition that on the evidence he was never going to be able satisfy. As Mr Smith was at pains to point out, Dr Fan was never going to be involved in running the business of the partnership by reason of the effect of section 14 (1) & (2)) ELPA. It follows in my view that Mr Smith's challenge to the judge's second winding up ground succeeds and in consequence this ground should be set aside.

72. It is important to appreciate that the establishment of this just and equitable ground is not dependent on there being a relationship akin to partnership in accordance with Lord Wilberforce's judgment in Ebrahimi.

73. I am not persuaded by the submissions Mr Smith advanced in seeking to have this winding up ground overturned. On a fair reading of the Judgment, it is clear in my view that in finding this ground was established, the judge proceeded on the basis of his findings in paragraphs

[166], [167], [169] and [182] that the GP's failure to honour the assurances which it was obliged to do in good faith amounted to misconduct in the management and affairs of the partnership. For the reasons I have given in upholding the judge's first winding up ground, I am also satisfied that the judge was entitled to make this finding and to conclude that by reason of this misconduct on the part of the GP, Dr Fan had justifiably lost trust and confidence in the management of the affairs of the partnership to the requisite objective standards.

The fourth winding up ground

74. In my view, the judge's conclusion in paragraph [178] of the Judgment that the wording of Clause 10 of the Subscription Agreement does not mean that Dr Fan consented to or waived any conflict of interest to which the GP was subject is unassailable.

75. I am also of the opinion that the judge was entitled to conclude that the GP (acting by Dr Zhang) was in breach of the fiduciary duties to act in good faith and avoid a conflict of interest. However, this conclusion is dependent on the judge's finding that the GP frustrated Dr Fan's legitimate expectation that the GP would transfer into his ownership 10% of the Legend Cayman shares contrary to the good faith duty it owed in regard to the assurances. Thus, if Mr Smith's submission that the judge's first ground for winding up ALP should be set aside, on the ground say that the terms of the 2017 Agreement preclude the first winding up ground, the GP would have been entitled to conclude that the interests of the partnership would be better served if Dr Fan were not permitted to sell his claimed 10% of Legend Cayman shares. It follows that in substance the first and the fourth winding up grounds are duplicitous, but I do not think that this is a reason for setting the fourth ground aside.

Conclusion

76. For the reasons given above I would uphold the first, third and fourth grounds of the judge's decision for winding up ALP and reject the second ground. It follows that the appeal against the judge's winding up order is dismissed.

A closing observation

77. No doubt for sound and sensible reasons which I do not for a moment criticise, the hearings below and on appeal in this litigation were conducted on the basis that the English and Welsh and Commonwealth jurisprudence (including decisions of the Privy Council) was applicable to petitions to wind up on just and equitable grounds a Cayman Islands ELP, the new kid on the block, pursuant to section 36 (3) (g) ELPA, notwithstanding the marked differences between an ELP and a partnership governed by the Partnership Act and a company incorporated under the Companies Act. For my part, I would have been very interested to have heard a "further and in the alternative" case that the expression "just and equitable" in section 36 (3) (g) ELPA was to be construed in an expansive and flexible way, taking full account of the special nature of an ELP and less account of the overseas jurisprudence.

KUWAIT PORTS AUTHORITY, PUBLIC INSTITUTION FOR SOCIAL SECURITY and THE PORT FUND L.P. v. PORT LINK GP LIMITED, WILLIAMS, WELLSPRING CAPITAL GROUP INCORPORATED and KGL INVESTMENT COMPANY ASIA

C.A. (Field, Birt and Beatson, JJ.A.) January 20th, 2023

Partnership — exempted limited partnership — derivative action by limited partners — derivative action by limited partner against general partner struck out where exempted limited partnership had no claim against general partner and limited partner had adequate alternative remedy, namely direct claim against general partner for breach of duty

Partnership — exempted limited partnership — derivative action by limited partners — derivative action by limited partner against shareholder of general partner and others not struck out — general partner alleged to be involved in wrongdoing had conflict of interest in relation to whether to institute proceedings

The plaintiffs/respondents brought claims concerning an exempted limited partnership.

The first and second plaintiffs were Kuwaiti state-owned enterprises financed by Kuwaiti public funds. They were two of the eleven limited partners in an exempted limited partnership, The Port Fund L.P. ("TPF"). The first and second plaintiffs had invested US$125m. in TPF, which was almost two-thirds of the total investment. The first defendant/appellant, a Cayman Islands exempted limited company, was the general partner of TPF ("D1" or "the GP"). The second defendant/appellant ("D2") was the sole shareholder of Port Link Holdings USA Inc., which was the sole shareholder of the GP. D2 was the CEO, CFO, President, Vice-President, Treasurer and Secretary of the third defendant/appellant ("D3"), a company incorporated in the United States. D2 was also closely involved in the management of the fourth defendant/appellant ("D4"), a Cayman Islands incorporated company, now in voluntary liquidation, which had provided administrative support to TPF.

The plaintiffs pleaded that in breach of statutory, contractual, common law and fiduciary duties owed by the GP to TPF and the limited partners and pursuant to a conspiracy to injure TPF and the limited partners by unlawful means, the GP had made very substantial payments using TPF moneys that were not for the benefit of TPF and the limited partners. The plaintiffs alleged that the defendants' wrongdoing had caused TPF and its limited partners losses in excess of US$100m. The plaintiffs claimed to be entitled to bring their claims against the GP alleging systematic unlawful conduct in relation to the assets and affairs of TPF on their own behalf, but in the alternative they also advanced the claims as derivative claims on behalf of TPF. Similarly, the plaintiffs' primary case was that they were entitled to bring claims against D2 and D3 on their own behalf, but they also sought to advance like claims as derivative claims on behalf of TPF. The plaintiffs' claims against D4 were advanced solely on the derivative basis.

The plaintiffs' direct claims against D2 and D3 were for relief under the Fraudulent Dispositions Act (1996 Revision). They claimed that those defendants culpably participated in the improper payments made by the GP and/or dishonestly received such payments or the traceable proceeds thereof. They claimed that D3 was party to an unlawful means conspiracy, dishonestly assisted in a breach of trust/duty by the GP, knowingly procured a breach of the contractual obligations the GP owed to the limited partners and was liable in knowing receipt. The plaintiffs claimed that D2 conspired and dishonestly assisted in the GP's breaches of duty and was in breach of the fiduciary duties to TPF and the GP.

The derivative claims were brought pursuant to s.33(3) of the Exempted Limited Partnership Act ("the ELPA") on the basis that the GP had without cause failed or refused to initiate the proceedings and there was no real prospect of it doing so. Section 33 provided:

"(1) Subject to subsection (3), legal proceedings by or against an exempted limited partnership may be instituted by or against any one or more of the general partners only, and a limited partner shall not be a party to or named in the proceedings.

(3) A limited partner may bring an action on behalf of an exempted limited partnership if any one or more of the general partners with authority to do so have, without cause, failed or refused to institute proceedings."

The GP's current directors claimed to have conducted an extensive investigation into the alleged wrongdoing and to have concluded that there was not cause to bring the claims advanced by the plaintiffs as derivative claims. The plaintiffs submitted that the current directors, although not implicated in the defendants' alleged wrongdoing, were not independent and had not investigated matters properly.

The GP applied to strike out the direct and derivative claims against it. It accepted that the pleaded allegations were arguable but contended in relation to the direct claims that it was impermissible for two of eleven limited partners to claim damages from the GP to be paid directly to themselves except by seeking partnership accounts that would require the joinder of the other limited partners. D2–D4 applied to strike out the derivative claims against them. D2 and D3 did not apply to strike out the direct claims against them but they did not admit that the plaintiffs had standing to bring the claims and maintained that they should have been pursued by way of a partnership account as against the GP.

In the Grand Court, the judge rejected the submission that direct claims by a limited partner could only be vindicated by the taking of partnership accounts. The judge accepted the plaintiffs' submission that the claims advanced were principally direct claims vested in the individual limited partners rather than in TPF and that the taking of partnership accounts was not the only procedural route available to the plaintiffs.

The GP submitted that (a) the application of the partnership accounts rule/principle to limited partnerships was not inconsistent with the provisions of the ELPA and therefore was not disapplied by s.3; (b) the GP relied on authorities which held that claims by partners inter se could only be brought in the context of the taking of partnership accounts; (c) there were sound practical reasons for the application of the partnership account rule/principle to Cayman Islands exempted limited partnerships; (d) the judge's holding that the property of an exempted limited partnership was held "on trust for each of the limited partners" was a misreading of s.16(1) of the ELPA which provided that the rights and property of an exempted limited partnership, including all choses in action, were held "by the general partners jointly, upon trust as an asset of the exempted limited partnership in accordance with the terms of the partnership agreement."

The plaintiffs submitted that (a) the reasons given by the judge for concluding that the partnership rule/principle was disapplied by s.3 of the Act and was inconsistent with the scheme of the ELPA were correct; (b) the authorities relied on by the GP emphasized the reciprocity of personal obligation and trust and the mutuality of personal liability in an ordinary partnership, which was absent in a limited partnership; (c) the plaintiffs relied on authority to show that in a partnership dispute it was not always necessary to have a claim for a partnership account at the outset; and (d) because an exempted limited partnership had no separate legal personality, the only sensible construction of s.16(1) of the ELPA was that the general partner of an exempted limited partnership held its assets on trust for all the limited partners. The judge was correct so to hold. Because the general partner owed fiduciary duties to all the limited partners, any breaches of those duties must be enforceable by the limited partners themselves. Where there was a claim against the general partner itself, it could not be only the general partner who could institute proceedings.

The Grand Court did not strike out the plaintiffs' claims. The judge rejected the defendants' submission that, when considering s.33(3), the court had to apply principles derived from cases dealing with derivative claims in other contexts. The judge considered s.33(3) to be sui generis. On appeal, the defendants submitted that the judge erred in stating that the principles applicable in other contexts, such as trusts and companies, were not applicable in relation to the statutory test. The plaintiffs submitted that the judge was correct to hold that s.33(3) "occupies the field" and that there was no scope or reason to import any "special circumstances" test or other common law or equitable principles that applied to derivative claims in respect of other entities or structures. The GP submitted that, regardless of whether the test in s.33(3) was otherwise met, the derivative claim against the GP should be struck out because, on the judge's finding, TPF had suffered no loss or damage and therefore had no claim of its own to bring. The judge held that s.33(3) required a finding as to whether the GP had failed or refused to institute the proceedings without cause, not the directors at the relevant time. The judge concluded that there was a good arguable case that the GP had a relevant inhibition because it was conflicted in relation to the plaintiffs' claims. Its decision not to bring the claims against D2–D4 was made unsafe by the facts giving rise to its conflict of interest. (The Grand Court judgment is reported at 2022 (1) CILR 12.)

Held, judgment as follows:

(1) The GP's appeal against the refusal of the judge to strike out the plaintiffs' direct claims against it would be dismissed. The differences between ordinary partnerships and exempted limited partnerships meant that it was not appropriate to require that a direct claim by a limited partner against the general partner must always be initially brought by way of a claim for partnership accounts and that it was not necessary to protect the positions of the creditors and other limited partners by requiring this. The scheme of the ELPA with the absence of reciprocity and mutuality of rights and obligations was inconsistent with requiring claims by a limited partner to be brought by taking partnership accounts in proceedings to which all the limited partners were party. The court accepted the submission that because an exempted limited partnership had no separate legal personality the only sensible construction of the words in ELPA s.16(1) was that the general partner of an exempted limited partnership held its assets on trust for all the limited partners. Because a trust also had no separate legal personality, thus making the position similar to the statutory trust created by ELPA s.16(1), the court regarded the position of a claim by a beneficiary of a trust against the trustee as important. The beneficiary of a subsisting trust including a discretionary trust was entitled to bring a claim against the trustee to recover loss suffered by the trustee's breach of trust, but the remedy was for an order to restore to the trust what ought to have been there. The partnership accounts rule/principle was inconsistent with the ELPA and the judge was correct in his conclusion. In proceedings against the GP, a limited partner could recover for loss suffered by the breach of the statutory trust but the remedy would be the restoration of the exempted limited partnership's fund thus compensating the direct losses suffered by all the limited partners. This remedy prevented a limited partner claimant from benefitting alone from any recovery either at the expense of the other limited partners or of the exempted limited partnership's creditors. The problem of multiplicity of actions could be dealt with by robust case management. The court's rejection of the submission that the direct claims were defective in not at the outset joining all partners and seeking partnership accounts did not mean that the court could not direct that there be such a procedure at a later stage as part of its case management powers if that proved necessary (paras. 53–64).

(2) If D2 and D3 had applied to strike out the plaintiffs' direct claims against them, the court's preliminary view was that the objections raised to the plaintiffs' standing to bring the claims were unfounded. The question was whether, if D2 and D3 were held liable to the plaintiffs for breach of their statutory, equitable and other obligations, it was open to the court to order that those defendants restored the fund rather than paid the plaintiffs. The court's preliminary view was that the plaintiffs had a good arguable case that, where third parties were liable for breaches such as those claimed against D2 and D3, the court could order those defendants to restore the fund rather than pay the plaintiffs and thus avoid the risk of prejudice to other limited partners or creditors. As in the case of a claim against the general partner, the starting point was the position of a claim by a beneficiary of a trust. It was clear that the interest of a beneficiary of a discretionary trust was enforceable against a third party who received trust property which the trustee did not have authority to transfer and the third party knew enough to make it unconscionable to retain the asset for his own benefit. The beneficiary's only right would be to have the asset or its proceeds reinstated to the trustee. Given the analogy between a non-partnership trust, an exempted limited partnership with no separate legal personality and the statutory trust imposed by s.16(1) of the ELPA, it was possible to order third parties such as D2 and D3 to restore the fund where the claim against them succeeded. The analogy rested on the fact that, in cases of knowingly assisting a trustee in a fraudulent and dishonest disposition of trust property, although the third party was not in fact a trustee, he was made liable in equity as if he were a trustee. This reflected the fact that it was the fund which had suffered the loss and an order to restore was the only way in which all beneficiaries' rights could be protected. For these reasons, had D2 and D3 applied to strike out the plaintiffs' direct claims against them, the court's preliminary view was that the objections raised to the plaintiffs' standing to bring the claims were unfounded. It would be for the court hearing the claims to decide whether they were made out on the merits and whether, in the circumstances of this case, an order to restore the fund should be made and, given that the GP would be implicated in the wrongdoing, steps such as placing the assets in escrow, the appointment of a receiver or the taking of partnership accounts were necessary (paras. 65–72).

(3) The legislature had prescribed in s.33(3) of the ELPA when a derivative action could be brought in respect of an exempted limited partnership, i.e. "if any one or more of the general partners with authority to do so have, without cause, failed or refused to institute proceedings." Where the legislature established a statutory test for bringing a derivative action in respect of an exempted limited partnership, the courts were duty bound to apply that statutory test. The test could not be replaced by common law and equitable principles developed in other contexts even if, in the absence of a statutory test, the courts would no doubt have applied those principles to an exempted limited partnership. Nor could those principles form an additional threshold beyond the statutory test. The statutory test was in general and imprecise terms and left open how the test should be applied in practice. However, the expression "without cause" must carry the implication of "good" cause. The court was entitled to have regard to and could derive assistance from the developed principles in other contexts. In particular, given the existence of the statutory trust imposed by s.16(1) of the ELPA, the court was likely to derive assistance from considering whether special circumstances (as established in the contexts of trusts and English limited partnerships) existed. If special circumstances existed, this was likely to assist the court in deciding whether a general partner's decision not to institute proceedings was "without cause." However, the court emphasized that its duty was to apply the statutory test of "without cause"; it was not sufficient simply to consider whether there were special circumstances and, if so, then to allow a claim under s.33(3). If the court decided that the facts would satisfy the special circumstances test, it must nevertheless go on and consider whether they therefore satisfied the "without cause" test in s.33(3). Conversely, the facts of a case might enable the court to find that the general partner's decision was "without cause" without consideration of whether there were special circumstances. The two tests were not to be equated although it was envisaged that consideration of whether there were special circumstances was likely in most cases to be of considerable assistance in determining whether the decision was "without cause" (paras. 94–99).

(4) The court summarized its conclusions in relation to s.33(3): (i) There was no requirement for leave to bring derivative proceedings under s.33(3). A limited partner could simply institute such proceedings. (ii) A limited partner must however plead the facts and matters relied upon as showing that he could bring himself within the requirements of the subsection because this formed an essential part of his cause of action. (iii) If a defendant wished to raise an issue as to the standing of a limited partner to bring such derivative proceedings, he should do so by means of a strike out application or seek the trial of a preliminary issue. (iv) Whichever route was chosen did not affect the test that had to be applied in deciding whether s.33(3) was complied with and whether a limited partner should be permitted to continue with the derivative claim. (v) The decision of the court on such an application or preliminary issue was determinative (subject to appeal). If the court held that the derivative claim could be continued, the limited partner thereafter had the necessary standing to pursue the claim. It was not an issue which was deferred until or revisited at trial (save possibly in the context of costs at the end of the trial). (vi) The court should not conduct a mini trial as to whether the requirements of s.33(3) were satisfied. The court had to reach its decision on the basis of the material before it, which would be more limited than it would be following discovery and trial. (vii) At the hearing, the onus was on the limited partner to satisfy the court that the requirements of s.33(3) were met. Reference to "onus" was not to be mistaken as a reference to a "burden" in the sense of having to show something on the balance of probabilities. (viii) The essential task for the court at such a hearing was to determine whether the limited partner had failed or refused to bring the relevant proceedings without cause. (ix) In determining this issue, the court was likely to be assisted by consideration of whether special circumstances (as developed in cases concerning trusts, limited partnerships and other entities) existed, but the court's task remained one of applying the statutory test set out in s.33(3). (x) Whilst reference to a "good arguable case" might be a helpful indicator of the level of comfort which the court should have when deciding whether the requirements of s.33(3) were met, the court's task was essentially an evaluative one having regard to the facts as they appeared to the court at that stage of the proceedings from the material before the court and the need to avoid injustice balanced with the need to respect the fact that a derivative action was an exception to the general principle in the ELPA that management (including decisions as to litigation) of an exempted limited partnership was for the general partner not the limited partners. The court should consider, inter alia, the strength of the evidence that the general partner had failed or refused to institute proceedings without cause, the strength of the underlying claim that was sought to be brought and the likelihood and nature of any injustice if the derivative claim was not permitted. (xi) The court should reach its decision as to standing by reference to the facts as they appeared at the date of the hearing of the strike out or preliminary issue. (xii) Even where the requirements of s.33(3) were met, the court had a discretion as to whether to permit a derivative claim to continue. One of the factors which was likely to be relevant in exercising that discretion was whether the plaintiff had an alternative remedy (para. 140).

(5) The GP's appeal against the refusal of the judge to strike out the plaintiffs' derivative claims against it would be allowed and the claims would be struck out. A derivative action allowed a party to bring a claim in the name of and on behalf of a second party against a third party. It followed that the second party must have a claim against the third party before the first party could be permitted to bring such a claim derivatively. Section 33(3) presupposed that there was a claim to be brought by the GP on behalf of the partnership. If, as the judge held, the partnership had no claim against the GP, there could be no failure by the GP to bring such a claim without cause. Even if this were wrong, the derivative claim against the GP would not be permitted because the plaintiffs as limited partners had an adequate alternative remedy. A limited partner had the right to claim against a general partner for breach of duty on the part of the general partner. In the event of such a claim succeeding, the appropriate remedy would almost certainly not be an award of equitable compensation to the particular limited partners who had sued but instead an order that the general partner restore the trust fund. In these circumstances, exactly the same would be achieved by a direct claim as would be the case in a derivative action. In the event of the plaintiffs succeeding in their direct claim, the estate of TPF would be made whole by payment from the GP pursuant to an order for restoration of the trust fund. Success in a derivative action would have the same result. Accordingly, there was simply no need for a derivative action; it would add nothing to the direct claims brought by the limited partners coupled with an order for restoration of the trust fund in the event of such claims succeeding. Therefore, as a matter of discretion, the derivative claim against the GP should not be permitted (paras. 141–151).

(6) The appeals of D2, D3 and D4 against the refusal of the judge to strike out the plaintiffs' derivative claims against them would be dismissed. The GP had a conflict of interest in relation to whether to institute proceedings against D2–D4. On the plaintiffs' case, D1 as the GP was deeply involved in all the alleged wrongdoing, as was D2. D1 had to decide whether to institute proceedings against D2–D4 in circumstances where (i) the essential wrongdoing giving rise to the claims against D2–D4 was that of D1 itself in making the various payments and where it was said to be part of the unlawful means conspiracy to injure TPF involving D2 and D3; (ii) the contemplated proceedings would have to be brought against the beneficial owner of the GP and against two companies in which D2 was deeply and closely involved, namely D3 and D4; and (iii) D1 would also have to consider whether (as general partner) it should sue itself (in its own right) as a co-conspirator in the alleged unlawful means conspiracy. On the face of it, by reason of the obvious and serious conflict of interest, D1 was under an inhibition which would amount to special circumstances in the context of a trust or limited partnership and this inhibition also meant that the failure by D1 to bring proceedings against D2–D4 was without cause for the purposes of s.33(3). The defendants' submissions that this was not the position because (i) the current directors of D1 were wholly independent and were not in office at the time of the alleged wrongdoing on the part of D1, and (ii) the independence of the current directors was fortified by the fact that D2 had given an undertaking that the shareholder of the GP would not exercise any powers so as to remove the current directors or interfere in any way in the exercise of their functions did not overcome the inhibition. In relation to the first point, the judge was correct to focus on the entity which was the general partner rather than the directors for the time being of that entity. Section 33(3) referred to the "general partner" having failed or refused to bring proceedings without cause. The general partner was the legal entity D1. D1 was subject to the conflicts of interest and thus could not be seen to be in a position to take a fair and independent decision about the potential litigation. New directors were not in the same position as a liquidator, who was appointed by and subject to the supervision of the court and therefore clearly independent of the company, its directors and shareholders. The current directors owed a fiduciary duty to act in the best interests of D1. The defendants submitted that because D1 owed fiduciary duties to act in the best interests of the partnership, the current directors therefore had a duty to act in the best interests of TPF. However, there was certainly the potential for conflict between acting in the best interests of TPF (which might include taking action against D1 as a co-conspirator) and acting in the best interests of D1 (which might be said to include the avoidance of being sued). The undertaking given by D2 was insufficient to overcome the inhibition from which D1 as general partner suffered. The plaintiffs, who alleged that there had been serious wrongdoing by the defendants which had cost TPF over US$100m., would have a justified lack of confidence that a fair and independent decision was taken by D1 as to whether to seek recompense from any one or more of the defendants, even following the appointment of the current directors. There was no doubt that D1 suffered from an inhibition which led to the conclusion that, subject to the exercise of any discretion, it was appropriate for the plaintiffs to bring derivative claims on behalf of TPF pursuant to s.33(3) against D2–D4. As to discretion, the defendants submitted that because the plaintiffs were bringing direct claims against D2 and D3, they had an alternative remedy in respect of those two defendants and there was no need for them to bring a derivative action. However, D2–D4 expressly reserved the right to challenge the plaintiffs' standing to bring such claims. It would be inconsistent with the overriding objective and highly undesirable to run the risk of the court eventually finding against D2 and D3 on the underlying merits of the claims but also finding that the plaintiffs did not have standing for the direct claims or that it could not make an order for restoration of the trust fund in the absence of a derivative claim on behalf of TPF. There was sufficient uncertainty about whether the plaintiffs had direct claims against D2 and D3 or whether the court could order restoration of the trust fund on the success of such claims that, as a matter of discretion, it was just and fair to allow the derivative claims to proceed alongside the direct claims so that they were all heard at the same time. If, following a trial, the direct claims were upheld and the court also held that it could order restoration of the trust fund as a remedy for such claims, there would be no need to make any award on the derivative claims; if, on the other hand, the direct claims were found not to be maintainable or restoration of the trust fund could not be ordered, the derivative claims would be necessary to provide a remedy, assuming that the underlying allegations against the defendants were upheld (paras. 158–170).

(7) The GP's appeal against the refusal of the judge to order the plaintiffs to provide security for costs would be dismissed. The judge erred in proceeding on the basis that there was a presumption arising from comity and common sense that security for costs should not be awarded against the plaintiffs, although each case would be decided on its own facts. When dealing with a security for costs application against a foreign state or foreign state agency that enjoyed good standing in the international community, the court should treat this as a factor in favour of such a plaintiff to be weighed with all the other factors when the court exercised its discretion. The judge also erred in stating that a foreign plaintiff did not have to establish that it had fixed and permanent property within the jurisdiction. Evidence that a foreign plaintiff had valuable property within the jurisdiction would obviously be of relevance but the significance of this evidence would depend on all the facts of the case, including any evidence as to the permanency of the property and its freedom from encumbrances (or the lack of such evidence) and other evidence tending to show that the plaintiff could be trusted to honour an adverse costs order. The judge's errors played such a significant role in the exercise of his discretion that his decision must be set aside. In the circumstances it was open to the court to exercise the discretion conferred by GCR O.23, r.1(1). The court proceeded on the assumption that the defendants were correct that there would be very real difficulties in enforcing in Kuwait costs orders made against the plaintiffs if their claims against the defendants were dismissed. Although it was a necessary condition for the ordering of security for costs that there was a real risk that an adverse costs order would not be enforced against a foreign plaintiff in his/its home jurisdiction, this was not a sufficient condition for ordering security for costs whatever the other circumstances of the case. Instead, it was open to the court, if there was sufficient evidence to support such a conclusion, to find that there was no real risk that the plaintiff would not honour an adverse costs order and to decline to order security for costs. The present case was such a case. The plaintiffs were agencies of a foreign state, Kuwait, which was of good standing in the international community and enjoyed diplomatic relations with HM Government. Further, a formal letter had been sent to the judge on behalf of the State of Kuwait, among others, confirming that the plaintiffs were wholly owned by the State of Kuwait and attaching letters by the plaintiffs confirming that they would comply with any final and binding costs orders made against them in the proceedings. The letters amounted to a representation intended to be relied on by the Grand Court that the plaintiffs would honour any final and binding costs orders made against them. The letters provided strong support for the conclusion that there was no real risk that such costs orders would not be paid. Further support for this conclusion came from the evidence as to the financial resources of the plaintiffs, which showed that they could be expected to have the ready funds to pay an adverse costs award (paras. 188–217).

Introduction

This is the judgment of the court to which each member has contributed.

2 There are two appeals before the court. The first is brought by all the appellants from the order made by Parker, J. ("the judge") dismissing their summonses to strike out certain claims in the amended statement of claim[1] ("the ASOC") ("the strike out appeal," reported at 2022 (1) CILR 12). The second appeal is brought by the first appellant against the dismissal of its

1 The defendants' application to strike out those paragraphs of the ASOC that pleaded the criminal convictions in Kuwait of a Ms. Lazareva and a Mr. Dashti was not opposed and the judge so ordered.

summons for security for costs ("the SFC appeal"). Hereinafter, we refer to the appellants as "the defendants" or "D1," "D2," "D3" and "D4" and to the respondents as "the plaintiffs."

The strike out appeal

3 This appeal raises important issues concerned with: (a) the nature of a Cayman Islands exempted limited partnership ("ELP") established under the Exempted Limited Partnership Act (2021 Revision) ("the ELPA"); (b) whether a limited partner of an ELP can sue, independently of any of the other limited partners, alleged wrongdoers, including the ELP's general partner, who are alleged to have been parties to the wrongful misappropriation of the ELP's assets held on trust by the general partner and, if so, what is the appropriate remedy to be granted by the court; and (c) the circumstances in which a limited partner can bring a derivative action under s.33(3) of the ELPA in the name of the ELP against the general partner for breaches of contractual, statutory and fiduciary duty.

4 The ELP in question is The Port Fund L.P. ("TPF") which was registered on March 21st, 2007. It was established as a vehicle for investments in port-related assets around the world. It has one general partner and eleven limited partners including the two plaintiffs, the Kuwait Ports Authority ("KPA"), which it is alleged has invested US$85m. giving it at least a 41% interest in TPF and the Public Institution for Social Security ("PIFSS"), which it is alleged invested US$40m. (giving it a 23.77% interest in TPF). The total invested in TPF by the limited partners was US$188,152,000.

5 The first defendant, Port Link GP Ltd. ("the GP" or "D1"), is a Cayman Islands exempted limited company incorporated on March 8th, 2007. It was appointed the general partner of TPF pursuant to a limited partnership agreement ("the LPA") made on March 21st, 2007 between it and the original limited partners of TPF. The whole of the GP's share capital is held by Port Link Holdings USA Inc. ("PLH"), a Delaware company; and the whole of PLH's share capital is held by the second defendant ("Mr. Williams"). Mr. Williams is also CEO, CFO, President, Vice President, Treasurer and Secretary of the third defendant, Wellspring Capital Group Inc. ("Wellspring"), a company incorporated in the US State of Georgia. Wellspring is owned by the Mark E. Williams Living Trust, the trustees of which are Mr. Williams, his wife, Laura Williams, and his brother, Dylan Williams.

6 TPF's sponsor and placement agent was KGL Investment Co. KSCC, a Kuwaiti company ("KGLI Kuwait"). From September 2007 until 2008, Mr. Williams was KGLI Kuwait's Vice President and he was its Investment Director from 2009 to 2011. He was also a member of TPF's Investment Committee in the years 2009–2013.

7 Pursuant to an agreement with the GP dated June 28th, 2007 ("the IMA"), KGL Investment Cayman Ltd. was appointed TPF's investment manager. In July 2018, KGL Investment Cayman Ltd. changed its name to Emerging Markets PE Management Ltd. ("EMPEML"). The ultimate beneficial owner of EMPEML as at the date of the IMA and until around January 2018 was KGLI Kuwait, which is the 100% shareholder of the fourth defendant ("KGLI Asia"). KGLI Asia is said by the defendants to have provided administrative support to TPF between December 2017 and August 2020 pursuant to an agreement for the provision of such services dated December 1st, 2017 ("the ASA").

8 Briefly put, the plaintiffs plead in the ASOC that assets of TPF worth hundreds of millions of US dollars held on trust by the GP have been misappropriated as part of an unlawful means conspiracy and/or dishonest breaches of trust and fiduciary duty and that each of the defendants has wrongfully participated in some or all of these defalcations, in some cases having knowingly received some or all of the proceeds thereof. Amongst the allegations made against the defendants is a claim that the GP made substantial improper payments using TPF moneys that were not for the benefit of TPF.

9 Two of the other limited partners in TPF, Gulf Investment Corp. ("GIC") and General Retirement and Social Insurance Authority of Qatar ("GRSIA"), who between them it is alleged invested 15.14% of the total alleged investment in TPF, have brought claims against the second and third defendants in the US State of Georgia alleging that those parties are guilty of dishonesty, deliberate breaches of fiduciary and unlawful means conspiracy. GIC and GRSIA have consented to a stay of their claims in the courts of Georgia pending determination of the instant proceedings which they support.

10 The two current directors of the GP ("the FFP directors") are individuals recruited from FFP (Directors) Ltd. Mr. Andrew Childe ("Mr. Childe") was appointed on January 29th, 2020 and Mr. Richard Lewis ("Mr. Lewis") on October 28th, 2020, replacing Mr. Christopher Rowland ("Mr. Rowland") who had been appointed at the same time as was Mr. Childe.

11 The FFP directors have no connection to any of the wrongdoing alleged in the ASOC and describe themselves as "independent directors." In his third affidavit, Mr. Lewis states that, fully cognisant of their fiduciary duties, they have conducted an intensive, forensic investigation into the actions of the GP and the former management team of TPF for the benefit of all the limited partners and not just the plaintiffs. The stated results of the FFP directors' forensic investigation are set out in a series of memoranda issued to the limited partners in an update to the limited partners dated May 29th, 2021, save for their investigations into the DIFC proceedings claim and the Lazareva lobbying campaign which are respectively dealt with in paras. 300–345 and 346–399 of Mr. Lewis's third affidavit. In their view, there is currently no cause to bring the derivative claims and even if TPF had meritorious claims, it would be necessary to consider whether the claims were worth pursuing on a cost/benefit analysis and, if so, whether TPF was in a position to pursue them or could raise funding to do so, and whether it would be in the best interests of TPF to do so.

12 The plaintiffs plead individual direct claims against the defendants for losses each has suffered as a limited partner in TPF by reason of the defendants' actionable involvement in the wrongful misappropriation of assets held on trust by the GP. Relying on s.33(3) ELPA, they also plead derivative claims against the GP and the other defendants on behalf of TPF in respect of the aforesaid alleged misappropriation of assets.

The direct claims and the applications to strike them out

13 We first consider the direct claims brought against the GP (D1), Mr. Williams (D2), and Wellspring (D3). It is not necessary to consider the plaintiffs' claims against KGLI Asia (D4) for their losses from payments made to that entity under the ASA because the plaintiffs' counsel, Mr. Allison, K.C., accepted that there is no direct claim against D4 (see respondents' skeleton, para. 48).

14 The plaintiffs plead that in breach of the statutory, contractual, common law and fiduciary duties owed by the GP to TPF and the limited partners and pursuant to a conspiracy to injure TPF and the limited partners by unlawful means, the GP made very substantial payments using TPF moneys that were not for the benefit of TPF and the limited partners. These payments were allegedly made to the following five recipients and/or for the following purposes: (i) Apache Asia Ltd. and its related Macau entity, Apache Asia Ltda. ("Apache") which received US$58,528,399 from the GP, of which US$45,850,000 was purportedly for services under an advisory agreement and US$14,550,000 was directed to be paid to KGLI Kuwait; (ii) Wilfredo Placino who received US$2,920,000 purportedly by way of "advisor fees"; (iii) lawyers and lobbyists acting for Ms. Marsha Lazareva (a director of the GP from March 8th, 2007 to May 24th, 2018), and Mr. Saeed Dashti (a director of the GP from April 16th, 2007 to May 24th, 2018); (iv) a group of Kuwaiti service providers, allegedly for services rendered, of which US$14,070,000 was paid to Golden Shahin General & Trading Contracting Co. ("Golden Shahin"), which is part of a group of companies associated with KGLI Kuwait and Mr. Dashti; and (v) Wellspring, which received US$59,990,461.30 ("the Wellspring payment") by way of a payment alleged to be due under a judgment given in proceedings brought by EMPEML against the GP and TPF in the Dubai International Finance Centre Court ("the DIFCC").

15 The alleged background to (v) is that on November 15th, 2017, US$496,429,767 (representing part of the net proceeds resulting from the sale by the GP of a TPF asset in the Philippines called "Clark City") were transferred to the GP's account with Noor Bank PJSC ("Noor Bank"). The same day, Noor Bank made a suspicious transaction report to the Financial Intelligence Function of the UAE which issued a report to the Dubai Public Prosecutor who successfully moved to freeze the transferred money, an order that remained in place until February 2019. On July 9th, 2018, EMPEML commenced proceedings ("the DIFC proceedings") against the GP and TPF in the DIFCC of First Instance claiming unpaid carry in the sum of US$45,462,000, compound interest on the unpaid carry sum, and unpaid management fees of US$8,106,386 with compound interest thereon at 8% pa. The GP acknowledged service of the claim, submitted to the jurisdiction of the DIFCC and admitted the claim in the sum of US$56,808,005. The DIFCC then entered judgment ordering the GP and TPF to pay US$56,999,978 and, at the request of EMPEML, the GP transferred US$59,990,461.30 to Wellspring in satisfaction of the judgment. The plaintiffs claim, inter alia, that this payment was made by the GP in wilful and negligent breach of trust in that EMPEML had no entitlement to the claimed management fees having assigned its rights therein to KGLI Kuwait; there was no contractual right to interest; it was wrong to submit to the jurisdiction of the DIFCC when the law of the Cayman Islands governed the relationship between the GP and EMPEML; and the IMA contained an exclusive jurisdiction clause in favour of the courts of the Cayman Islands. The plaintiffs also allege that the payment made in satisfaction of the DIFCC judgment was made on the advice of the same legal counsel who, to the GP's knowledge, was also advising EMPEML with respect to its entitlement.

16 The plaintiffs' direct claims against D1 and D3 are for relief under the Fraudulent Dispositions Act (1996 Revision) (see ASOC, paras. 179 and 189). They claim that these defendants culpably participated in the aforementioned improper payments made by the GP that are related in paras. 14 and 15 above and/or dishonestly received such payments or the traceable proceeds thereof. They maintain that Wellspring was party to an unlawful means conspiracy, dishonestly assisted in a breach of trust/duty by the GP, knowingly procured a breach of the contractual obligations the GP owes the limited partners, and is liable in knowing receipt for the Wellspring payment, holding the Wellspring payment or its traceable proceeds on constructive trust for TPF. The plaintiffs also claim that Mr. Williams conspired and dishonestly assisted in the GP's breaches of duty and was in breach of his fiduciary duties to TPF and the GP by orchestrating the DIFC proceedings and the Wellspring payment.

17 The GP applied to strike out the direct and the derivative claims against it but not on the ground that they lacked merit. Instead, it accepted that the pleaded allegations were arguable, but contended in relation to the direct claims that it is impermissible for two members of a class of eleven limited partners to claim damages from the GP to be paid directly to themselves except by seeking partnership accounts that would require the joinder of the other limited partners.

18 D2–D4 applied to strike out the derivative claims against them but D2 and D3 did not apply to strike out the direct claims against them. They have not appealed the judge's decision, but do not admit that the plaintiffs have standing to bring the direct claims that they face. Like D1, they maintain that these claims "ought to be pursued by way of a partnership account as against the GP."

The general rule as to who may bring proceedings by or against an ELP

19 Section 16 ELPA provides that all rights or property of an ELP shall be held on trust by the GP as an asset of the ELP and s.33 contains the general rule as to who can bring proceedings by or against an ELP. Section 16(1) reads:

> "Any rights or property of every description of the exempted limited partnership, including all choses in action … shall be held or deemed to be held by the general partner and if more than one then by the general partners jointly, upon trust as an asset of the exempted limited partnership in accordance with the terms of the partnership agreement." [Emphasis added.]

20 The material provisions of s.33 are:

> "(1) Subject to subsection (3), legal proceedings by or against an exempted limited partnership may be instituted by or against any one or more of the general partners only, and a limited partner shall not be a party to or named in the proceedings.
>
> (2) If the court considers it just and equitable any person or a general partner shall have the right to join in or otherwise institute proceedings against any one or more of the limited partners who may be liable under section 20(1) or to enforce the return of the contribution, if any, required by section 34(1).
> (3) A limited partner may bring an action on behalf of an exempted limited partnership if any one or more of the general partners with authority to do so have, without cause, failed or refused to institute proceedings."

21 It is important to note that, as recognized in paras. 2 and 6 of D2–D4's skeleton argument for the appeal, the effect of ELPA s.33 is that "ordinarily, actions for and on behalf of an ELP must by statute be brought by the general partner of that ELP" and "a claim belonging to a limited partnership must be brought by the GP acting for and on behalf of the ELP." [Emphasis added.] Sections 33(1) and (3) thus apply only to claims brought by or on behalf of an ELP, that is to derivative claims. They therefore do not apply to direct claims brought by a limited partner in respect of its own right of action against the GP and others.

The judge's decision on the direct claims

22 The judge dealt with direct claims by a limited partner at 2022 (1) CILR 12, paras. 61–65. Before doing so (ibid., at paras. 46–60) he helpfully considered and analysed the characteristics of an ELP, how it differs from an ordinary partnership and a company, and the statutory regime established by the ELPA.

23 He stated (ibid., at paras. 46–47) that the rights and obligations of the limited partners and the general partner (or partners) inter se are regulated by the ELPA, the express provisions of which are to prevail where they are inconsistent with the rules of equity and of common law applicable to partnerships as modified by the Partnership Act (2013 Revision). He also referred (ibid., at para. 46) to the provision in s.3 of the ELPA that absent such inconsistency those rules "shall apply to an exempted limited partnership."

(a) Characteristics of an ELP that differ from those of an ordinary partnership

24 The judge identified the following characteristics of ELPs which he considered to be important points of distinction from an ordinary partnership, and which create different rights and obligations between the partners to those in an ordinary partnership (ibid., at paras. 46–53):

(1) By ss. 4(2) and 20 of the ELPA, the limited partners in an ELP have limited liability whereas the general partner is liable for all debts and obligations of the ELP (para. 48).

(2) By s.14 of the ELPA limited partners have no active involvement in the business in their capacity as limited partners. The business is carried out by the general partner who enters into all contracts by or on behalf of the ELP (paras. 49 and 52).

(3) Section 19(1) of the ELPA imposes an express duty of good faith on the general partner of an ELP requiring the general partner to act in the interests of the ELP (para. 50).[2]

2 The judge did not mention, but must have been aware, that this statutory duty is subject to any express provisions to the contrary in the partnership agreement.

(4) Whereas in an ordinary partnership, mutual and reciprocal rights and obligations are owed to each other by partners, s.19(2) of the ELPA provides that, unless the partnership agreement provides to the contrary, a limited partner owes no fiduciary duty either to the ELP or to other partners (para. 51).

(b) Characteristics of an ELP that differ from those of a company

25 The judge stated (ibid., at paras. 54–55) that the fundamental legal distinction is that an ELP has no separate legal personality and exists only as its constituent partners and cannot own property in its own right. He stated that the consequence of the ELP not having a separate legal personality is that its general partner holds its rights and property, including choses in action, on trust for each of the partners. Because a limited partnership has no legal personality, the partnership as a whole is not able to enforce the general partner's obligations as trustee.

26 The judge then identified other characteristics of ELPs which he considered to be important points of distinction from those of companies:

(1) The general partner of an ELP owes its duties to all of the individual limited partners whereas the board of directors of a company only owe duties to the company (as the legal entity) and not to its shareholders (paras. 56–57).

(2) Because in the case of a company directors' duties are owed to the company, any breach by them is generally only actionable by or on behalf of the company and not by shareholders, although there are important exceptions where the wrongdoer directors are in control of the company (paras. 57–59).

(3) By s.33(1) of the ELPA, the general partner in an ELP is the only entity who can institute proceedings on behalf of the partnership, whereas in the case of a company there are exceptions to the rule in Foss v. Harbottle (11) where the wrongful directors are in control of the company. The judge stated that (2022 (1) CILR 12, at para. 60):[3]

> "If the limited partners have claims against the GP, it is in practice unworkable for it to bring proceedings against itself for breach of duty. If the GP is the arbiter of whether to bring claims against itself that clearly gives rise to a conflict of interest."

3 In para. 60, the judge does not mention s.33(3) of the ELPA which, as we have seen, permits a limited partner to bring a derivative action: "an action on behalf of an [ELP] if any one or more of the general partners with authority to do so have, without cause, failed or refused to do so."

(c) Direct claims by a limited partner

27 The judge accepted the submissions of counsel for the plaintiffs, Mr. Allison, K.C., based on the characteristics of an ELP which differ from those of an ordinary partnership and a company, in particular that an ELP has no separate legal personality and that a limited partner does not owe fiduciary duties to the ELP or to the other limited partners. He stated that (ibid., at paras. 61–62):

> "[T]he logical consequence of the aforesaid analysis of the nature and characteristics of an ELP is that the GP's obligations must be capable of enforcement by each of the partners to whom it owes duties individually. That is to be contrasted with the situation where directors of a company hold the company's assets and are treated as trustees because they owe fiduciary duties to the company. In that situation they hold the assets for the company, rather than the shareholders.
> 62 … [T]he GP of an ELP owes fiduciary duties to each of the limited partners and any breaches are therefore enforceable by the limited partners themselves."

28 The judge then stated (ibid., at para. 63):

> "It follows that where an ELP is alleged to have suffered loss, as in this case, that is the loss of each of the limited partners. There is no distinct or separate loss in respect of 'the partnership' (TPF), which as an entity does not exist at law. The limited partners in enforcing their individual claims do not owe duties to each other: …"[4]

29 He concluded that (ibid., at para. 64):

> "[T]he direct claims in respect of the individual partners' losses are vested in the limited partners alone, and are not claims that can be brought on behalf of TPF derivatively, except in the circumstances permitted by s.33(3) of the ELPA where the limited partners who wish to obtain redress for TPF are in effect put in the place of the GP, and bring claims on behalf of TPF."

30 The judge rejected the submission on behalf of the GP and the other defendants that s.16(1) of the ELPA and cll. 3.1 and 3.3 of the LPA prevented such direct claims because the limited partners cannot usurp the function of the GP, who is the only authorized agent of the partnership, here TPF, able to sue. He stated (ibid., at para. 76) that: "the practical difficulty with that submission is that in practice the GP could obviously not sue itself and suffers from the conflict of interest" that arises if the GP is the arbiter of whether to bring claims against itself which clearly gives rise to a conflict of interest (see ibid., at para. 60).

(d) The Henderson case

31 The judge considered (ibid., at paras. 66–78) the decision of Cooke, J. in the English Commercial Court in Henderson PFI Secondary Fund II LLP v. Henderson Equity Partners (GP) Ltd. (13) (hereafter "Henderson"). That case concerned the similar but by no means identical UK statutory regime in the Limited Partnerships Act 1907 under which such partnerships also have no legal existence independent of their constituent partners. The focus of Henderson was whether limited partners were entitled to pursue derivative claims on behalf of the partnership, and, if so, the consequence of doing so.[5] We therefore primarily consider it when giving our conclusion and reasons about the derivative claim against D1 at paras. 147–148 below. But in considering entitlement to pursue a derivative claim, Cooke, J. also considered whether a limited partner could sue the general partner for "its own loss on its own claim" under the limited partnership agreement ([2012] EWHC 3259 (Comm), at para. 32). He stated that it could because it "has its own contractual or fiduciary claim for its own loss" (ibid., at para. 28).

32 In the present case, the judge stated that Cooke, J. held that:

(i) "each limited partner could in its own individual capacity sue … the general partner, for its own losses in respect of liabilities under the limited partnership agreement" (2022 (1) CILR 12, at para. 69);

(ii) "any claim brought by each limited partner as an individual contractual or fiduciary claim would not involve management of the partnership business" (ibid., at para. 72); and

(iii) "the partnership which consisted of the limited partners and the general partner together, had no form of joint right or claim against the general partner" (ibid., at para. 72).

(e) Must direct claims by a limited partner be by seeking an order for partnership accounts?

33 The judge considered the GP's submission that direct claims by a limited partner can only be vindicated by the taking of partnership accounts (ibid., at para. 79ff.). He rejected it and accepted the plaintiffs' submission that the claims advanced were principally direct claims vested in the individual limited partners rather than in TPF (the ELP itself) and that the taking of partnership accounts was not the only procedural route available to the plaintiffs (ibid., at paras. 86–87).[6]

5 I.e. whether the pursuit of derivative claims constituted taking part in the management of the business of the partnership so that, under s.6(1) of the 1907 Act, claimants doing so would forfeit their limited liability.

34 The judge took into account the distinct characteristics of an ELP and the provisions of the ELPA (ibid., at paras. 80–81). He considered that the English authorities on ordinary partnerships which Ms. Stanley submitted were "pellucidly clear" in requiring rights and obligations between partners only to be procedurally adjudicated by the taking of partnership accounts had no direct application to Cayman Islands' ELPs. His reasons were that, unlike ordinary partnerships, under a Cayman Islands' ELP:

(i) there are no reciprocal fiduciary obligations or reciprocal duties between the limited partners unless the LPA provides otherwise (ibid., at para. 84);

(ii) the absence of reciprocal fiduciary obligations between the limited partners means that the joinder of all partners to any proceedings so that the necessary accounting for any monetary claims required by Public Trustee v. Elder (29) ([1926] 1 Ch. at 789) does not apply to a Cayman Islands' ELP (2022 (1) CILR 12, at para. 82, fn. 18);

(iii) the general partner owes fiduciary and contractual duties directly to the limited partners and those duties are enforceable directly by the limited partners (ibid., at para. 83);

(iv) each limited partner is not, as is the case in an ordinary partnership, jointly and several liable for the partnership's liabilities; referring to ss. 3,[7] 4(3), 16(1) and 19(2) of the ELPA, the judge stated that "The rules of equity and common law applicable to ordinary partnerships are in this respect inconsistent with express provisions of the ELP …" (ibid., at para. 85);

(v) claims against the general partner for a breach of the statutory, equitable, common law or contractual duties owed to the limited partners are vested in the limited partners themselves and may be brought directly (ibid., at para. 87).

The questions before us and the submissions

35 We have stated that D2 and D3 did not apply to strike out the direct claims against them but do not accept that the plaintiffs have standing to bring such claims against them and, although D2 and D3 were not partners, maintain that their direct claims "ought to be pursued by way of a partnership account as against the GP." The result was that the focus of the submissions before us was on the judge's rejection of the application to strike out the direct claims against the GP. Little was said specifically about the direct claims against D2 and D3. Ms. Stanley for D1, accepted in substance, that there are direct claims against the GP. But, supported by Mr. Chapman, she submitted that the judge erred in two respects. The first was his finding that the rule/principle that claims by partners inter se can only be brought by the taking of partnership accounts does not apply to a limited partnership. She maintained that the judge erred in holding (ibid., at para. 85) that the application of the rule/principle is inconsistent with the express provisions of the ELPA and that it has therefore been disapplied by s.3 of the ELPA. She submitted that his second error was in holding (ibid., at para. 55) that the GP holds the property of the ELP "on trust for each of the partners." That, she submitted, was a clear misreading of ELPA s.16(1). However, she accepted that before the dissolution of a partnership, although there is jurisdiction to obtain a partnership account, "it is an exceptional jurisdiction to allow an account pre-dissolution."

6 His summary of the GP's submissions is at para. 32(i)–(ii).

7 "The rules of equity and of common law applicable to partnerships as modified by the Partnership Act (2013 Revision) but excluding ss. 31, 45–54 and 56–57 shall apply to an exempted limited partnership, except where they are inconsistent with the express provisions of this Act."

36 On behalf of the plaintiffs, Mr. Allison submitted that the partnership accounts rule/principle does not apply to ELPs in this jurisdiction, in the same way that it does not apply to limited partnerships in England and Wales.[8] This, he maintained, is because the element of reciprocity of fiduciary duties in an ordinary partnership is absent in an ELP. Moreover, in an ordinary partnership, but not an ELP, all the partners have unlimited liability for the partnership's liabilities, and (subject to contrary agreement) are entitled to take part in the management of the partnership business. Mr. Allison further argued that to apply the rule/principle would be inconsistent with ELPA s.32(12)(c)[9] which makes it clear that partners in an ELP have a right to an account. Here the pleaded claims against the GP and D2 and D3 include claims for accounts and equitable compensation for the plaintiffs' individual losses. Mr. Allison submitted that they are entitled to bring these against the GP because of the GP's position as a fiduciary and statutory trustee and its overarching duty to account. Although less clearly stated, it appears that the basis for the plaintiffs' entitlement to bring direct claims against D2 and D3 is their knowing receipt of TPF's property or moneys which the GP transferred to them in breach of its statutory, equitable and other obligations, and their participation in a conspiracy to cause loss to the plaintiffs by unlawful means. During Ms. Stanley's oral submissions there was some debate as to whether, in a claim by a limited partner against the GP or against a third party, the court could order that the remedy against an unsuccessful defendant should be the restoration of the trust fund by analogy with the position where a claim is brought by the beneficiary of a trust: Target Hldgs. Ltd. v. Redferns (38) (hereafter "Target v. Redferns"). Ms. Stanley accepted that this was possible in a claim against the GP but did not accept that it was possible in a claim against a third party such as D2 and D3. She stated that the obvious way for a limited partner to make a claim against a third party would not be by a direct claim but, using the trust analogy, by a claim on behalf of the trust. That appears to be a submission that the claim must be a derivative claim and thus subject to the requirements of ELPA s.33(3). Mr. Chapman's written submissions on behalf of D2 and D3, to which we have referred, are to the same effect.

8 In fact the Limited Partnership Act 2007 applies throughout the UK.

9 "A partnership agreement may provide that, as against any other partner, any assignment or other disposition by a partner of any right, debt or other chose in action arising under a partnership agreement shall confer economic rights only and for the purposes of this section 'economic rights' are … The right to an account for the purpose of ascertaining the amount of share of any of the foregoing …"

37 In principle, two main questions arise in respect of the direct claims although, in the light of the way the appeal has proceeded, the second does not in fact arise. The first question is whether a direct claim by a limited partner against the general partner must be made by claiming partnership accounts in proceedings to which all the partners are parties as it must in an ordinary partnership. Can a limited partner claim an account against a general partner for breach of fiduciary or other duty without at the outset joining the other partners and, if the breach is established, may a limited partner obtain an order that the general partner restore the fund?

38 The second question is whether the ELP itself, although not a legal entity, also has a claim against the GP or a third party such as D2 and D3 for breach of their fiduciary and other obligations. The judge stated (2022 (1) CILR 12, at para. 63) (set out at para. 29 above) that there is no distinct or separate loss in respect of "the partnership" which does not exist in law as an entity. When dealing with the derivative claims later in this judgment, we state that, for the reasons we give at para. 145 below, we are not to be taken as agreeing that the judge was correct in concluding that the partnership has no claim against the GP. However, absent a respondents' notice in respect of the judge's finding or any submission by the plaintiffs that the judge was wrong, the question is not properly before us. But since it is accepted that a limited partner may have a direct claim against the GP for breach of its fiduciary and other duties, albeit only in the context of partnership accounts, uncertainty as to whether TPF itself also has a claim qua ELP does not affect our resolution of the dispute about the plaintiffs' direct claims.

39 There were three limbs to Ms. Stanley's submissions. The first was that the application of the partnership accounts rule/principle to limited partnerships is not inconsistent with the provisions of the ELPA and therefore is not disapplied by s.3. She accepted that there are obvious examples of inconsistency between the rules of equity and common law that apply to ordinary partnerships and the provisions of the ELPA governing limited partnerships. She gave three examples. The first is the disapplication by ELPA ss. 4(2) and 16(2) of the rule that in ordinary partnerships each partner is liable jointly and severally with the other partners for all partnership liabilities. The second is s.32(11)'s provision that in limited partnerships the rule that a partner cannot assign its partnership interest to a third party without the consent of the other partners does not apply. The third is that, in the case of limited partnerships, the rule in ordinary partnerships that certain events cause a dissolution of the partnership does not apply to the events specified in ELPA s.35(a)(i)–(vi). But she submitted that none of these "shed light on the fundamental question at issue on Grounds 2 and 3, namely whether limited partners are entitled to bring direct claims against the GP." It would appear this may require some reformulation in the light of her acceptance during her oral submissions in response to questions by Birt, J.A. that in a claim by a limited partner against the GP the court could order that the defendant restore the fund and that it is exceptional to obtain partnership accounts whilst the partnership is continuing.

40 As to the meaning of "inconsistent," Ms. Stanley relied on In re Knight & Tabernacle, &c., Socy. (19) ([1891] 2 Q.B. at 69). That case concerned a statutory provision that its provisions were to apply except where those provisions were inconsistent with those of another statute. She submitted that this approach applied where, as in the case of s.3 of the ELPA, the question is whether non-statutory rules and principles are inconsistent with the express provisions of a statute and that the partnership accounts rule/principle is not inconsistent with these provisions in the sense used in Re Knight & Tabernacle. That case stated that to be "inconsistent," the rule/principle must be so at variance with the machinery and procedure indicated by the statute that, if it is applied, the statute would not work. Ms. Stanley argued that this shows that "inconsistent" means "irreconcilable" rather than "different from," and that there is no such irreconcilability between the partnership accounts rule/principle and the provisions of the ELPA.

41 Ms. Stanley also referred to the judge's statement (2022 (1) CILR 12, at para. 86) that there is "no good reason why the taking of partnership accounts should be the only procedural route available to the plaintiffs to obtain redress under the ELPA." She submitted that the judge thus "accepted that partnership accounts were a means of redress available" which showed that there is no irreconcilability or inconsistency between the partnership accounts rule/principle and the provisions of the ELPA.

42 Mr. Allison's response to these submissions was that the reasons given by the judge (ibid., at paras. 82–85) (summarized at para. 34 above) for concluding that the partnership rule/principle was disapplied by ELPA s.3 and is inconsistent with the scheme of the ELPA were correct. As to the scheme of the ELPA, he also submitted that the inconsistency is shown inter alia by s.16(1) which makes the GP trustee of an ELP's assets, and by s.32(11) which permits the assignment of a limited partner's interest without the consent of the other partners, and s.32(12)(c) which gives a limited partner the right to claim an account.

43 The second limb of Ms. Stanley's submissions were the authorities which hold that claims by partners inter se can only be brought in the context of the taking of partnership accounts. She referred to the statements in Meyer v. Faber (No. 2) (21) ([1923] 2 Ch. at 439) and Hurst v. Bryk (16) ([2002] 1 A.C. at 194) respectively that in an action against a co-partner "the only relief which the plaintiff could obtain would be an account" and that "the amount owing to a partner by his fellow partners is recoverable only by the taking of an account in equity after the partnership has been dissolved." Mr. Allison's response was that the cases relied on by Ms. Stanley emphasize the reciprocity of personal obligation and trust and the mutuality of personal liability in an ordinary partnership, and Cooke, J. in Henderson (13) ([2012] EWHC 3259 (Comm), at para. 28) emphasized the absence of this in a limited partnership.

44 The third limb of Ms. Stanley's submissions were considerations of "practicality and policy." She maintained that there were sound practical reasons for the application of the partnership account rule/principle to Cayman Islands ELPs. The rule/principle ensures that the creditors of the partnership are paid first before the partners (as they should be) and that all the limited partners will be bound by the outcome. It, she argued, prevents a multiplicity of proceedings with resulting chaos by providing a mechanism for the orderly winding up of the affairs of the ELP.

45 Ms. Stanley submitted that if the partnership accounts rule/principle does not apply "the limited partners would have to bear the additional burden of the costs of the GP dealing with a multiplicity of proceedings, rather than one." There was, she argued, no prejudice to the partners of an ELP by the application of the rule/principle because "claims can all be dealt with in the managed process of the taking of partnership accounts." She relied on the statements in Public Trustee v. Elder (29) ([1926] Ch. at 784) that all partners needed to be joined "to avoid multiplicity of actions," in Hugh Stevenson & Sons v. Akt. für Cartonnagen-Industrie (14) ([1918] A.C. at 247) that partners "cannot sue each other excepting for the balance of the account taken in accordance with the principles which the courts of equity apply in working out the results of dissolution," and on "Partnerships, Limited Partnerships and LLPs," 29(1) Atkins Court Forms, at para. 15.

46 In his oral submissions, Mr. Allison relied on Golstein v. Bishop (12) to show that in a partnership dispute it is not always necessary to have a claim for a partnership account at the outset. Mr. Christopher Nugee, Q.C., sitting as a Deputy High Court judge, stated ([2013] EWHC 881 (Ch), at paras. 2 and 24) that factual matters and the merits of the claim in that case, which included a claim for damages for breach of the partnership agreement,[10] would be determined but that dissolution accounts would be taken at a later stage. In the Court of Appeal, Briggs, L.J., with whom Kay and Sullivan, L.JJ. agreed, recognized that there are remedies other than the taking of a partnership account that might be available for breaches of duty in an ordinary partnership (see [2014] EWCA Civ 10, at para. 11). Ms. Stanley submitted that Golstein v. Bishop was distinguishable for two reasons. The first was that the point before us did not arise in that case because the parties had agreed to this being dealt with by way of preliminary issue. Secondly, the substance of the partnership rule/principle was satisfied in that case because there were only two partners, and they were both before the court. Notwithstanding the force of those points, the case shows that, even in the case of an ordinary partnership, there is room for flexibility.

47 As to misreading ELPA s.16(1), its material provisions are set out at para. 19 above. It expressly provides that the rights and property of an ELP, including all choses in action are held "by the general partners jointly, upon trust as an asset of the exempted limited partnership in accordance with the terms of the partnership agreement." [Emphasis added.] Ms. Stanley compared its wording with the judge's holding (2022 (1) CILR 12, at para. 55) that the property of an ELP is held "on trust for each of the limited partners." [Emphasis added.]

48 She submitted that the judge's holding was clearly a misreading of s.16(1). The legislature has directed that the assets are those of "the partnership." Thus, giving full recognition to the fact that whilst an ELP has no independent legal personality, it provided for there to be a first call on the assets by the creditors of limited partnerships and that the limited partners stand behind those creditors. She argued that s.16(1) is consistent with the preservation of the operation of the partnership accounts rule/principle which enables the court to identify the assets of the ELP which are "actually available" for distribution to limited partners after the creditors had been paid.

49 Drawing on the analogy of the position under a non-partnership trust, she also relied on the statements in the decisions of the High Court of Australia in Chief Commr. of Stamp Duties v. Buckle (6) and Commr. of State Revenue v. Rojoda (7). In Buckle's case the High Court stated ([1998] HCA 4, at para. 48) that:

> "The entitlement of the beneficiaries is confined to so much of those assets as is available after the liabilities in question had been discharged or provision has been made for them."

10 The Chancery Report omits paras. 178–214 of the judgment which deal with the claim for damages for breach of the partnership agreement but those paragraphs are included in the neutral citation version available on the BAILII website.

In Rojoda, the High Court stated that ([2020] HCA 7, at para. 33):

> "unlike a beneficiary of a fixed trust, it was well established that a partner's interest was not an interest in, or in relation to, any specific asset other than an entitlement to the partner's share of the net proceeds from the sale of each asset at the completion of winding up. In other words, the only right that the partners have, both before and after dissolution, in relation to each asset is a right to the account and distribution after sale of the proceeds of that asset—'not to an individual proportion of a specific article, but to an account: the property to be made the most of, and divided.'"

50 In Buckle's case, the High Court also stated ([1998] HCA 4, at para. 47) that in aid of the right of a trustee to reimbursement or exoneration for liabilities properly incurred by the trustee in the administration of the trust, "the trustee cannot be compelled to surrender the trust property to the beneficiaries until the claim has been satisfied." It stated that (ibid., at para. 48), until such reimbursement or exoneration, "it is impossible to say what the trust fund is."

51 Mr. Allison submitted that because an ELP has no separate legal personality the only sensible construction of the words in ELPA s.16(1) is that the general partner of an ELP holds its assets on trust for all the limited partners. The judge was correct so to hold. Because the general partner owes fiduciary duties to all the limited partners, any breaches of those duties must be enforceable by the limited partners themselves. Where there is a claim against the general partner itself it cannot be only the general partner who can institute proceedings. The absence of separate legal personality means that, legally, it is the ELP's constituent limited partners who suffer loss directly and the general partner's fiduciary obligations "must be capable of enforcement by the other partners (just as the obligations of any other trustee are enforceable at the suit of the beneficiaries)."

Conclusions on the direct claims

52 We first consider the direct claims brought by the plaintiffs against the GP and then consider the direct claims brought against D2 and D3.

(a) Direct claims by a limited partner against the GP

53 There is considerable force in the considerations of "practicality and policy" relied on by Ms. Stanley and the need to protect the positions of the creditors of an ELP and of the other limited partners. But we have concluded that the differences between ordinary partnerships and ELPs mean that it is not appropriate to require that a direct claim by a limited partner against the GP must always be initially brought by way of a claim for partnership accounts and that it is not necessary to protect the positions of the creditors and of the other limited partners by requiring this. We have so concluded for the following reasons.

54 First, we have borne in mind two related factors based on the wording of the ELPA. One is the inconsistency of the proposition that such a claim must be by way of partnership accounts with the right given to a limited partner under ELPA s.32(12)(c) to claim "an account." The legislature addressed the question and used the word "account" but not the term "partnership account." We agree with Mr. Allison's submission that it is difficult to see a principled justification for refusing a limited partner a claim to "an account" but permitting such a partner to claim "a partnership account" although there are no mutual and reciprocal rights and obligations between limited partners or fiduciary duties. The other is that ELPA s.16(1) provides that the general partner holds or is deemed to hold "[a]ny rights or property of every description of the exempted limited partnership, including all choses in action … upon trust as an asset of the exempted limited partnership in accordance with the terms of the partnership agreement." [Emphasis added.] That in substance (see para. 56 below), provides that the assets of an ELP are held by the general partner on a statutory trust for the limited partners.

55 Secondly, an ELP does not have the mutuality and reciprocity of obligations that are the hallmark of an ordinary partnership. This is because ELPA s.19(2) provides that, absent express provision in the partnership agreement, the limited partners owe no fiduciary duties. The statements in the cases relied on by Ms. Stanley requiring the claim to be brought by way of a partnership account emphasize the reciprocity and mutuality that exists between conventional partners.

56 We turn to Ms. Stanley's submissions based on s.3 of the ELPA that, absent inconsistency with the rules of equity and of common law applicable to partnerships, those rules "shall apply to an exempted limited partnership" and Re Knight & Tabernacle (19). We bear in mind the modern purposive approach to statutory interpretation. We consider that, as well as provisions such as ss. 16(1), 19(2) and 32(12)(c), the scheme of the ELPA with the absence of reciprocity and mutuality of rights and obligations is inconsistent with requiring claims by a limited partner to be brought by taking partnership accounts in proceedings to which all the limited partners are party. We accept Mr. Allison's submission that because an ELP has no separate legal personality the only sensible construction of the words in ELPA s.16(1) is that the GP of an ELP holds its assets on trust for all the limited partners. On its own, the judge's use of the phrase "on trust for each of the partners" (2022 (1) CILR 12, at para. 55) may leave some uncertainty as to whether he meant to treat the entitlement of each of the partners as totally individuated, but (ibid., at 61) what he said was "capable of enforcement by each of the partners to whom [the GP] owes duties individually."

57 Because a trust also has no separate legal personality, thus making the position similar to the statutory trust created by ELPA s.16(1), we also regard the position of a claim by a beneficiary of a trust against the trustee as important. The beneficiary of a subsisting trust including a discretionary trust is entitled to bring a claim against the trustee to recover loss suffered by the trustee's breach of trust, but the remedy is for an order to restore to the trust what ought to have been there: see Target v. Redferns (38); Lewin on Trusts, 20th ed., para. 21–046 (2020) and Snell's Equity, 34th ed., paras. 2–003 – 2–004, and 21–046 (2022).

58 In Target v. Redferns ([1996] A.C. at 436D–E), Lord Browne-Wilkinson stated that the rule developed by equity reflected the fact that while each beneficiary had the right to claim, "no one beneficiary was entitled to the trust property" and there was a "need to compensate all beneficiaries for the breach." He had earlier stated (ibid., at 434C–D) that an order to restore was "the only way in which all beneficiaries' rights [could] be protected" [Emphasis added]. The remedy thus ensured that all the beneficiaries' rights were protected and that the beneficiary who issued the proceedings did not steal a march on the others and scoop the pool. There is no inconsistency between such an order and what was stated in Chief Commrs. of Stamp Duties v. Buckle (6) and Rojoda (7) because all that is ordered at that stage is restoration of the fund. Should there be a claim against the ELP, it can then be determined. There is also no inconsistency between such an order and what was said by the High Court of Australia in Rojoda about the nature of the partnership trust in an ordinary partnership and the difference between that and that of the beneficiary of a fixed trust because ordering restoration of the fund does not give an individual limited partner an interest in any specific asset.

59 We consider that this approach and remedy is equally applicable in the case of the statutory trust created by s.16(1) ELPA. We have had regard to the two factors based on the wording of the ELPA referred to at paras. 54 and 55 above; the inconsistency of the proposition that such a claim must be by way of a partnership account with the right expressly given to a limited partner under ELPA s.32(12)(c) to claim "an account" and the absence in an ELP of the mutuality and reciprocity of obligations that is the hallmark of an ordinary partnership. Whilst, as Ms. Stanley submitted at paras. 20–25 of her reply skeleton by reference to Rojoda, assets held by a partner of an ordinary partnership are also held on trust for the partnership, these factors lead to the conclusion that the partnership accounts rule/principle is inconsistent with the ELPA and the judge was correct in his conclusion. Mr. Allison accepted that it was likely that the plaintiffs could not have as a remedy equitable compensation payable directly to them because that took no account of the other limited partners and of the ELP's creditors. We have concluded that in proceedings against the GP, a limited partner can recover for loss suffered by the breach of the statutory trust but that the remedy would be the restoration of the ELP's fund thus compensating the direct losses suffered by all the constituent limited partners. We discuss further aspects of ordering the restoration of the fund and its doctrinal underpinning when considering the plaintiffs' direct claims against D2 and D3. The important point is that while the individual partners, like the beneficiaries of a discretionary trust, have a direct claim, if established, the remedy for that claim reflects the fact that no one partner is entitled to all of the fund.

60 This remedy prevents a limited partner claimant from benefitting alone from any recovery either at the expense of the other limited partners or of the ELP's creditors. It thus directly meets the "stealing a march" and "scooping the pool" elements of the practical and policy reasons relied on by Ms. Stanley, the substantive elements of her case for requiring a claim by a limited partner against the GP to be by way of partnership accounts from the outset. As we have stated, Golstein v. Bishop (12) shows that even in the case of an ordinary partnership there is room for flexibility and that a trial of the merits of the claim may be held before taking a partnership account. It suggests that where there is no prejudice either to the creditors of the partnership or to other third parties it is possible to have a trial of the merits of a claim brought by a partner before a partnership account is taken.

61 We consider that the problem of multiplicity of actions and what Mr. Chapman referred to as an "ungated litigation superhighway" can be dealt with by robust case management. Later claims brought in a single jurisdiction can be stayed or consolidated and ordered to be heard together. Where claims are brought in more than one jurisdiction, stays or anti-suit injunctions can also be used to avoid the problems identified by Ms. Stanley and Mr. Chapman.

62 Mr. Allison's description (see skeleton, at para. 89) of the insistence on the joinder of all the limited partners from the outset as "unedifyingly formalistic" may put it too highly. We, however, consider that insistence that a claim for partnership accounts always be made at the outset reflects an entirely technical procedural approach. In her responses to questions by the court, Ms. Stanley at one stage suggested that the plaintiffs in effect should start again and now seek the taking of partnership accounts and that this either be by the court now directing further pleadings or an inquiry to identify what is being alleged by the limited partners. She argued that the taking of partnership accounts occurs "in a much more court managed process than a fraud trial where anything goes …"

63 Our rejection of the submission that the direct claims are defective in not at the outset joining all partners and seeking partnership accounts does not mean that the court cannot direct that there be such a procedure at a later stage as part of its case management powers if that proves necessary. If, after the merits of the plaintiffs' claims against the GP have been determined, it appears that an order to restore the fund should be made but that, given the GP's wrongdoing, steps such as placing the assets in escrow, appointing a receiver, or taking partnership accounts are necessary, the court can make appropriate directions. Alternatively, if the plaintiffs so apply, we would allow them now to add a prayer for the taking of partnership accounts to their pleading, but that such accounting should take place only after the resolution of the issues in their current claims and only if, at that time, it appears necessary.

64 In summary, for the reasons we have given, we dismiss the GP's appeal against the judge's refusal to strike out the plaintiffs' direct claims against the GP. The consequence is that the plaintiffs may bring their direct claim against the GP. We wish to make it clear that, in the event of success, the likely remedy would be an order to restore the trust fund rather than equitable compensation payable directly to the relevant limited partner.

(b) Direct claims by a limited partner against third parties such as D2 and D3

65 We have stated that there was no application by D2 and D3 to strike out the direct claims against them on the merits but they submit that the plaintiffs do not have standing to bring the direct claims against them and ought to have brought the claims against the GP seeking the taking of partnership accounts.

66 The question is whether, if D2 and D3 are held liable to the plaintiffs for breach of their statutory, equitable and other obligations, it is open to the court to order that those defendants restore the fund rather than pay the plaintiffs. If the court is not able to order this, there will be a risk of prejudice to the creditors of the ELP and/or to the other limited partners in the ways we have discussed in the context of claims against the GP but concluded it did not exist in that context. Indeed, since different limited partners may bring claims against different third parties, there may be a multiplicity of both plaintiffs and defendants and the risk of chaos referred to by Ms. Stanley and Mr. Chapman might well be greater. That risk would be avoided by a derivative action where the requirements of s.33(3), discussed at paras. 94–98 below, are satisfied.

67 Ms. Stanley submitted that it is not possible to order D2 and D3 to restore the fund and that the only way that TPF would be entitled to anything is if the plaintiffs' claims are made on its behalf and are thus derivative claims. During an exchange primarily about the claims against the GP, it was put to Mr. Allison that against the other defendants he might not be able to get an order restoring the trust. His response was "arguably not" but it is not altogether clear whether the exchanges related to the direct or the derivative claims against D2 and D3.

68 Since D2 and D3 did not apply to strike out the direct claims against them, strictly the question of whether it is possible for the court to order D2 and D3 to restore the fund is one which falls for determination after the merits of the claims against them have been determined. Although we did not hear full argument on this question, in the light of the points that were made, we consider it appropriate to give our preliminary view on the question. We consider that the plaintiffs have a good arguable case that, where third parties are liable for breaches such as those claimed against D2 and D3, the court may order those defendants to restore the fund rather than pay the plaintiffs and thus avoid the risk of prejudice to other limited partners or creditors.

69 As in the case of a claim against the general partner, the starting point is the position of a claim by a beneficiary of a trust. It is clear that the interest of the beneficiary of a discretionary trust is enforceable against a third party who received trust property which the trustee did not have authority to transfer and the third party knew enough to make it unconscionable to retain the asset for his own benefit: see Lewin on Trusts, 20th ed., para. 21–046, at 901 (2020), and Snell's Equity, 34th ed., paras. 2–003 – 2–004, at 22–23, and para. 21–046, at 650 (2022).

70 Snell also states (op. cit., para. 21–045, at 650) that "the beneficiary's only right would be to have the asset or its proceeds reinstated to the trustee" (to the same effect, see para. 22–005, at 655–656, and para. 30–015, at 845–846). The reason given is that the beneficiary "could not compel the third party to transfer the asset directly to himself since this would give him a greater equitable right against the third party than he had against the trustee …" In para. 2–004, at 22–23 of Snell, it is stated that "the third party's duty is to restore the trust asset to the properly appointed trustee" and that this would happen "if the original trust involved continuing duties to manage a fund and if the beneficiary did not have the entire beneficial interest in the trust asset." Nolan, "Equitable Property" (2006) 122 LQR 232, at 242–243 states that the cases on the rights of a beneficiary against the recipients of misapplied trust assets all acknowledge that a recipient is bound to restore the assets and their proceeds to the relevant trustees, or else transfer them at the direction of a beneficiary or beneficiaries who, being absolutely entitled to the assets in equity, may terminate the trust and direct such a transfer. He states (op. cit., at 255) that the cases provide a doctrinal basis for actions to restore the integrity of a pool of assets held in trust, should it be depleted without authority.

71 That doctrinal basis explains why, given the analogy between a non-partnership trust, an ELP with no separate legal personality, and the statutory trust imposed by s.16(1) of the ELPA, it is possible to order third parties such as D2 and D3 to restore the fund where the claim against them succeeds. The analogy rests on the fact that, in cases of knowingly assisting a trustee in a fraudulent and dishonest disposition of the trust property, although the third party is not in fact a trustee, he is made liable in equity "as if he were" a trustee: Selangor United Rubber Estates Ltd. v. Craddock (33) ([1968] 1 W.L.R. at 1580 and 1582), citing Lord Esher, M.R. in Soar v. Ashwell (36) ([1893] 2 Q.B. at 394–395), and Lord Selborne, L.C. in Barnes v. Addy (4) (9 Ch. App. at 251). This reflects the fact that it is the fund which has suffered the loss and, in the words of Lord Browne-Wilkinson in Target v. Redferns (38), an order to restore is "the only way in which all beneficiaries' rights" could be protected ([1996] A.C. at 434).

72 For these reasons, had D2 and D3 applied to strike out the plaintiffs' direct claims against them, our preliminary view is that the objections raised to the plaintiffs' standing to bring the claims are unfounded. The consequence is that the plaintiffs may bring these claims against D2 and D3. It will be for the court hearing the claims to decide whether they are in fact made out on the merits and, if they are, whether, in the circumstances of this case, an order to restore the fund should be made and, given that the GP would be implicated in the wrongdoing, steps such as placing the assets in escrow, the appointment of a receiver, or the taking of partnership accounts are necessary.

The derivative claims

73 We turn to consider the derivative claims brought against D1 and D2–4. This is the first occasion on which one or more limited partners of a Cayman Islands ELP have sought to bring a derivative claim pursuant to s.33(3) ELPA and accordingly we shall proceed to review the approach adopted by the judge and consider if we can provide any guidance for the future.

74 We begin with a brief discussion of derivative claims generally before turning to consider the interpretation of s.33(3). We shall then consider a number of specific matters of principle raised by the parties before turning to apply our conclusions on the law to the facts of this case.

(a) Derivative claims in general

75 The general rule is that the only person who can bring an action against another who has caused injury or damage is the person who has suffered that injury or damage. As the Court of Appeal put it in the leading case of Prudential Assur. Co. Ltd. v. Newman Indus. Ltd. (28) ([1982] 1 Ch. at 210):

> "A derivative action is an exception to the elementary principle that A cannot, as a general rule, bring an action against B to recover damages or secure other relief on behalf of C for an injury done by B to C. C is the proper plaintiff because C is the party injured, and, therefore, the person in whom the cause of action is vested. This is sometimes referred to as the rule in Foss v Harbottle (1843) 2 Hare 461 when applied to corporations, but it has a wider scope and is fundamental to any rational system of jurisprudence."

76 The court went on to outline an exception to the rule in Foss v. Harbottle (11) in the following terms (ibid., at 211):

"There is an exception to the rule where what has been done amounts to fraud and the wrongdoers are themselves in control of the company. In this case the rule is relaxed in favour of the aggrieved minority, who are allowed to bring a minority shareholders' action on behalf of themselves and all others. The reason for this is that, if they were denied that right, their grievance could never reach the court because the wrongdoers themselves, being in control, would not allow the company to sue."

77 A further helpful general description of a derivative claim in the context of companies is to be found in the judgment of Lewison, J. in Iesini v. Westrip Hldgs. Ltd. (17) ([2009] EWHC 2526 (Ch), at para. 73):

"I should begin by saying a little about derivative claims generally. In the first place the new code has replaced the common law derivative action. A derivative claim may 'only' be brought under the [Companies Act 2006]. As section 260 (1) makes clear a derivative claim is one in which the cause of action is vested in the company, but where the claim is brought by a member of the company. This reflects the old law in which a derivative action was an exception to the general principle (known as the rule in Foss v Harbottle … that where an injury is done to a company only the company may bring proceedings to redress the wrong. Allied to this principle was the principle that whether a company should bring proceedings to redress a wrong was a matter that was to be decided by the company internally; that is to say by its board of directors, or by a majority of its shareholders if dissatisfied by the board's decision. The court would not second guess a decision made by the company in accordance with its own constitution. The exception to these principles was necessitated where the company's own constitution could not be properly operated. If the wrongdoers were in control of the company (because they were a majority of the shareholders) they would not in practice vote in favour of taking proceedings against themselves, even though the taking of proceedings would be in the company's best interests …"

78 Derivative claims are not restricted to companies. They can also be brought, for example, in connection with trusts and limited partnerships.

79 In relation to trusts, it is well-established that, although in general terms the only person who may bring an action against a third party on behalf of a trust is the trustee, a beneficiary can, in special circumstances, bring a derivative action so as to stand in the place of the trustee. In Roberts v. Gill & Co. Solicitors (30), Lord Collins of Mapesbury summarized the position as follows ([2011] 1 A.C. 240, at para. 46):

> "The cases go back to the 18th century, and many of them were reviewed in Hayim v Citibank NA [1987] AC 730. The special circumstances which were identified in the earliest authorities as justifying a beneficiary's action were fraud on the part of the trustee, or collusion between the trustee and the third party, or the insolvency of the trustee, but it has always been clear that these are merely examples of special circumstances, and that the underlying question is whether the circumstances are sufficiently special to make it just for the beneficiary to have the remedy …"

80 To like effect is the observation of Lord Walker of Gestingthorpe (ibid., at para. 110) (omitting references):

> "There is ample authority, comprehensively reviewed in the judgment of Lord Collins JSC, as to the need for special circumstances before the court will countenance a derivative action. Such actions are now relatively common in cases concerned with mismanaged companies, and in many jurisdictions actions by or on behalf of minority shareholders are now regulated by a statutory code … Derivative actions by beneficiaries under inter vivos trusts or wills are less common … But in all these cases the unifying factor—what has to be special about the circumstances—is that the derivative action is needed to avoid injustice …"

81 A helpful summary of the position in relation to trusts under the law of England and Wales is to be found in Lewin on Trusts, 20th ed., at paras. 47–006 and 47–008, at 1024–1026:

> "47–006. However, as an alternative to proceedings brought in the name of trustees, a beneficiary may, sometimes, bring an action in his name on behalf of the trust against a third party. The fact that the action is brought in the name of the beneficiary rather than the name of the trustee does not alter its character. The action is a derivative action in which the beneficiary stands in the place of the trustees and sues in right of the trust, and does not enforce duties owed to him rather than the trustees; a beneficiary can be in no better position than trustees carrying out their duties in a proper manner …

> 47–008. A beneficiary can bring a derivative action only in special circumstances, for example circumstances which tend to disable the trustees from suing (as where their acts and conduct with reference to the trust fund are impeached), or circumstances rendering it difficult or inconvenient for the trustees to sue, as where there is a conflict between their interest and duty. Special circumstances are not confined to circumstances of these kinds. The guiding principle is that there must be exceptional circumstances, which embrace a failure, excusable or inexcusable, by the trustees in the performance of a duty to the beneficiaries to protect the trust estate, or to protect the interests of the beneficiaries in the trust estate. The special circumstances relied on must have something to do with the willingness or ability of the trustee or alleged trustees to bring the action." [Emphasis added]

As can be seen from the emphasized passage, circumstances where the trustees are inhibited from suing because their own conduct in relation to the trust is impeached or they are under a conflict of interest are leading examples of "special circumstances."

82 Turning to English limited partnerships, the question of whether and, if so, in what circumstances a limited partner can bring a derivative claim on behalf of the limited partnership arose in Henderson (13) referred to above in para. 31. As we have already stated, although by no means identical, there are similarities between an English limited partnership and an ELP. In particular, neither is a separate legal entity and, as in an ELP, the limited partners in an English limited partnership may not take part in the management of the partnership business which is to be left in the exclusive hands of the general partner. Thus, in the ordinary way, a limited partner cannot sue a third party in the name of the limited partnership; such action can only be taken by the general partner.

83 In Henderson, a majority of limited partners instituted derivative proceedings on behalf of the partnership against the general partner and the manager of the partnership (who had been appointed as manager by the general partner on behalf of the partnership). The manager was a sister company of the general partner. The claims sought compensation in respect of various alleged breaches of duty by both the general partner and the manager. It was directed that a preliminary issue should be tried as to whether the claimants could bring derivative claims on behalf of the partnership against the general partner and the manager, and it was this issue which came before Cooke, J.

84 For reasons discussed below, Cooke, J. held that the limited partners could not bring a derivative claim against the general partner. However, having referred to Roberts v. Gill (30) and to the equivalent passage in the 18th edition of Lewin (2007) to that referred to at para. 81 above, he held that special circumstances existed which enabled the derivative claim to be brought against the manager. The special circumstances were that the general partner had an irremediable conflict of interest because it was a sister company of the manager and was therefore not in a position to be seen fairly to determine whether to sue the manager. Cooke, J. therefore allowed the derivative claim against the manager to proceed, but went on to hold that, under the relevant provision of the English statute, the limited partners would lose their limited liability as a consequence.

85 In summary, Cooke, J. applied the "special circumstances" test concerning trusts (as summarized in Lewin) to limited partnerships.

86 Although the ability to bring a derivative action in respect of a company is now governed by statute in England and by the Grand Court Rules in this jurisdiction, the principles governing such claims were developed as a matter of common law. Similarly, the requirement of special circumstances in connection with trusts and limited partnerships has been developed entirely by the courts.

87 The position is different in relation to ELPs because of the terms of s.33(3) of the Act and accordingly we turn next to consider the correct interpretation of that provision.

Interpretation of s.33(3) of the ELPA

88 Unlike in the case of trusts or English limited partnerships, the legislature has prescribed in s.33 ELPA when a derivative action may be brought in respect of an ELP. For convenience we repeat the relevant provisions of s.33 at this stage:

> "(1) Subject to subsection (3), legal proceedings by or against an exempted limited partnership may be instituted by or against any one or more of the general partners only, and a limited partner shall not be a party to or named in the proceedings.
> (3) A limited partner may bring an action on behalf of an exempted limited partnership if any one or more of the general partners with authority to do so have, without cause, failed or refused to institute proceedings."

As can be seen, the key requirement is that the general partner must have "without cause, failed or refused to institute proceedings."

89 Before the Grand Court, the defendants argued that, when considering s.33(3), the court had to apply principles derived from cases dealing with derivative claims in other contexts. The judge rejected this submission. His conclusion is expressed in his judgment (2022 (1) CILR 12, at paras. 98–101):

> "98 The terms of s.33(3) ELPA which allows a limited partner in an ELP to bring proceedings on behalf of the ELP if the general partner has without cause failed or refused to do so has no language requiring permission or special circumstances. In my view the principles taken from the common law or equity for bringing derivative claims whether as regards companies, trusts, limited partnerships or associations are not applicable.
> 99 In my judgment s.33(3) is sui generis and is not subject to the rules relating to permission or for special circumstances for derivative actions in other contexts. I accept Mr. Allison, Q.C.'s submission that to this extent it can be said to 'occupy the field' in the Cayman Islands with respect to ELPs and there is no room for a case-by-case judge led formulation of a common law or equitable test.
>
> 100 I have, in coming to this view, had regard to the principles Ms. Stanley, Q.C. and Mr. Chapman, Q.C. referred me to relating to cases which dealt with failures or refusals to bring claims in other contexts, for example where the board of the company or the trustee had the relevant inhibition which prevented a decision to bring claims. Whilst these principles provide helpful guidance, the company and trusts law cases to which I was referred do not directly apply to the position in this case which involves the application of a specific statutory test for Cayman Islands ELPs.
> 101 I note, however, that the common thread running through those cases is that where the authorized decision maker is inhibited, the court may permit, in the interests of justice, derivative claims." [Emphasis in original.]

90 On appeal, the defendants have argued that the judge fell into error in stating (ibid., at paras. 98 and 99) that the principles applicable in other contexts, such as trusts and companies, are not applicable in relation to the statutory test. At para. 68 of her skeleton argument, Ms. Stanley submitted that "without cause" should be interpreted by reference to the well-established tests applied in all other derivative actions. Similarly, at para. 8 of his skeleton argument, Mr. Chapman submitted that the statutory gateway prescribed by s.33 did not oust the ordinary rules of common law and equity. On the contrary, it provided a further statutory hurdle or threshold that had to be met, together with those imposed by the common law and equity, before a derivative claim would be permitted. He submitted that this was a fundamental error in the judge's approach.

91 Conversely, in his skeleton argument, Mr. Allison submitted at paras. 124 and 125 that the judge was correct to hold that s.33(3) "occupies the field" and that there was no scope or reason to import any "special circumstances" test or other common law or equitable principles that apply to derivative claims in respect of other entities or structures. There was no reason to imply any requirements for derivative claims beyond those explicitly mentioned in s.33(3).

92 It seems to us that, during the course of the hearing, both sides rather modified their submissions and were eventually not very far apart in relation to the proper construction of s.33(3). Thus Mr. Chapman (who by agreement with Ms. Stanley presented the main argument on the derivative claims on behalf of all the defendants) conceded that, to the extent that his written submissions had suggested that one imported wholesale the common law and equitable principles on derivative claims, this might go too far. He accepted that one had to apply the statutory test set out in s.33(3), but submitted that this test was consistent with the established principles and that one derived assistance from those principles when construing and applying the statutory test.

93 Similarly, Mr. Allison accepted that, when applying the statutory test and determining whether the failure by the general partner to institute proceedings was "without cause," one could have regard to the principles established in other contexts, such as whether special circumstances existed.

94 In our judgment, in circumstances where the legislature has established a statutory criterion for bringing a derivative action in respect of an ELP, the courts are duty bound to apply that statutory test. The test cannot be replaced by common law and equitable principles developed in other contexts even if, in the absence of a statutory test, the courts would no doubt have applied those principles to an ELP. Nor can those principles form an additional threshold beyond the statutory test, as submitted by Mr. Chapman in his skeleton argument referred to at para. 90 above.

95 The statutory test is in general and imprecise terms and leaves open how the test should be applied in practice. However, we think that the expression "without cause" must carry the implication of "good" cause. The legislature cannot have intended that a decision for any cause, no matter how inhibited or conflicted the decision-maker, would be sufficient to prevent a derivative action. This is so notwithstanding the fact that, as originally enacted, the legislation referred to "good cause" whereas, in its current form, the word "good" is omitted. No guidance as to the reason for this change is to be found in the legislative materials produced in relation to the revision of the statute and we cannot attribute any significance to the change.

96 In these circumstances, we are of the view that the court is entitled to have regard to and may derive assistance from the developed principles in other contexts. In particular, given the existence of the statutory trust imposed by s.16(1) of the ELPA (namely that the general partner holds the property of the ELP "upon trust as an asset of the exempted limited partnership in accordance with the terms of the partnership agreement"), the court is likely to derive assistance from considering whether special circumstances (as established in the contexts of trusts and English limited partnerships) exist.

97 If special circumstances exist, this is likely to assist the court in deciding whether a general partner's decision not to institute proceedings is "without cause." Indeed, in opening his oral submissions on appeal, Mr. Allison (rightly in our view) accepted that, if a general partner were under a relevant inhibition or conflict of interest—concepts which emerge strongly from consideration of special circumstances as stated in the emphasized passage from para. 47–008 of Lewin quoted at para. 81 above—his decision would necessarily and unavoidably be "without cause."

98 We emphasize, however, that the court's duty is to apply the statutory test of "without cause"; it is not sufficient simply to consider whether there are special circumstances and, if so, then to allow a claim under s.33(3). Consideration of whether there are special circumstances, if it assists at all, is simply a step on the road to determining the statutory test. If the court decides that the facts would satisfy the special circumstances test, it must nevertheless go on and consider whether they therefore satisfy the "without cause" test in s.33(3). Conversely, we do not rule out the possibility of a case in which the facts enable the court to find that the general partner's decision is "without cause" without consideration of whether there are special circumstances. The two tests are not to be equated, although we envisage that consideration of whether there are special circumstances is likely in most cases to be of considerable assistance in determining whether the decision is "without cause." Indeed, it was common ground before us that a decision by a decision-maker which is made under a relevant inhibition will be a decision "without cause."

99 Although there is some ambiguity and possible inconsistency between paras. 98 and 99 of the judge's judgment on the one hand and para. 100 on the other, we do not see the judge's decision on this aspect as being essentially any different from our own. Paragraphs 98 and 99, when read in context, simply state that the court's duty is to apply the statutory test, not the common law and equitable principles, but para. 100 goes on to explain that, although they are not directly applicable, these principles provide helpful guidance. The fact that such helpful guidance may be obtained is emphasized by the fact that, when he goes on to consider the application of the statutory test to the facts of this case, the judge concentrates exclusively on the fact that, in his view, the GP was subject to an inhibition because of its conflict of interest. Inhibition is not a word which appears in s.33 but, as the judge correctly states at para. 101 of his judgment, it is a concept which is a common thread in the cases which allows the court to permit derivative claims in other contexts in the interests of justice.

100 Having expressed our view as to the correct interpretation of s.33(3), we turn next to consider a number of supplementary points which were argued before us in relation to the statutory test.

Procedure for determining the statutory test

101 Unlike in the case of companies, there is no requirement under s.33 for a limited partner to seek leave from the court to bring derivative proceedings under s.33(3). It follows that a limited partner is free to commence derivative proceedings without leave.

102 In this respect, the position is the same as derivative claims in respect of companies prior to the introduction by statute and/or rules of court of a requirement for leave and is the same as it remains in respect of trusts and English limited partnerships. But, despite the historical lack of a requirement for leave in respect of companies, it was established as long ago as 1982 in Prudential (28) that the question of whether a plaintiff should be permitted to bring a derivative action on behalf of a company should be determined at an early stage rather than left until trial. In Prudential, the defendant applied by summons to have heard as a preliminary issue whether the plaintiff was entitled to maintain the derivative action. The judge dismissed the summons on the ground that it was more convenient to decide the issue after the action had been heard. The Court of Appeal was very critical of this decision saying ([1982] Ch. at 221):

> "First, as we have already said, we have no doubt whatever that Vinelott J. erred in dismissing the summons of May 10, 1979. He ought to have determined as a preliminary issue whether the plaintiffs were entitled to sue on behalf of Newman by bringing a derivative action. It cannot have been right to have subjected the company to a 30-day action (as it was then estimated to be) in order to enable him to decide whether the plaintiffs were entitled in law to subject the company to a 30-day action. Such an approach defeats the whole purpose of the rule in Foss v. Harbottle and sanctions the very mischief that the rule is designed to prevent."

103 Following Prudential, it has been the practice that a plaintiff's standing to bring a derivative action is determined at an early stage in the proceedings rather than the issue being left to trial, with all the disadvantages which that course would bring as described in Prudential. Where there is a leave requirement (e.g. for companies) the issue is dealt with on the application for leave. Where there is no requirement to obtain leave, the matter is traditionally dealt with on an application by the defendant to strike out the proceedings on the ground of a lack of standing on the part of the plaintiff or by the court ordering, at the request of the defendant, the trial of a preliminary issue as to whether the plaintiff has the necessary standing to bring a derivative action.

104 The practice was conveniently summarized by Chadwick, P. in this court in the case of Autumn Hldgs. Asset Inc. v. Renova Resources Private Equity Ltd. (2) (2017 (2) CILR 136, at para. 26), where he quoted with approval from the judgment of Ribeiro, P.J. in the Hong Kong Final Court of Appeal in the case of Waddington Ltd. v. Chan Chun Hoo Thomas (41) where that learned judge said ([2009] 2 BCLC 82, at paras. 13–14):

> "[13] … Procedurally, there is no requirement at common law for a person seeking to sue derivatively first to obtain the leave of the court …
> [14] The time honoured practice at common law is for the plaintiff to issue proceedings 'on behalf of himself and the other shareholders other than the defendants', naming the company on whose behalf the proceedings are brought as one of the defendants. A challenge to the plaintiff's locus generally takes the form of an application by the relevant defendants to strike out the claim or to have the court determine as a preliminary issue that the plaintiff has no locus to sue on the company's behalf."

105 In our judgment, this is also the appropriate procedure to be followed in relation to proceedings brought under s.33(3). The subsection is clear that a limited partner may only bring a derivative claim if the general partner has refused or failed to do so without cause. It is therefore necessary for the court to decide at an early stage of the proceedings whether the limited partner can indeed bring himself within s.33(3) and therefore "bring" the claim. For the reasons set out so graphically in Prudential (28), this is not a matter which should normally be left until trial. We agree therefore that a defendant wishing to challenge the right of a limited partner to have instituted proceedings on behalf of an ELP pursuant to s.33(3) should do so either by applying to strike out the proceedings on the ground of a lack of standing (as was done in this case) or by applying for the court to direct the trial of a preliminary issue as to the limited partner's ability to bring himself within subs. (3).

106 The question then arises as to the approach which the court should adopt on such an application. In the first place, it is clear that the outcome cannot depend on which of the two courses a defendant chooses to follow. The court's approach must therefore be the same whether there is a strike out application or the trial of a preliminary issue.

107 The judge held that, as this was a strike out application, the normal approach on such an application should be adopted, with the result that the defendants had to show that it was certain that, at trial, the plaintiffs would fail to bring themselves within the terms of s.33(3); see Hughes v. Colin Richards & Co. (15), cited with approval in In re SPhinX Group (37) (2010 (1) CILR 234, at para. 37). The burden lay upon the defendants to show this and there was no burden on the plaintiffs to show that they came within s.33(3). If there was an arguable case that at trial the plaintiffs would be able to satisfy the requirements of that subsection, that was sufficient to enable the case to proceed.[11] It would only be at trial that it would be finally resolved whether the plaintiffs had brought themselves within s.33(3).[12] Although at times the judge used slightly inconsistent language about his approach,[13] we are satisfied that he essentially applied the test we have just described and which he spelt out at 2022 (1) CILR 12, para. 33. Mr. Allison submitted that the judge had followed the right approach.

108 Mr. Chapman, on the other hand, submitted that this was the wrong approach. In his submission, the onus lay upon the plaintiffs to satisfy the court that they came within s.33(3), i.e. that the GP had refused or failed to institute proceedings without cause.

109 In other contexts, the onus lies upon a plaintiff to satisfy the court that he should be permitted to bring a derivative action. Thus in Prudential (28), after the passage cited above, the Court of Appeal went on to say ([1982] 1 Ch. at 221–222):

> "… [W]e do not think that the right to bring a derivative action should be decided as a preliminary issue upon the hypothesis that all the allegations in the statement of claim of 'fraud' and 'control' are facts, as they would be on the trial of a preliminary point of law. In our view, whatever may be the properly defined boundaries of the exception to the rule, the plaintiff ought at least to be required before proceeding with his action to establish a prima facie case (i) that the company is entitled to the relief claimed, and (ii) that the action falls within the proper boundaries of the exception to the rule in Foss v. Harbottle."

This approach has been followed in this jurisdiction in relation to companies; see Top Jet Enterprises Ltd. v. Sino Jet Holding Ltd. (40) (2018 (1) CILR 18, at para. 29, per Segal, J.).

110 It is not entirely clear what standard the Court of Appeal in Prudential was intending to set by referring to a plaintiff "at least" being required to establish a "prima facie" case that he falls within the exception to the rule in Foss v. Harbottle (11). Some assistance can be derived from 11 2022 (1) CILR 12, paras. 33, 119, 123.

12 2022 (1) CILR 12, paras. 33(ii), 138.
13 Thus at 2022 (1) CILR 12, para. 102 the judge refers to "good arguable case" and paras. 106 and 136 might be said to suggest that he was in fact making a clear finding that D1 had failed without cause to bring proceedings rather than that it was simply arguable.

the subsequent judgment of Knox, J. in Smith v. Croft (No. 2) (35) ([1988] Ch. at 138–139), approved in Top Jet (2018 (1) CILR 18, at para. 30) as follows:

> "My conclusion is that it is the question stated by the Court of Appeal that has to be decided as a preliminary matter, that it is a special form of procedure concerned with giving sensible operation to the rule in Foss v Harbottle … and which is concerned with avoiding the Scylla and Charybdis, on the hand of having a preliminary issue which effectively requires one to try the whole action where the rules serves no useful purpose, and on the other side of the strait, of assuming that everything the plaintiffs allege is necessarily correct as a matter of fact, which is of course the technique the court adopts when it has was called a strict demurrer. The Court of Appeal has laid down a halfway house for this very special type of case, one in which the legal issues in this particular case are sufficiently well defined for the parties to be able to argue them."

In other words, the approach should be a halfway house between a strike out application and a full trial.

111 When pressed during the hearing as to what he thought the Court of Appeal meant by a prima facie case, Mr. Allison suggested that it meant a good arguable case and that was in fact an expression the judge used at para. 102 of his judgment, despite his references (see para. 107 above) to mere arguability being the test. This court recently had occasion to consider what was meant by the expression "good arguable case" in Scully Royalty Ltd. v. Raiffeisen Bank Intl. Ltd. (32) (2022 (1) CILR 118, at paras. 47–52). In particular, the court approved the observation of Mustill, J. in Ninemia Maritime Corp. v. Trave Schiffahrts G.m.b.H. und Co., The Niedersachsen (24) ([1983] 2 Lloyd's Rep. at 605) where he said:

> "I consider that the right course is to adopt the test of a good arguable case, in the sense of a case which is more than barely capable of serious argument, and yet not necessarily one which the Judge believes to have a better than 50 per cent chance of success."

112 During the hearing, the court invited counsel to ascertain whether recent English decisions in relation to derivative actions offered any assistance as to the standard to be applied when considering whether the grounds for permitting a derivative action had been made out. However, counsel's researches were unable to come up with anything of significant assistance.

113 Mr. Chapman referred us to the decision of the English Court of Appeal in Barrett v. Duckett (5), which was decided before the requirement for leave in relation to companies was introduced by statute. This was a case where B & D each held a 50% shareholding in a company. B instituted a derivative action against D and others on behalf of the company alleging wrongdoing by D and others, D being the sole director of the company. The defendants applied to strike out the claim on the basis that it was not a proper case for a derivative action. In the course of his judgment, Peter Gibson, L.J. sought ([1995] 1 BCLC at 249) to summarize the principles in relation to derivative actions concerning companies in the following terms (omitting passages not relevant for our purposes):

> "The general principles governing actions in respect of wrongs done to a company or irregularities in the conduct of its affairs are not in dispute:
> 1. The proper plaintiff is prima facie the company.
>
> 3. There are however recognised exceptions, one of which is where the wrongdoer has control which is or would be exercised to prevent a proper action being brought against the wrongdoer: in such a case the shareholder may bring a derivative action (his rights being derived from the company) on behalf of the company.
> 4. When a challenge is made to the right claimed by a shareholder to bring a derivative action on behalf of the company, it is the duty of the court to decide as a preliminary issue the question whether or not the plaintiff should be allowed to sue in that capacity.
>
> 5. In taking that decision it is not enough for the court to say that there is no plain and obvious case for striking out; it is for the shareholder to establish to the satisfaction of the court that he should be allowed to sue on behalf of the company.

114 Mr. Chapman relied in particular on the second part of 5 above, namely that it is for the shareholder to establish to the satisfaction of the court that he should be allowed to sue on behalf of the company. He submitted not simply that this places the onus on the shareholder, which we accept, but that it means that the shareholder must establish his ability to sue on the balance of probabilities. He says that Barrett changed the test set out in Prudential (28), with its reference to a prima facie case.

115 We are unable to place such weight on the decision in Barrett. Peter Gibson, L.J. was simply recording general principles, which were not in dispute. We do not think that it assists on how a shareholder satisfies the court that he should be allowed to sue on behalf the company. What is made clear, however, in the first part of 5 above is that the court should not apply the normal strike out test. It is therefore inconsistent with the approach which the judge adopted in the present case.

116 It is perhaps of note that the relevant provisions of the English Companies Act set out a number of factors which the court should consider when deciding whether it should allow a derivative action, but the matter is ultimately left to the court as a matter of evaluation. In our judgment, that approach is consistent with the observation of Lord Collins ("the underlying question is whether the circumstances are sufficiently special to make it just for the beneficiary to have the remedy") and Lord Walker ("the unifying factor—what has to be special about the circumstances—is that the derivative action is needed to avoid injustice") in Roberts v. Gill (30) quoted above in relation to special circumstances.

117 It is clear that, whether the matter is being considered on a strike out application or on the trial of a preliminary issue, the court should not hold a mini trial in order to decide whether the criterion in s.33(3) is met. However, it should, as in the present case, permit the parties to adduce affidavit evidence on the topic. Ultimately, the court must then reach a view on the material provided to it.

118 Whilst reference to a "good arguable case" may in some cases be a helpful criterion, in our judgment the task is ultimately an evaluative one. The court must decide, on the basis of the material before it, whether the likelihood of the general partner having failed or refused to institute proceedings without cause is sufficient to lead the court to conclude that a derivative action should be permitted in the interests of justice. In reaching this evaluative conclusion, the court will no doubt have regard, inter alia, to the strength of the evidence that the general partner has failed or refused to institute proceedings without cause, the strength of the underlying claim which is sought to be brought and the likelihood and nature of any injustice if the derivative claim is not permitted.

119 For these reasons, we respectfully disagree with the judge that, because this was a strike out application, the burden was on the defendants and he only had to consider whether it was merely arguable that the plaintiffs met the statutory criterion in s.33(3). That was to set the bar too low. It follows that, as Mr. Chapman submitted, he erred in this respect.

120 However, we have before us the same affidavit evidence that was before the judge and accordingly we propose to reach our own decision, applying the approach we have just described.

Timing

121 As occurred in this case, and as will invariably be the position, given that there is no requirement for leave before commencing an action in reliance on s.33(3), the hearing of a strike-out application or a preliminary issue as to whether the claim falls within s.33(3) will take place at some point after the action is begun. The question then arises as to whether the court should assess compliance with s.33(3) by reference to the facts at the time of commencement of the action or as at the date of the hearing of the strike out or preliminary issue.

122 The judge held (2022 (1) CILR 12, at paras. 127–128) that the question of whether the general partner had failed or refused to bring a claim without cause was to be judged on the relevant facts as they were at the time the proceedings were commenced.

123 The plaintiffs support the judge's decision. They point out that the words "failed or refused" in s.33(3) are in the past tense, which suggests that the relevant failure or refusal must have taken place before the date of institution of the derivative claim.

124 We do not agree with the judge's decision on this point, essentially for the reasons advanced by Mr. Chapman. The plaintiffs' approach would require the court to ignore anything that has happened between the institution of the proceedings and the hearing of the relevant strike out application/preliminary issue. This could lead to highly unsatisfactory results. Thus, suppose that, after the institution of the proceedings, a new general partner was appointed with completely separate ownership, so there was no longer any question of an inhibition or conflict of interest. Suppose further that the new general partner has reviewed the alleged claim and decided in good faith on commercial grounds to maintain the decision of the former general partner not to institute proceedings against the alleged wrongdoer.

125 In our judgment, the legislature cannot have intended that the court should allow a derivative claim to proceed in circumstances where, as at the date of the hearing of the strike out or preliminary issue, the requirements of s.33(3) are not met because, for example, any inhibition of the general partner has disappeared. In our judgment, the natural meaning of s.33(3) is that the court should consider the issue of whether the requirements of the subsection are met by reference to the facts as they are at the time of the hearing of the strike out or preliminary issue. Mr. Allison submitted that the court could surmount any difficulty which his construction of s.33(3) might cause by taking any change of circumstances into account when considering whether to exercise its discretion to allow the derivative claim to proceed. However, we do not see that as a satisfactory solution, nor is it in our view consistent with the natural meaning of s.33(3).

126 Whilst by no means determinative—because the legislation is not the same—we note that in England and Wales, in the context of derivative actions for companies, the court does take into account events which have occurred between the institution of the proceedings and the hearing before the court as to whether the derivative action should be allowed to proceed: see, for example, the decision of Newey, J. in Kleanthous v. Paphitis (18), where the judge placed great weight on the fact that, since the institution of the proceedings, the company had appointed a special committee of independent directors which had decided that the company should not bring or continue the claim which the plaintiff was seeking to bring derivatively.

127 In our judgment therefore, a judge hearing a strike out application or preliminary issue in relation to an ELP should consider whether the test in s.33(3) is met by reference to the facts as they appear at the time of the relevant hearing.

Pleading

128 In relation to the derivative claim against D1, para. 25 of the ASOC pleads:

> "In the alternative, if and to the extent that the claims set out in this Statement of Claim (or any of them) are properly regarded as and/or must be brought as derivative claims on behalf of TPF, the Plaintiffs will contend that Port Link has without cause failed to initiate proceedings on behalf of TPF against itself (and there is no real prospect of it doing so) such that the requirements of section 33(3) of the Exempted Limited Partnership Act (2020 Revision) (the 'ELP Act') are satisfied, such that the Plaintiffs should be permitted to prosecute the relevant claims on behalf of and in the name of TPF."

129 In relation to the derivative claims against D2, D3 and D4, para. 25B of the ASOC pleads:

> "The balance of the claims against Mr Williams and Wellspring and the claim against KGLI Asia are brought by the Plaintiffs as derivative claims on behalf of TPF in circumstances where Port Link has without cause failed to initiate proceedings on behalf of TPF against those parties and there is no real prospect of it doing so. Not only did Port Link fail to commence such claims; as described in paragraph 4 above, it deliberately withheld from the Limited Partners the information upon which the claims are based. In the premises, the requirements of section 33(3) of the ELP Act are satisfied such that the Plaintiffs should be permitted to prosecute these claims on behalf of and in the name of TPF."

130 The judge held (2022 (1) CILR 12, at para. 127) that para. 25B of the ASOC was sufficient to enable the defendants to understand the gist of the case, which had also been factually set out in the detailed evidence filed in the strike out applications.

131 That conclusion was criticized by Mr. Chapman. He submitted that it was necessary for a limited partner to plead the facts and matters relied upon as allowing the limited partner to bring a derivative claim pursuant to s.33(3) and that the particulars in this case were wholly inadequate to serve that purpose. Thus, there was no pleading of the facts and matters relied upon to show that D1 as general partner was under an inhibition or suffered from a conflict of interest.

132 Mr. Allison, on the other hand, submitted that the facts and matters relied upon emerged with sufficient clarity from the detailed allegations of wrongdoing against D1 and the other defendants set out in the ASOC.

133 In our judgment, the ASOC was inadequately pleaded in this respect. In Roberts v. Gill (30), Lord Walker, in relation to a derivative claim on the grounds of special circumstances concerning an estate or trust, said this (2011] 1 A.C. 240, at para. 103):

> "So while he need not obtain prior leave from the court, he must plead the special circumstances entitling him to the court's indulgence. Those special circumstances are part of his cause of action."

134 In our judgment, the position is analogous in cases brought pursuant to s.33(3). There is no requirement for leave but a limited partner may only bring a claim where the general partner has failed or refused to bring proceedings without cause. The failure or refusal without cause is part of the cause of action brought by the limited partner and must therefore be pleaded. In our judgment, it is not sufficient simply to plead the wording of s.33(3) as was done by the plaintiffs in this case. A limited partner must plead the facts and matters relied upon as showing that he comes within the provisions of s.33(3).

135 What is relied upon by the plaintiffs in this case is that D1 as general partner is under a clear inhibition arising from its conflict of interest. The facts and matters relied upon as showing that this was so should therefore have been pleaded. Accordingly, we differ from the judge's assessment that the pleading was adequate. However, we are satisfied that no prejudice has been caused to the defendants by this failure. As the judge correctly stated, the points of issue emerge very clearly from the evidence filed during the strike out applications and it is clear that the defendants knew the case which they had to meet. We therefore decline to decide this case on a technical pleading point, although we emphasize, for the future, that simply pleading that a claim is brought pursuant to s.33(3) is not sufficient and that a plaintiff must plead the facts and matters relied upon as showing that he falls within the subsection.

Need for a request to sue

136 It is common ground that the plaintiffs in this case did not request or demand that D1 as general partner bring proceedings against D2–D4. Mr. Chapman submits that there must be such a request before a general partner can be said to have failed or refused to bring such proceedings. We agree that the word "refused" implies the existence of a request. However, this is not so in relation to the word "failed." A general partner can be said to have "failed" to bring proceedings if he simply has not brought such proceedings.

137 Whilst it will often be the case that, before instituting derivative proceedings under s.33(3), a limited partner will have requested the general partner to institute the relevant proceedings, it is not a necessary pre-condition that he has done so. In this case, it is perfectly apparent from the evidence that D1 has not brought the relevant proceedings and has no intention of doing so. As outlined earlier, it has reached a decision not to institute proceedings even following the change in the board of directors by the appointment of the FFP directors. The requirement of s.33(3) that the general partner has failed to bring proceedings on behalf of TPF has obviously been satisfied.

Discretion

138 It is well established in other contexts that the court has a discretion whether or not to allow a derivative claim even where the relevant ground for the bringing of such an action (e.g. an exception to the rule in Foss v. Harbottle (11) in the case of companies and "special circumstances" in the case of trusts or limited partnerships) is met. Although there is no reference to the existence of a discretion in s.33(3) itself, the judge considered that he had such a discretion and it was common ground before us that there is such a discretion.

139 Thus, even if it be satisfied that a plaintiff can bring himself within s.33(3), the court may in its discretion decide that he should not be permitted to continue the derivative claim. One relevant factor in the exercise of this discretion is likely to be whether the plaintiff has an alternative remedy, so that a derivative action is not required in order to avoid injustice.

Summary

140 Pulling the threads of the above discussion together, we would attempt to summarize our conclusions in relation to s.33(3) as follows:

(i) There is no requirement for leave to bring derivative proceedings under s.33(3). A limited partner may simply institute such proceedings.

(ii) A limited partner must however plead the facts and matters relied upon as showing that he can bring himself within the requirements of the subsection because this forms an essential part of his cause of action.

(iii) If a defendant wishes to raise an issue as to the standing of a limited partner to bring such derivative proceedings, he should do so by means of a strike out application or seek the trial of a preliminary issue.

(iv) Whichever of these routes is chosen does not affect the test which has to be applied in deciding whether s.33(3) is complied with and whether a limited partner should be permitted to continue with the derivative claim.

(v) The decision of the court on such an application or preliminary issue is determinative (subject to appeal). If the court holds that the derivative claim may be continued, the limited partner thereafter has the necessary standing to pursue the claim. It is not an issue which is deferred until or revisited at trial (save possibly in the context of costs at the end of the trial).

(vi) The court should not conduct a mini trial as to whether the requirements of s.33(3) are satisfied. The court has to reach its decision on the basis of the material before it, which will be more limited than it will be following discovery and trial.

(vii) At the hearing, the onus is on the limited partner to satisfy the court that the requirements of s.33(3) are met. Reference to "onus" is not to be mistaken as a reference to a "burden" in the sense of having to show something on the balance of probabilities.

(viii) The essential task for the court at such a hearing is to determine whether the limited partner has brought himself within the terms of s.33(3), namely that the general partner has failed or refused to bring the relevant proceedings without cause.

(ix) In determining this issue, the court is likely to be assisted by consideration of whether special circumstances (as developed in cases concerning trusts, limited partnerships and other entities) exist, but the court's task remains one of applying the statutory test set out in s.33(3).

(x) Whilst reference to a "good arguable case" may be a helpful indicator of the level of comfort which the court should have when deciding whether the requirements of s.33(3) are met, the court's task is essentially an evaluative one having regard to the facts as they appear to the court at that stage of the proceedings from the material before the court and the need to avoid injustice balanced with the need to respect the fact that a derivative action is an exception to the general principle in the ELPA that management (including decisions as to litigation) of an ELP is for the general partner, not the limited partners. As stated at para. 118 above, the court should consider, inter alia, the strength of the evidence that the general partner has failed or refused to institute proceedings without cause, the strength of the underlying claim which is sought to be brought and the likelihood and nature of any injustice if the derivative claim is not permitted.

(xi) The court should reach its decision as to standing by reference to the facts as they appear at the date of the hearing of the strike out or preliminary issue.

(xii) Even where the requirements of s.33(3) are met, the court has a discretion as to whether to permit a derivative claim to continue. One of the factors which is likely to be relevant in exercising that discretion is whether the plaintiff has an alternative remedy.

Application to the facts

(a) The claim against D1

141 It is to be recalled that, as described at para. 75 above, a derivative action allows a party to bring a claim in the name of and on behalf of a second party against a third party for loss and damage caused to the second party. It follows that the second party must have a claim against the third party before the first party can be permitted to bring such a claim derivatively.

142 Ms. Stanley submits that, regardless of whether the test in s.33(3) is otherwise met (i.e. that D1 is subject to an inhibition which makes its decision in relation to potential proceedings one which is without cause), there is a more fundamental reason why the derivative claim against D1 should be struck out, namely that, on the judge's finding, the ELP has suffered no loss or damage and therefore has no claim of its own to bring.

143 The judge said (2022 (1) CILR 12, at para. 63):

> "It follows that where an ELP is alleged to have suffered loss, as in this case, that is the loss of each of the limited partners. There is no distinct or separate loss in respect of 'the partnership' (TPF), which as an entity does not exist at law."

144 To similar effect is the decision of Cooke, J. in Henderson (13) in relation to limited partnerships ([2012] EWHC 3259 (Comm), at paras. 28–32). Thus at para. 28 he said:

> "The Partnership, unlike a limited company, does not possess a corporate legal personality. Like an ordinary partnership under the Partnership Act, 'the Partnership' is simply a convenient way of referring to the body of partners as a whole. In my judgment therefore, no difficulty arises for a Limited Partner's claim against the General Partner, regardless of whether or not removal and substitution of the General Partner is possible. The claim to be made against the General Partner is that of the individual Limited Partners and is not a Partnership Asset. Each Limited Partner has its own contractual or fiduciary claim for its own loss, where the inter-relationship with the General Partner is governed by the RPA. The Partnership, which consists of the Limited Partners and the General Partner together has no form of joint right or claim against the General Partner, as the claimants suggest." [Emphasis added.]

145 We are not to be taken as agreeing that this is correct. As already stated, s.16(1) of the Act provides that the general partner will hold the assets of the ELP upon trust. In the case of a trust, whilst a beneficiary undoubtedly has a direct claim against the trustee for breach of trust, the appropriate remedy (as discussed above by reference to Target v. Redferns (38)) is for an order that the trustee restore the trust fund to what it would have been had the breach not been committed. Such a claim may be brought by one or more beneficiaries, but a successor trustee will often bring such a claim against a former trustee for breach of trust on behalf of the trust as a whole and will hold any sums recovered from the former trustee upon the terms of the trust. Thus, even though like an ELP, a trust is not a separate legal entity, it can properly be said that the trust as well as a beneficiary has a claim against a trustee for breach of trust and that such a claim can be considered as an asset of the trust. It seems to us strongly arguable that the position is the same in relation to an ELP, particularly given that the general partner is also a trustee.

146 However, there has been no respondents' notice in respect of the above finding of the judge and indeed the plaintiffs have not sought to argue that the judge was wrong in this respect. What they say is that the judge was correct in what he said (2022 (1) CILR 12, at para. 64) where, immediately following the passage quoted above in para. 143 above from para. 63, he said:

"64 I therefore find that the direct claims in respect of the individual partners' losses are vested in the limited partners alone, and are not claims that can be brought on behalf of TPF derivatively, except in the circumstances permitted by s.33(3) of the ELPA where the limited partners who wish to obtain redress for TPF are in effect put in the place of the GP, and bring claims on behalf of TPF." [Emphasis in original.]

147 With respect to the learned judge we cannot accept that s.33(3) permits a claim in such circumstances. The subsection presupposes that there is a claim to be brought by the general partner on behalf of the partnership. If, as the judge held, the partnership has no claim against the general partner, there can be no failure by the general partner to bring such a claim without cause.

148 Even if we are wrong on this point, there is a second reason for not permitting the derivative claim against D1 as a matter of discretion; that is because the plaintiffs as limited partners have an adequate alternative remedy.

149 As we have held earlier in this judgment, a limited partner has the right to claim against a general partner for breach of duty on the part of the general partner. In the event of such a claim succeeding, the appropriate remedy will almost certainly not be an award of equitable compensation to the particular limited partners who have sued (thereby potentially causing difficulties in relation to those who have not also joined in the action and in respect of creditors of the ELP), but instead an order that the general partner restore the trust fund as outlined in Target v. Redferns.

150 In these circumstances, exactly the same will be achieved by a direct claim as would be the case in a derivative action. In the event of the plaintiffs succeeding in their direct claim, the estate of the ELP will be made whole by payment from the general partner pursuant to an order for restoration of the trust fund. Success in a derivative action would have the same result. Accordingly, there is simply no need for a derivative action; it would add nothing to the direct claims brought by the limited partners coupled with an order for restoration of the trust fund in the event of such claims succeeding. Indeed, during oral argument, Mr. Allison accepted that, if the plaintiffs have a valid direct claim against D1 for which restoration of the trust fund can be awarded, there would be no need for the derivative action. In those circumstances, we conclude that, as a matter of discretion, the derivative claim against D1 should not be permitted.

151 Accordingly, for both of the above reasons, we strike out the derivative claim of the plaintiffs against D1.

(b) The claims against D2–D4

152 We have described the claims brought against the various defendants at paras. 13–16 above. The relevant features for present purposes can be summarized as follows:

(i) The plaintiffs invested some 65% of the total amount invested in TPF.

(ii) Other limited partners, who invested 15.14%, have instituted broadly similar claims against D2 and D3 in the State of Georgia, USA. Thus a total of 80.3% by value of limited partners are litigating on the basis of alleged serious wrongdoing on the part of the GP.

(iii) Of the remaining 19.7% (by value), 14% are associated with the GP.

(iv) The plaintiffs allege that D1 as the general partner has been guilty of wrongdoing which has caused TPF loss said to be well in excess of US$100m.

(v) The claims against D1 essentially allege that, in breach of its fiduciary, contractual and other duties, it acted contrary to the interests of TPF and the limited partners by making substantial payments, using TPF's moneys, that were not for the benefit of TPF and/or the limited partners.

Amongst these is the alleged sham settlement of the DIFC proceedings brought against it in the DIFCC as a result of which the Wellspring payment of US$59,990,461.30 was paid to D3. The ASOC alleges that D1 conspired with, amongst others, D2 (Mr. Williams) and D3 (Wellspring) to cause loss to TPF and/or the limited partners by unlawful means in relation to the DIFC proceedings and the Wellspring payment.

(vi) The claims against D2 are that he orchestrated the DIFC proceedings and the Wellspring payment and was accordingly party to the above conspiracy. It is further alleged that he dishonestly assisted in D1's breach of trust/fiduciary duty, knowingly procured D1 to breach its contractual duties and was in breach of fiduciary duties he owed to TPF and/or D1.

(vii) The claims against D3 are for knowing receipt of the Wellspring payment, conspiracy in relation to the Wellspring payment and the DIFC proceedings and for repayment of the Wellspring payment pursuant to s.4 of the Fraudulent Dispositions Act (1996 Revision).

(viii) The claim against D4 is for knowing receipt in respect of a number of payments said to have been made to it in breach of trust and/or fiduciary duty by D1 as general partner.

153 The judge held (2022 (1) CILR 12, at para. 106) that s.33(3) required a finding as to whether the GP (i.e. the relevant corporate entity) has failed or refused to institute the proceedings without cause, not the directors at the relevant time. He concluded (ibid., at para. 102) that there was a good arguable case that D1 had and still has a relevant inhibition because it is conflicted in relation to the plaintiffs' claims. Its decision not to bring the claims against D2–D4 was infected and made unsafe by the facts giving rise to its conflict of interest.

154 The underlying facts in relation to the inhibition were not disputed before us and would appear to be as follows:

(i) Mr. Williams, D2, is the sole shareholder of PLH, a Delaware company, which in turn is the sole shareholder of D1. Thus Mr. Williams is the sole ultimate beneficial owner of the general partner of TPF. He was the investment director of TPF's sponsor and placement agent from 2009–2011 and a member of the Investment Committee of TPF from 2009–2013.

(ii) On January 23rd, 2020, he was appointed as the authorized representative of D1 in relation to proceedings against D1 by certain limited partners (including the first plaintiff) pursuant to s.22 of the ELPA seeking disclosure of full information regarding the state of the business and financial condition of TPF. The resolution conferred full authority on Mr. Williams to take all necessary actions in relation to the s.22 proceedings. The application of the limited partners under s.22 was opposed by D1 at a time when the FFP directors were in post and eventually Parker, J. ruled against D1 and ordered it to make disclosure. Thereafter, D1 sought to appeal that decision but the appeal was eventually compromised and D1 agreed to provide the necessary information.

(iii) Mr. Williams is the CEO, CFO, President, Vice-President, Treasurer and Secretary of D3, Wellspring. The company is owned by the Mark E. Williams Living Trust, of which Mr. Williams, his wife and brother are the trustees. The ASOC pleads that it is to be inferred that the beneficiaries are also Mr. Williams' family.

(iv) D4, KGLI Asia is a company incorporated in the Cayman Islands and Mr. Williams was its CEO from January 1st, 2012.

155 As can be seen therefore, Mr. Williams is the ultimate beneficial owner of the GP and has very close connections with Wellspring and KGLI Asia.

156 In considering whether D1 as the general partner would be under an inhibition in relation to the taking of proceedings against D2–D4, it is useful to refer to the case of Henderson (13). The facts of that case are summarized at paras. 83–84 above. Certain limited partners of an English limited partnership sought to bring a derivative action against, inter alia, the manager, who had been appointed by the general partner and was a sister company of the general partner.

157 Cooke, J. held ([2012] EWHC 3259 (Comm), at para. 59) that as a result the general partner had an irreconcilable conflict of interest in relation to whether to institute proceedings against the manager and this constituted "special circumstances" which therefore justified the limited partners being able to bring a derivative claim. In coming to that conclusion, he held that (i) the ability (which was not straightforward) under the limited partnership agreement for the limited partners to remove and replace the general partner, and (ii) the ability of the limited partners to sue the general partner for wrongly failing to institute proceedings against the manager, were not satisfactory alternative remedies so as to refuse the limited partners the ability to bring a derivative claim.

158 We respectfully agree with the decision of Cooke, J. in Henderson. In our judgment there is a similar conflict of interest in the present case. On the plaintiffs' case, D1 as the general partner was deeply involved in all the alleged wrongdoing, as was Mr. Williams. D1 has to decide whether to institute proceedings against D2–D4 in circumstances where:

(i) The essential wrongdoing giving rise to the claims against D2–D4 was that of D1 itself in making the various payments and where it is said to be part of the unlawful means conspiracy to injure TPF involving Mr. Williams and Wellspring.

(ii) The contemplated proceedings would have to be brought against the beneficial owner of the GP and against two companies in which Mr.

Williams is deeply and closely involved, namely Wellspring and KGLI Asia.

(iii) D1 would also have to consider whether (as general partner) it should sue itself (in its own right) as a co-conspirator in the alleged unlawful means conspiracy.

159 On the face of it, by reason of the obvious and serious conflict of interest, D1 is under an inhibition which would amount to special circumstances in the context of a trust or limited partnership and this inhibition also means that the failure by D1 to bring proceedings against D2–D4 is without cause for the purposes of s.33(3).

160 However, the defendants say that this is not the position for two associated reasons. First, they point out that the present directors of D1, namely the FFP directors, are wholly independent and were not in office at the time of the alleged wrongdoing on the part of D1. They do not therefore suffer from any conflict of interest. They are in a position to bring an independent and impartial view to bear on whether claims should be brought against D2–D4 and in this respect are in the same position as a liquidator of a company who has to decide whether to bring a claim against former directors or other parties for injury caused to a company. The defendants point out that, as summarized in the third affidavit of Mr. Lewis, the FFP directors have reviewed the position thoroughly with the benefit of legal advice and have concluded that the interests of TPF are best served by not instituting any claims against D2–D4 for the reasons there set out.

161 It is clear, submit the defendants, that the court must give great weight to the commercial judgment of those who have responsibility for the management of the relevant entity under the constitutive documents; see for example the observation of the Lewison, J. in Iesini (17) quoted at para. 77 above.

162 Secondly, they submit that the independence of the FFP directors is fortified by the fact that Mr. Williams has given an undertaking that the shareholder of the GP will not exercise any powers so as to remove the FFP directors or interfere in any way in the exercise of their functions. Thus, submit the defendants, the FFP directors are, and are seen to be, free to act independently.

163 In our judgment, these submissions do not overcome the inhibition referred to earlier. In relation to the first point, the judge was in our view correct to focus on the entity which is the general partner rather than the directors for the time being of that entity. Section 33(3) refers to the "general partner" having failed or refused to bring proceedings without cause. The general partner is the legal entity D1. D1 is subject to the conflicts of interest we have summarized above and thus cannot be seen to be in a position to take a fair and independent decision about the potential litigation. New directors are not in the same position as a liquidator, who is appointed by and subject to the supervision of the court and therefore clearly is and is seen to be independent of the company, its directors and shareholders. The FFP directors owe a fiduciary duty to act in the best interests of D1. The defendants submitted that because D1 owes fiduciary duties to act in the best interests of the partnership, the FFP directors therefore have a duty to act in the best interests of TPF. However, there is certainly the potential for conflict between acting in the best interests of TPF (which might include taking action against D1 as a co-conspirator) and acting in the best interests of D1 (which might be said to include the avoidance of being sued).

164 In connection with the undertaking, we were referred to the case of St. John's Trust Co. (PVT) Ltd. v. Medlands (PTC) Ltd. (31) ("B Trust"), a decision of the Court of Appeal of Bermuda. That was a case which involved a number of issues but for present purposes it is sufficient to say that one of the issues before that court was whether it would be appropriate to reappoint St. John's Trust Co. (PVT) Ltd. ("SJTC") as trustee of the B Trust. SJTC was wholly owned by a company, Cabarita, which was in turn wholly owned by a Mr. T. Mr. T was said to have misappropriated funds from the B Trust and there were ongoing proceedings against him in this respect.

165 Mr. T had appointed two independent directors of SJTC and, before the Bermuda Court of Appeal, he proffered an undertaking not to interfere with the appointment of these two individuals. Despite this, the Bermuda Court of Appeal held ([2021] CA (Bda) 20 Civ, at para. 62) that it was clearly not appropriate for SJTC to be trustee. It would be contrary to the interests of the beneficiaries for Mr. T to have any control or influence over the B Trust. This would be possible, despite his undertaking, by reason of his ownership of Cabarita which owned SJTC. The undertaking did not meet the fundamental issue of Mr. T's potential influence.

166 Mr. Chapman sought to distinguish B Trust on three grounds. First, he pointed out that Mr. Williams is only an indirect beneficial owner of D1, but that was also the case in B Trust as Mr. T owned Cabarita which owned SJTC. Secondly, he referred to the undertaking by Mr. Williams not to interfere. However, an undertaking was also given by Mr. T in B Trust and this did not persuade the Bermuda Court of Appeal that his potential influence was thereby negated. Thirdly, he submitted that B Trust was concerned with whether there might be interference in the future by Mr. T whereas the present case was concerned with a decision (namely not to issue proceedings) which had already been taken. However, we do not see that this is a significant point of difference. The fact is that the decision as to whether to institute proceedings on behalf of TPF involved consideration by the GP of whether to sue itself as an alleged co-conspirator and whether to sue its beneficial owner and two closely linked companies in circumstances where the claims were said to arise on the basis of the wrongdoing of the GP and its beneficial owner.

167 We find the reasoning of the Court of Appeal of Bermuda to be persuasive. In our judgment, the undertaking given by Mr. Williams is insufficient to overcome the inhibition from which D1 as general partner suffers. If one stands back and considers how it would appear to the plaintiffs (who allege that there has been serious wrongdoing by D1–D4 which has cost TPF over US$100m.) for the decision as to whether to seek recompense from any one or more of D1–D4 to be left in the hands of D1, they would have no confidence that a fair and independent decision had been taken, even following the appointment of the FFP directors. In our judgment, they would be justified in this lack of confidence. There is no doubt in our view that D1 was and is suffering from an inhibition which leads to the conclusion that, subject to the exercise of any discretion, it is appropriate for the plaintiffs to bring derivative claims on behalf of TPF pursuant to s.33(3) against D2–D4.

168 Given our decision to uphold the judge's conclusion that it is the position of D1 as the general partner which must be considered in relation to any inhibition rather than the position of the directors from time to time, it is not necessary for us to address his finding about the position of the FFP directors. Suffice it to say that, if we had found it necessary to do so, we would have considered that the judge was entitled to reach the conclusions which he did in this respect.

169 As to discretion, the defendants submit that, because the plaintiffs are bringing direct claims against D2 and D3, they have an alternative remedy in respect of those two defendants and there is no need for them to bring a derivative action. They point out that they have not sought to strike out the direct claims against D2 and D3. That is so, but it is of note that footnote 10 at para. 15 of the skeleton argument of D2–D4 states:

> "For the avoidance of doubt, [D2–D4] do not admit that the Respondents, in particular KPA, have standing to bring the direct claims, and expressly reserve the right to challenge the Respondents' standing to bring such claims, including on the basis of a lack of authority in the case of KPA."

170 As stated at para. 67 above, Ms. Stanley asserted in oral argument that the only way to get the proceeds of any successful claim against D2 and D3 into TPF is by way of a derivative claim. Furthermore, despite the defendants' explanation, submitted in response to the draft of this judgment, that footnote 10 was only intended to cover the KPA lack of authority point and the partnership accounting point, the fact remains that the footnote expressly reserves the right to challenge the plaintiffs' standing to bring the direct claims in general terms and the KPA point is merely mentioned by way of inclusion as a ground of challenge. We bear in mind the overriding objective and, in our view, it would be inconsistent with that objective and highly undesirable to run the risk of the court eventually finding against D2 and D3 on the underlying merits of the claims but finding that the plaintiffs did not have standing for the direct claims or that it could not make an order for restoration of the trust fund in the absence of a derivative claim on behalf of TPF. The existence of an alternative remedy is a matter to be taken into account when determining whether to allow a derivative claim to proceed although its existence is not conclusive of the matter; see Henderson (13) ([2012] EWHC 3259 (Comm), at para. 39). In our judgment, whilst we have expressed certain preliminary views at paras. 65–72 above, in the light of the above matters there is sufficient uncertainty about whether the plaintiffs have direct claims against D2 and D3 or whether the court could order restoration of the trust fund on the success of such claims that, as a matter of discretion, it is just and fair to allow the derivative claims to proceed alongside the direct claims so that they are all heard at the same time. If, following a trial, the direct claims are upheld and the court also holds that it can order restoration of the trust fund as a remedy for such claims, then there will be no need to make any award on the derivative claims; if on the other hand the direct claims are found not to be maintainable or restoration of the trust fund cannot be ordered, the derivative claims will be necessary to provide a remedy, assuming that the underlying allegations against the defendants are upheld.

171 We add by way of postscript, that both sides sought to raise arguments based on the position of the Cayman Islands as a leading centre for the establishment of investment funds. Thus the defendants argued that, by setting the bar for derivative actions too low, the judge had rendered it less likely that promoters of investment funds in the form of ELPs would choose the Cayman Islands as the location of their funds because of the comparatively easy exposure to derivative claims.

172 Conversely, the plaintiffs argued that it was important for the reputation of the Cayman Islands as a centre for investment funds that persons who have invested in ELPs should have a remedy when the general partner is alleged to have been guilty of wrongdoing and that a derivative action is the only remedy in such circumstances. It should not therefore be too difficult to bring such an action.

173 Whilst noting these arguments, we have not decided this case by reference to the arguments' respective merits, which are more matters for the legislature. We have confined ourselves to construing s.33(3) in the light of the words used against the background of the law on derivative claims generally.

Summary of conclusions reached on the derivative claims

174 In respect of D1, for the reasons which we have given above, we allow the appeal to the extent of striking out the plaintiffs' derivative claims against it.

175 In relation to the derivative claims against D2–D4, we dismiss the appeals brought by these defendants, with the consequence that the plaintiffs may bring those claims under s.33(3).

The SFC appeal

176 At the hearing below, the GP (D1) applied for security of costs ("SFC") in the sum of US$5,536,025.50 and the sum sought by D2–D4 was US$2,720,000. It is and was common ground that the plaintiffs are both Kuwait state-owned enterprises ordinarily resident out of the jurisdiction and accordingly the judge had jurisdiction to exercise the discretion conferred on the court by GCR O.23 r.1(1), which reads in relevant part:

> "Where, on the application of a defendant to an action or other proceedings it appears to the Court—
> (a) that the plaintiff is ordinarily resident out of the jurisdiction …
> then if, having regard to all the circumstances of the case, the Court thinks it just to do so, it may order the plaintiff to give such security for the defendant's costs of the action or other proceedings as it thinks just."

177 Briefly summarized, the defendants' case was that there were substantial obstacles to the enforcement in Kuwait of an adverse costs order since there was no treaty between Kuwait and the Cayman Islands for the mutual enforcement of judgments and as a matter of Kuwaiti law even a judgment of the Kuwaiti courts was incapable of enforcement against the plaintiffs because they were state entities.

178 In dismissing the SFC applications, the judge began by setting out the legal principles he found to be applicable. He then analysed the principles and applied them to the case before him and then proceeded to give the reasons for his decision. The key elements of this part of his judgment can be summarized as follows:

The applicable principles

179 (i) There is no presumption that the court will ordinarily require a foreign plaintiff to give SFC; rather the discretion "is to be exercised on a case-by-case basis, as the rule states, having regard to all the circumstances of the case"; see In re Cybervest Fund (9) (2006 CILR 80, at para. 24, per Smellie, C.J.) (para. 149).

(ii) The court should follow the guidance on the interpretation of O.23 r.1(1) provided by the following passage in the judgment of Smellie, C.J. in Tasarruf Mevduati Sigorta Fonu v. Wisteria Bay Ltd. (39) (2006 CILR 351, at para. 14) (para. 150):

> "There is no hard and fast rule that every foreign plaintiff must be required to put up security. The matter is one, as already stated, of discretion to be exercised in every case. All the circumstances will be considered including the means and ability of the plaintiff to pay and even, in an appropriate case, the relative strength or weakness of the case for each side provided those factors are clearly discernable from the evidence. See, for these propositions, the leading case of Sir Lindsay Parkinson & Co. Ltd. v. Triplan Ltd. …"

(iii) The court's discretion must be exercised impartially and must not be exercised discriminately; see e.g. Ahmad Hamad Algosaibi & Bros. Co. Ltd. v. Saad Invs. Co. Ltd. (1) (2017 (2) CILR 602, at para. 21) (para. 151).

(iv) The merits of the case will only be relevant if: (i) either party can clearly demonstrate a strong probability of success, or (ii) the court is considering a summary judgment application at the same time (para. 152).

Analysis and application of the principles to this case

(v) In this case, the merits could not be properly determined at this stage (para. 153).

(vi) The issue to be decided was whether the defendants had shown there are objectively justified grounds for concluding that there are obstacles or burdens to the enforcement of a costs order against the plaintiffs, such that there is a real risk of non-enforcement and whether, if there are such real risks, it is just in the circumstances to order security and if so, on what terms (para. 154). (This proposition, like principle (iii) above, is based on AHAB v. Saad, where Smellie, C.J. stated (2017 (2) CILR 602, at paras. 15–16):

> "… the focal concern of the modern case law is not to ensure that a plaintiff is seldom required to provide security or that orders for security are only exceptionally made but to ensure that such orders are not imposed in an arbitrary or discriminatory manner. Accordingly, the making of such orders against a non-resident plaintiff would be appropriate, and may now be justified, not simply on the discriminatory basis of the plaintiff's foreign status but because real risks of unenforceability are shown 'on objectively justified

> 16 This approach dictated by the modern cases is aimed at addressing not only basic tenets of fairness but more particularly, the requirements of the Constitutional Bill of Rights where, in s.16, it is mandated that 'government shall not treat any person in a discriminatory manner in respect of the rights under this Part of the Constitution'—the most directly operative here being that right to a fair and public trial guaranteed by s.7 which states that 'Everyone has the right to a fair and public hearing in the determination of his or her legal rights and obligations by an independent and impartial court within a reasonable time.'"

(vii) Where the plaintiff is a foreign government or state agency, there is a presumption that SFC should not be awarded, although each case will turn on its own facts. The presumption arises from comity and common sense and may be displaced by the evidence; see Tasarruf (39) (2006 CILR 351, at para. 22) (para. 156).

(viii) As Smellie, C.J. observed in Tasarruf, the only modern reported case in which SFC had been ordered against a foreign government was Sierra Leone Govt. v. Davenport (34) where the circumstances were exceptional in that Sierra Leone had recently emerged from a civil war (para. 157).

(ix) PIFSS (the second plaintiff) was the subject of the SFC application determined in Cybervest (9), where PIFSS was petitioning as a shareholder for the winding up of a Cayman incorporated investment fund. In giving judgment in this case, Smellie, C.J. noted that PIFSS had "immensely valuable assets to be regarded as being within the jurisdiction" and so if PIFSS failed to pay an order for costs it would be open to the applicant to seek recourse. The SFC application was dismissed on the grounds that: (a) PIFSS's very valuable shareholding in the fund was to be treated as assets within the jurisdiction; and (b) PIFSS was (2006 CILR 80, at para. 27):

> "a state agency of a foreign government of undoubted resources and enjoying a high reputation in the global financial and commercial community. This is relevant insofar as it would tend to negate any concern that the plaintiff would be unlikely to obey an order for costs made in favour of the respondent."

(x) Security will not be required of a foreign plaintiff who has substantial assets within the jurisdiction: see Cybervest (ibid., at para. 25) (para. 160).

(xi) Where any liability for costs on the plaintiffs' part will inevitably be joint and several, security will not be required if at least one plaintiff has substantial assets within the jurisdiction (para. 160).

(xii) A foreign plaintiff does not have the burden of establishing that it has fixed and permanent property within the jurisdiction (para. 161). See the following extract from the judgment of Lightman, J. in Leyvand v. Amnon Barasch (20) ([2000] WL 191256, at para. 6):

> "The common sense principle applies that the existence of assets within the jurisdiction, their fixity and performance, are among a number of potentially relevant factors, their importance depending on the particular facts of the case. The Court will not infer the existence of a real risk that assets within this country will be dissipated or shipped abroad to avoid their being available to satisfy a judgement for costs unless there is a reason to question the probity of the claimant: there is no such reason in this case. If there is a reason to question the claimant's probity, the character of his property within the jurisdiction is relevant in assessing the risk: the risk may be greater if the property is cash or immediately realisable or transportable, and less if fixed and permanent."

(xiii) Undertakings given by a plaintiff that it will not raise any of the potential defences in their home jurisdiction should an award of costs be made against it would be very persuasive evidence in any court in the plaintiff's home jurisdiction (para. 162). See Sanderson, Ag. J. in Elliott v. Cayman Islands Health Serv. Auth. (10) (2007 CILR 163, at para. 18).

The judge's reasons why, on the application of the foregoing principles, the SFC application would be refused

(xiv) The plaintiffs are both wholly owned by, and are the agents of, the State of Kuwait. There is therefore on the decided cases a rebuttable presumption that security for costs should not be ordered (see Tasarruf (39) (2006 CILR 351, at para. 23)). This presumption has not been rebutted on the evidence adduced. The plaintiffs appeared to have ready access to funds and would be able to satisfy any adverse costs order in a timely manner (paras. 164–166).

(xv) KPA is an internationally recognized commercial organization and relies on its international reputation to do business. Its profit for the financial year 2020–2021 was KWD56,450,000 (about US$187,522,553 based on the exchange rate on August 9th, 2021). The Director General of KPA has confirmed that it has sufficient resources to meet any costs order made against it in these proceedings, and will comply with any such costs orders in a timely fashion, a position that has been reconfirmed by the Kuwaiti Department for Legal Advice and Legislation ("DLAL"). In addition, KPA has provided a written undertaking to this effect to the court on May 27th, 2021 (paras. 167–169).

(xvi) PIFSS is a public institution which administers Kuwait's pension fund for all Kuwaiti citizens in the workforce, both in public and private sectors. It operates independently from the State of Kuwait and has its own budget and board of directors. It has a global investment asset portfolio worth approximately US$133.7bn. (as at March 31st, 2021). Its profit for the period March 2020 to December was US$18.9bn. An officer in PIFSS's Compliance and Government Department had confirmed that PIFSS had sufficient resources to meet any costs order made in these proceedings and will comply with any such orders in a timely fashion. PIFSS has provided a written undertaking to this effect to the court. In addition, PIFSS has been party to several sets of proceedings before the Cayman Islands courts and has never failed to comply with any costs order (paras. 170–172).

(xvii) It would be clearly detrimental to PIFSS's ongoing commercial reputation and business to be in breach of an order of the Cayman Islands courts (para. 173).

(xviii) Accordingly, after a careful consideration of the evidence, the presumption against ordering security against agents of a foreign state has not been rebutted. Accordingly, it would not be just to grant the SFC applications against the plaintiffs (para. 174).

(xix) It is well established that security will not be ordered against a foreign plaintiff who has substantial assets within the jurisdiction (see Cybervest (9)) and PIFSS is such a plaintiff by reason of its interest valued at €35,074,942 as a March 31st, 2021 in the Jermyn Street Commercial Real Estate Fund ("the Jermyn Street Fund"), of which PIFSS is a limited partner (paras. 175–176).

(xx) There is no reason to doubt the probity of PIFSS, which is an agent of the State of Kuwait and familiar with conducting international litigation (including in the Cayman Islands) (para. 177).

(xxi) There is no reason to conclude that PIFSS's interest in the Jermyn Street Fund is encumbered, or not amenable to enforcement if necessary, and no reason to conclude that PIFSS would dispose of or otherwise encumber its interest to attempt to defeat an order as to costs (para. 177).

(xxii) Accordingly, since PIFSS has sufficient assets within the jurisdiction to cover any costs order that is made against the plaintiffs (in respect of which they would be jointly and severally liable), and in circumstances where both plaintiffs have given written undertakings to the court, it would not be just to require the plaintiffs to pay security for costs (even if they were not agents of the State of Kuwait) (para. 178).

(xxiii) In light of the correspondence between Campbells (for D2–D4) and Ogier (for the plaintiffs) there was no basis to form the view that PIFSS would seek to frustrate the enforcement of a cost order against it by disposing of its interest in the Jermyn Street Fund, even if it were able to do so (para. 179).

(xxiv) The enforceability of Cayman Islands judgments in Kuwait does not therefore arise for determination (para. 189).

The case advanced by the GP (D1)

180 (i) By reason of the errors made by the judge in reaching his decision to refuse to order SFC, his decision should be set aside and the SFC summons remitted to another judge of the Grand Court or alternatively the judge himself.

(ii) Although the discretion under GCR O.23, r.1(a) is at large, it can only be properly exercised when all of the circumstances are taken into account, and this the judge failed to do because he did not consider the obstacles of enforcement in Kuwait. Instead, he appears to have been satisfied that the plaintiffs could and would pay adverse costs order without question and the defendants had not proved otherwise.

(iii) The judge erred in principle in proceeding on the basis that there was a presumption that a foreign government or state agency will not be ordered to provide security for costs unless the applicant "rebuts" the presumption. The authorities the judge relied for the presumption—Cybervest (9) and Tasarruf (39)—laid down no such principle. Instead, Smellie, C.J. in the former case decided it on the basis that the court had a wide discretion which fell to be exercised on a case-by-case basis and in the latter case, Smellie, C.J. highlighted that it was all a matter of discretion taking into account all the circumstances. The true ratio was that the court does not apply the rules for SFC differently depending on whether the plaintiff is a state or an individual but on the basis that all plaintiffs who seek to engage the court's jurisdiction must play by the same rules. This, after all, is the position in England (see Sierra Leone (Govt.) v. Davenport (34)) and in Australia (see e.g. Papua New Guinea v. Sandline (26) ([1998] QDC 298, per Andrews, J.) and Ministry of Foreign Affairs (Italy) v. Simeone (23)).

(iv) Where there is joint and several liability between plaintiffs for costs and one of them is in the jurisdiction, it is the practice not to make a SFC order against the plaintiff who is resident outside the jurisdiction if it is inevitably to be inferred by the court that there will be joint liability for costs between the plaintiffs. Assuming that this practice can apply to a situation where both plaintiffs are outside the jurisdiction but one has substantial assets within the jurisdiction, D1 submits that there were no sufficient grounds for the judge to have concluded that the plaintiffs would be jointly and severally liable for the costs. Indeed, D1 pleads a defence against KPA that it commenced and carried on its claims against them without due authority, and ratification of these acts is not possible under Kuwaiti law.

(v) The judge erred in taking into account the confirmation from the Director General of KPA, Mr. Al-Sabah, which was related to Mr. Florent, who in turn related it in para. 18 of his third affidavit, that KPA had sufficient resources to meet a costs order made against it in these proceedings, and would comply with any such costs order in a timely fashion. Mr. Florent's third affidavit was sworn on August 27th, 2021 but Mr. Al Sabah had been suspended from the position of Director General of KPA by the Minister of Commerce and Industry on October 24th, 2021 pending investigations of "violations" attributed to him. The expert evidence before the judge was that during his suspension Mr. Al-Sabah was not authorized to represent KPA in any capacity or exercise any powers on behalf of KPA.

(vi) The judge erred in treating the letters he called "undertakings" to pay an adverse costs order as if they were indeed "undertakings" when they were merely "comfort letters" since they contained the words, "Without prejudice to the exercise of KPA's legal rights" and stated "we confirm that KPA will comply with any final and binding costs orders …" Even if the letters had contained express undertakings on behalf of the plaintiffs to pay an adverse costs order, the judge should have considered whether there remained a significant risk that such a costs order would not be paid and gone on to find that there was such a risk because the undertaking could only be enforced by committal or sequestration proceedings in the jurisdiction and such an order would not be enforceable in any other court. Nor was it clear that the comfort letters would be enforced by the courts of Kuwait.

(vii) The judge erred in placing reliance on the evidence given in Mr. Florent's third affidavit to the effect that PIFSS had never failed to comply with any costs order made in proceedings before the courts of the Cayman Islands when there was no evidence that any adverse costs order had ever been made against PIFSS in any Cayman Island proceedings. What the judge should have done was to require production of examples of Cayman Islands costs orders that had been honoured by PIFSS.

(viii) The judge made the following errors in giving the weight he did to PIFSS's assets within the jurisdiction:

(a) He stated that the plaintiff does not have the burden of establishing that it has fixed and permanent property within the jurisdiction when that burden in fact lay upon the plaintiffs and he should have taken note of the fact that PIFSS's interest in the Jermyn Street Fund was not of a fixed or permanent nature but was in the nature of a receivable in the event that a distribution were to be made and/or the Fund were wound up.

(b) He was wrong to consider whether there was any reason to doubt the probity of PIFSS when the question to be considered was whether there was a real risk that the assets in the jurisdiction may not be available if and when a case of enforcement arises; see Butcher, J. in PJSC Tatneft v. Bogolyubov (25) ([2019] Costs L.R. 977, at para. 49) and Henshaw, J. in Pisante v. Logothetis (27) ([2020] EWHC 3332 (Comm), at paras. 65–66).

Discussion and decision

181 We deal first with D1's submission that the judge erred in proceeding on the basis there was a presumption that a foreign government or state agency will not be ordered to provide security for costs unless the applicant "rebuts" the presumption.

182 The principal authority relied on by the judge for the aforesaid presumption was Tasarruf (39). Here, as related in Smellie, C.J.'s judgment (2006 CILR 351, at paras. 2–3), in that case, the plaintiff was a Turkish state entity authorized by statute to recover deficiencies in the accounts of insolvent banks by, among other things, the seizure and sale of the assets of their managers, shareholders or auditors. This authorization was given as part of a regulatory scheme to protect depositors against bank failure. In March 2004, the plaintiff seized in Turkish waters two motor yachts registered in the Cayman Islands Shipping Registry in the names of the corporate defendants. These yachts were said to belong to the controlling shareholders of a leading Turkish bank now in the administration of the plaintiff. In December 2004, the plaintiff brought an action in the Grand Court to prevent the completion of registration of mortgages for amounts in excess of their total value, granted against each vessel in favour of the third defendant in person.

183 On the question whether the plaintiff should be ordered to provide SFC, in Tasarruf the Chief Justice said that the fundamental question was whether an agency of a friendly foreign state, enjoying good standing in the international community and which has invoked the jurisdiction of this court, should be required to put up security for a defendant's costs of the action (ibid., at para. 14). In earlier times there had been a practice that a foreign plaintiff should be ordered to provide SFC[14] but given the changes to the Rules since then and the discretionary nature of the exercise requiring the court to consider all the circumstances, a modern and different approach where the plaintiff is a foreign state, was discernible from the judgments in Banco Economico S.A. v. Allied Leasing & Fin. Corp. (3) and Ministère de la Culture &c. de France v. Lielb (22) ([1981] 1 WLUK 253, at paras. 16–18). This modern principle (ibid., at para. 22) was—

14 See e.g. Costa Rica (Republic) v. Erlanger (8).

"that where the plaintiff is the government (or a state agency) of a foreign state enjoying good standing in the international community (in particular from this court's point of view, enjoying diplomatic relations with H.M. Government) it should be assumed as a matter of comity and common sense, in the absence of anything to the contrary, that it will honour its obligations for costs made against it. Nonetheless, as the question remains one to be decided on a case by case basis in the discretion of the court, an order for security for costs could undoubtedly be made against a foreign state in appropriate circumstances."

184 In Banco Economico S.A. v. Allied Leasing & Fin. Corp. (3), the plaintiff, a Brazilian bank, itself in liquidation and under the control of a liquidator appointed by the Brazilian Government, petitioned for the winding up of the respondent. Mr. Justice Smellie (as he then was) was of the prima facie view that there was merit in the petition (1998 CILR at 112–113) and he concluded:

"that the proper balance is struck when account is taken of the consideration that the petitioner is now under the control of a liquidator who is appointed by the Brazilian Government. Even in the ordinary case, the fact of insolvency will not by itself dictate an order for security. When the entity is a large bank, as the petitioner is, any such presumption becomes even less appropriate as grounds for ordering security for costs: see Dartmouth Harbour Commrs. v. Mayor of Dartmouth Hardness … and the notes in 1 The Supreme Court Practice 1997, para. 23/1–3/13, at 412.

Although Ms. Collins (who argued the aspect of the matter for the petitioner) had no instructions to give an undertaking as to costs, I have nothing at all before me to support any suggestion that the Brazilian Government would not ensure that its obligations for costs (to be incurred if its appointed officer proves unsuccessful before this court) would not be honoured. In the interest of comity, I would consider that any presumptions would arise in favour of such obligations being met and not the other way around. The rule in the Dartmouth Harbour Commrs. case applies, a fortiori, to the present circumstances."

185 As related at para. 179 (ix) above, Cybervest (9) concerned a petition to wind up a fund incorporated in the Cayman Islands presented by PIFSS which faced a SFC application. In his judgment, Smellie, C.J. said (2006 CILR 80, at paras. 22–24):

"The wording of [O.23, r.1(1)] plainly reveals the wide discretion to be exercised in the making of an order.

> 23 The wording does not admit any judicial policy that would mandate the making of an order simply because the plaintiff is a foreign plaintiff; the requirement that the plaintiff is ordinarily resident outside the jurisdiction is simply a pre-condition to the making of an order under the particular O.23, r.1(1)(a). It is a precondition just like those stipulated in (b)–(d), the other sub-rules, which are aimed at plaintiffs who may not ordinarily reside out of the jurisdiction …
> 24 … I would simply add that discretion is to be exercised on a case-by-case basis, as the rule states, having regard to all the circumstances of the case."

186 After noting the significant fact that PIFSS had immensely valuable assets (its shares in the fund PIFSS was seeking to have wound up) that were to be regarded as being within the jurisdiction, Smellie, C.J. went on to say (ibid., at para. 27):

> "Another circumstance, of some weight, is the fact that the petitioner is a state agency of a foreign government of undoubted resources and enjoying a high reputation in the global financial and commercial community. This is relevant insofar as it would tend to negate any concern that the plaintiff would be unlikely to obey an order for costs made in favour of the respondent. To my mind, it also addresses the concern raised by Mr. Farrow, that efforts to enforce an order in Kuwait, if it ever came to that, could be met with a plea of state immunity."

187 The judge supported his statement in his judgment (2022 (1) CILR 12, at para. 165) that there was a rebuttable presumption that SFC should not be ordered by reason of the plaintiffs being the agent of, and wholly owned by, the State of Kuwait by footnote 28 which reads "TMSF v. Wisteria Bay Ltd. … (2006 CILR 351, at para. 23)." However, it is clear that the paragraph of the judgment in Tasarruf (39) to which the judge intended to refer was para. 22 which reads:

> "Taken together, there is a common practical principle to be discerned from these last cited three cases which is that where the plaintiff is the government (or a state agency) of a foreign state enjoying good standing in the international community (in particular from this court's point of view, enjoying diplomatic relations with H.M. Government) it should be assumed as a matter of comity and common sense, in the absence of anything to the contrary, that it will honour its obligations for costs made against it. Nonetheless, as the question remains one to be decided on a case by case basis in the discretion of the court, an order for security for costs could undoubtedly be made against a foreign state in appropriate circumstances." [Emphasis added.]

188 It was no doubt in light of the emphasized words in this passage that the judge expressed himself as he did in para. 165 of his judgment. In our view, with respect to the judge, the Chief Justice is not to be taken here as laying down a principle based on a presumption that was to prevail unless it was rebutted. We say this having regard to the words used in the following sentence in the quoted passage that stress that the court is exercising a broad discretion on a case-by-case basis. It follows, in our opinion, that the judge erred in law in proceeding as he did on the basis that there was a presumption arising from comity and common sense that security for costs should not be awarded against the plaintiffs, although each case will be decided on its own facts.

189 In our opinion, the approach of the court when dealing with an SFC application against a foreign state or foreign state agency that enjoys good standing in the international community should be that it can treat this as a factor in favour of such of a plaintiff to go into the scales but on the basis that it is just one amongst all the other factors that must be weighed by the court when exercising the discretion conferred upon it.

190 We also accept Ms. Stanley's submission that the judge erred in stating that a foreign plaintiff does not have the burden of establishing that it has fixed and permanent property within the jurisdiction. The judge supported this statement by citing Lightman, J.'s dictum in Leyvand v. Barasch (20) that the court will not infer a real risk that assets within the jurisdiction will be dissipated or moved abroad in the absence of a question over the plaintiff's probity. Whilst the judge clearly intended this statement to apply to a situation where the evidence showed that a foreign plaintiff had property within the jurisdiction but there was nothing or very little about the property's permanency or freedom from encumbrances, we find it to have been too broadly expressed. Evidence that a foreign plaintiff has valuable property within the jurisdiction will obviously be of relevance but the significance of this evidence will depend on all the facts of the case, including any evidence as to the permanency of the property and its freedom from encumbrances (or the lack of such evidence) and other evidence tending to show that the plaintiff can be trusted to honour an adverse costs order. We also respectfully disagree with Lightman, J.'s dictum in Leyland v. Barasch. In our view, the approach adopted by Butcher, J. in PJSC Tatneft v. Bogolyubov (25) ([2019] Costs L.R. 977, at para. 49) and Henshaw, J. in Pisante v. Logothetis (27) ([2020] EWHC 3332 (Comm), at para. 65): "the question is not whether a lack of probity has been shown, but whether there is a real risk that the assets in a Contracting State may no longer be available if and when an asset enforcement arises," is to be preferred.

191 We turn to Ms. Stanley's submission challenging the finding by the judge (2022 (1) CILR 12, at para. 178) that, if the plaintiffs' claims against the defendants all fail, there will be a costs order in respect of which KPA and PIFSS will be jointly and severally liable, the latter having substantial assets within the jurisdiction. Ms. Stanley's submission is based on the contention now pleaded in para. 12 of D1's defence that KPA's claim is a nullity because it was not authorized by the Chairman of KPA, who, as a matter of Kuwaiti law (having regard to KPA's constitution) is the only officer of KPA who can authorize the bringing of claims by the company and who has no authority to delegate this power or to ratify an earlier unauthorized issue of proceedings.

192 D1's defence and counterclaim to KPA's claim was served and filed on January 31st, 2022, over three months after the hearing below. In her skeleton argument for this appeal, Ms. Stanley submits that:

> "As recorded in the evidence [the fourth affidavit of Mr. Lewis] and then set out in the GP's Defence at [12], there is a major factual dispute in this case as between KPA and the Appellants as to whether these proceedings have been commenced and continued on behalf of KPA with its authority (there being no power under Kuwaiti law to ratify proceedings if brought without authority.)"

193 Attention was first drawn to the significance of the plaintiffs being joint and several debtors under an adverse costs order in para. 20 of Mr. Florent's third affidavit, dated August 27th, 2021, where he deposed that he had alerted PIFSS to the possibility that, owing to the joint and several nature of costs orders in the Cayman Islands, it was possible that PIFSS would be required to satisfy any costs order that may be made in these proceedings in full from its own resources.

194 In paras. 42–47 of his fourth affidavit, dated September 17th, 2021, Mr. Lewis deposed that the FFP directors had been sent an opinion of Mr. Omar Al Qahtani of the Turkey office of Al Tamimi & Co. ("the Al Tamimi opinion") stating that only the Chairman of KPA had authority to approve the issuance of proceedings by KPA and this authority was not capable of being delegated; nor could an unauthorized issuance of proceedings be ratified by the KPA's Chairman. Reference was also made to the suspension of Mr. Al Sabah on August 24th, 2021 from his position as Director General KPA.

195 Curious as to how this lack of authority contention was deployed below, the court has perused the skeleton arguments relied on before the judge and the transcript of the oral submissions advanced below by Ms. Stanley for D1, Mr. Chapman for D2–D3 and Mr. Allison for the plaintiffs.

196 In para. 245 of his skeleton argument for the hearing below, Mr. Allison contended that PIFSS had sufficient assets within the jurisdiction to cover any costs order that might be made against the plaintiffs in respect of which they would be jointly and severally liable.

197 Mr. Chapman did not contend in either his skeleton argument or his oral opening submissions that one of the consequences of the Tamimi opinion was that it was not inevitable that if the plaintiffs' claims were dismissed they would both be jointly and severally liable for the costs of the proceedings.

198 Ms. Stanley also did not contend in her skeleton argument or in her opening or closing submissions that, in light of the Tamimi opinion, KPA's claim was a nullity so that it could not be said that it was inevitable that if KPA's and PIFSS's respective claims were dismissed, the plaintiffs would be jointly and severally liable for the costs of the proceedings. Instead, she contended that the effect of the Tamimi opinion was that it undermined the plaintiffs' contention that an adverse costs order would be enforceable in Kuwait and undermined KPA's reliance on assurances given by KPA's Director General, Mr. Al Sabah, both before and after he was suspended from that office, that KPA would honour any costs order made against it.

199 In his oral submissions in reply, Mr. Allison observed that the defendants had not taken the point that it was only one of the plaintiffs, PIFSS, that had assets within the jurisdiction and contended that, even if it had been taken, as Mr. Florent explained in para. 30 of his third affidavit, PIFSS was well aware of the joint and several nature of costs orders so that it may have to pay the whole sum from its own resources. Mr. Allison also submitted that the "lack of authority issue" was not a live issue in the proceedings before the court because there had been no application to strike out KPA's claim on that basis or to seek the determination of a preliminary issue.

200 In the course of his reply submissions made ahead of Ms. Stanley's reply submissions, Mr. Chapman accepted that, if the plaintiffs' claims were dismissed, the likely costs order would be a joint and several one, subject to the possibility that PIFSS might well argue that joint and several liability should not apply if KPA's claim was found to have been brought without authority.

201 Whilst Ms. Stanley had expressly adopted Mr. Chapman's opening oral submissions when she made her own opening oral submissions, she did not adopt the same course when she delivered her oral closing submissions, in the course of which she said she was going to deal just with the Al Tamimi/authority/suspension point and the point she wished to make was not the lack of authority to commence KPA's proceedings but the suspension of Mr. Al Sabah as Director General of KPA and the resulting loss of his authority to provide information to Mr. Florent upon which Mr. Florent had purported to rely in advancing KPA's case.

202 In our judgment, since the point now taken by D1[15] as to the impact of the lack of authority contention on what the judge said (2022 (1) CILR 12, at para. 178) was not taken on behalf of D1 below, when it plainly could have been, it is not open to D1 to take the point in this appeal in support of D1's case that the judge's decision refusing the defendants' SFC applications should be set aside.

203 In our judgment, the errors of the judge identified in paras. 188 and 190 above played such a significant role in the exercise of his discretion (see e.g. paras. 155, 165, 166 and 176) that his decision must be set aside.

204 In these circumstances, it is open to us to exercise the discretion conferred by GCR O.23, r.1(1) and since we have before us all the evidence and the parties' skeleton arguments that were before the judge and the transcript of the oral submissions the judge heard on the SFC issue, we propose to decide whether SFC should or should not be ordered against each of the plaintiffs.

205 We proceed on the assumption that the defendants are correct in their submission that there would be very real difficulties indeed in enforcing in Kuwait costs orders made against the plaintiffs if their claims against the defendants are dismissed.

206 Although it is a necessary condition for the ordering of SFC that there is a real risk that an adverse costs order would not be enforced against the postulated foreign plaintiff in his/its home jurisdiction, this is not a sufficient condition for ordering SFC whatever the other circumstances of the case. Instead, it is open to the court, if there is sufficient evidence to support such a conclusion, to find that there is no real risk that the plaintiff will not honour an adverse costs order and for this reason to decline to order SFC. In our judgment, this is such a case having regard to the following matters.

207 As is common ground, the plaintiffs are agencies of a foreign state, Kuwait, which is of good standing in the international community and enjoys diplomatic relations with HM Government. Further, as related above, an instrumentality of the State of Kuwait, the DLAL, acting by the Head of its International Arbitration and Litigation Sector, sent a formal letter to the judge on behalf not only of KPA and PIFSS but also the State of Kuwait that reads in relevant part:

> "Dear Sirs.
> Cause No. FSD 236 of 2020 (RPJ)—(1) Kuwait Ports Authority and (2) The Public institution for Social Security v (1) Port Link GP Ltd.,

15 See para. 180(iv) above.

(2) Mark Eric Williams, (3) Wellspring Capital Group, Inc and (4) KGL Investment Company Asia (the 'Proceedings')

I am the Head of the International Arbitration and Litigation Sector for the Department of Legal Advice and Legislation (the 'Department') of the State of Kuwait.

One of the responsibilities of the Department is to act as legal adviser to the State of Kuwait as well as to certain State entities and/or incarnations of the State. In particular, the Department currently advises and represents each of the Kuwait Ports Authority ('KPA') and The Public Institution for Social Security ('PIFSS') in connection with the Proceedings.

I hereby confirm, on behalf of the Department, that KPA and PIFSS are wholly owned by the State of Kuwait and bring to your attention the attached letters, duly signed by authorised representatives of KPA and PIFSS confirming that they will comply with any final and binding costs orders made against them in the Proceedings ('Costs Orders').

We respectfully request, on behalf of KPA and PIFSS [and the State of Kuwait][16] that the Grand Court take these letters into consideration in determining whether or not KPA and/or PIFSS should be required to provide security for costs in the Proceedings."

208 The letters (also addressed to the judge) that were sent with the DLAL letter on behalf of PIFSS and KPA were in common form. In relevant part, they read:

"Dear Sirs

We refer to the abovementioned Proceedings before the Grand Court of the Cayman Islands, in which Kuwait Ports Authority ('KPA') [PIFSS] is a Plaintiff.

Without prejudice to the exercise of KPA's [PIFSS's] legal rights, including without limitation its right to appeal, or to seek leave to appeal, any decision of the Grand Court, we confirm that KPA will comply with any final and binding costs order(s) made against KPA in the course of the Proceedings ('Costs Orders').

Yours faithfully"

209 The KPA letter is signed by Mr. Al Sabah in his capacity as KPA's Director General. The letter is dated May 27th, 2021, which was at least 16 The brackets do not signify that the words they contain were not part of the original letter: they were.

Case 1:26-cv-20251-RNS Document 12-22 Filed 01/26/26 Page 78 of 80 PageID #: 5821

two months before Mr. Al Sabah was suspended from this office on August 24th, 2021.

210 Ms. Stanley criticizes the judge for placing the reliance he did on these letters. Focusing on the words, "Without prejudice to the exercise of KPA's [PIFSS's] legal rights, including without limitation to its right to appeal, or to seek leave to appeal, any decision of the Grand Court," she submits that the letters were merely "comfort letters" and further contends that the judge should have found there remained a significant risk that an adverse costs order would not be paid because the confirmation expressed in the letters could only be enforced by committal or sequestration proceedings in the jurisdiction and such an order would not be enforceable in any other court; nor was it clear that the comfort letters would be enforced by the courts of Kuwait.

211 We do not accept these criticisms. In our judgment, the three letters amount to a representation intended to be relied on by the Grand Court that the plaintiffs would honour any final and binding costs order made against them and we regard the letters as providing strong support for the conclusion that there is no real risk that such costs orders would not be paid. We say this because we have no doubt that the State of Kuwait and its agencies, KPA and PIFSS, would suffer very significant reputational damage if the plaintiffs were to depart from the confirmations given in the letters. Also, further support for this "no real risk" conclusion comes from the evidence as to the financial resources of the plaintiffs that shows that each could be expected to have the ready funds to honour an adverse costs award.

212 As related by the judge, the unchallenged evidence is that PIFSS, which administers independently Kuwait's pension fund for all Kuwaiti citizens in the workforce, had a global investment asset portfolio worth approximately US$133.7bn. as at March 31st, 2021 and earned a profit for the period March 2020 to December 2020 of US$18.9bn. Included in these assets is its investment in the Jermyn Street Fund, a Cayman Islands ELP, which was valued at €35,074,942 as at March 31st, 2021. It is true that PIFSS is likely to be entitled to redeem this investment under the partnership agreement and to do so without publicity but there are no reasons to think that PIFSS would set about redeeming its investment and transferring the proceeds out of the jurisdiction to avoid having to satisfy a costs order: accordingly its existence provides reassurance that PIFSS is going to have amply sufficient resources over at least the next five to six years to meet an adverse costs order should its claims against the defendants be dismissed.

213 When setting out KPA's financial details that are recorded in para. 179(xv) above when relating his reasons why the SFC applications should be dismissed, the judge was relying on the evidence given in Mr. Florent's third affidavit which was based in part on information that had come from Mr. Al Sabah. Ms. Stanley submits that this evidence was and is inadmissible because it is hearsay and Mr. Florent's third affidavit was sworn on August 27th, 2021 after Mr. Al Sabah was suspended on August 24th, 2021. We are not impressed by this submission. Even assuming that the information from Mr. Al Sabah was provided to Mr. Florent after Mr. Al Sabah had been suspended (which we think unlikely), Mr. Al Sabah would have been in a position to provide reliable figures showing that KPA's profit for the financial year 2020–2021 was KWD56,450,000, the equivalent to c.US$187,522,553 (based on a foreign exchange currency conversion of KWD1: US$3.32 as at August 9th, 2021). Further, Mr. Florent exhibits a public announcement made by KPA on April 4th, 2021 that KPA's profit for the financial year 2020–2021 was KWD56,450,000.

214 Apart from its interest in the assets held on trust for it and TPF by the GP, KPA has no assets within the jurisdiction but it is clear to us from the level of profit earned by KPA for the year 2020–2021 that it is extremely likely to have ample resources to honour an adverse costs order over the next five to six years.

215 It was argued below by the defendants that the plaintiffs could not be trusted to honour an adverse costs order on two particular grounds: the attempts by the Attorney General of Kuwait to obtain the moneys that had been paid into the account held at the Noor Bank that were part of the proceeds from the sale of Clark City, TPF's asset in the Philippines; and the manner in which the defendants had conducted the proceedings, including the bringing of proceedings against Walkers, the defendants' previous attorneys, the bringing of derivative claims for proceeds that would be paid to the plaintiffs and the plaintiffs' alleged refusal to compromise the SFC issue. These contentions are not advanced by Ms. Stanley. Had they been, they would have found no favour with the court.

216 For the reasons given in paras. 205–215 above, we find that there is no real risk that the plaintiffs will not honour their confirmations that they will pay any final and binding costs order made against them and accordingly we order that the plaintiffs should not be ordered to provide security for costs.

217 It follows that D1's appeal against the judge's refusal to order SFC must be and is dismissed.

Summary of conclusions

218 We would summarize our conclusions as follows:

(i) D1's appeal against the refusal of the judge to strike out the plaintiffs' direct claims against D1 is dismissed.

(ii) D1's appeal against the refusal of the judge to strike out the plaintiffs' derivative claims against D1 is allowed and the claims are struck out.

(iii) The appeals of D2, D3 and D4 against the refusal of the judge to strike out the plaintiffs' derivative claims against them are dismissed.

(iv) The appeal of D1 against the refusal of the judge to order the plaintiffs to provide security for costs is dismissed.

219 Our preliminary view as to costs is:

(i) There should be no order as to costs in respect of D1's strike out appeal. Although D1 succeeded in having the derivative claim against it struck out, it did not succeed on its argument that the plaintiffs' claims were misconceived because they were not in the form of an application for partnership accounts.

(ii) D2, D3 and D4 should pay the costs of their strike out appeals.

(iii) D1 should pay the costs of its SFC appeal.

(iv) The parties are at liberty to contend for different costs orders than those set out in (i)–(iii) but they must serve (concise) written submissions in support thereof within 10 days of the issuance of this judgment.

220 BIRT, J.A.: I agree.

221 BEATSON, J.A.: I also agree.

Judgment accordingly.

JUDGMENT

Introduction

1. Xiaohu Fan ("Dr Fan") is a man of science and was not a man of significant business experience prior to the events with which this case is concerned. He specialises in the research and advancement of cell therapy, immunology and cell biology.

2. In late 2014 Fangliang Zhang ("Dr Zhang") and Ye Wang ("Ms Wang"), who had founded what was called the GenScript group, wished to create a subsidiary company to develop novel biological drugs. Dr Zhang invited Dr Fan to become involved in the new business in order to develop novel cell therapies for oncological and other purposes.

3. There is some dispute as to the exact involvement of Dr Fan and whether he was a co-founder of the new venture and de facto Chief Executive Officer but it is common ground that he became Chief Scientific Officer and made a "significant contribution."

4. Dr Zhang astutely recognised that Dr Fan could play a key role in significantly adding to the value of the business and wished to encourage him to remain within the business with the incentive of financial rewards. In early 2015 Dr Zhang proposed that Dr Fan should invest in Nanjing Legend Biotechnology Co Ltd ("Legend Nanjing") a company established in the People's Republic of China. This led to the entering into of what was described throughout the hearing as the "2016 Agreement" and is dealt with in further detail below. Put very briefly under the 2016 Agreement Dr Fan was to be granted 10,000,000 shares in Legend Nanjing (representing 10% of the shares) and prior to the initial public offering ("IPO") without the approval of Legend Nanjing he was not permitted to transfer or sell any of his shares.

5. Between late 2014 and May 2016 Dr Fan was significantly involved in critical developments and inventions of a number of important therapies including the breakthrough therapy for the treatment of multiple myeloma patients, ciltacabtageneautoleucel (Cilta-cel), an investigational B-cell maturation antigen directed chimeric antigen receptor T cell (CAR-T) therapy (the "CAR-T Invention"). This was clearly a ground-breaking therapy and Dr Fan's role in the CAR-T Invention was significant.

6. It was subsequently decided that rather than using Legend Nanjing, Legend Biotech Corporation ("Legend Cayman" of the "Company" as appropriate), a Cayman Islands registered exempted limited company, would be used as the listing vehicle. Legend Cayman was subsequently listed on the NASDAQ (referred to with its associated companies and subsidiaries as the "Legend Group" being a group of biotech companies that specialise in the discovery and development of novel cell therapies for oncology and other indications). The listing documents indicated that existing shareholders could not dispose of their shares until after the period of 180 days following the listing.

7. At some point it appears that Dr Zhang decided that Dr Fan should be persuaded (via communications from himself and Ms Wang) to enter into a new incentive/investment agreement and this should be facilitated by way of an exempted limited partnership formed under the laws of the Cayman Islands.

8. AquaPoint L.P. (the "Partnership") was created in the Cayman Islands as an exempted limited partnership on 16 February 2017 under the Exempted Limited Partnership Act (the "ELPA"). The general partner of the Partnership is GenScript Corporation, a Delaware company (the "GP") which it is common ground is and was at all material times under the control of Dr Zhang. There are only two limited partners namely Dr Fan (69.95%) and Ms Wang (30.05%). Dr Zhang also has beneficial ownership of a number of shares in Legend Cayman.

9. The parties then entered into what was described throughout the hearing as the "2017 Agreement". This comprised a package of three documents namely the Subscription Agreement, the amended and restated exempted limited partnership agreement (the "LPA") and the Acknowledgement which are all referred to in further detail below.

10. The IPO took place in June 2020. Subsequent to the IPO Dr Fan asked for his 10% stake in Legend Cayman (the "Legend Shares"), but he has not received any despite repeated demands.

11. It was in these circumstances that Dr Fan presented a petition for the winding up of the Partnership on the just and equitable ground.

12. This case has had a somewhat protracted history. The winding up petition was presented in June 2021 with a summons for directions dated 10 June 2021. Directions were made by consent on 19 July 2021 with a three day trial set for 26 October 2021. Shortly before the trial the Partnership on 17 September 2021 applied for the petition to be struck out. Further directions were made by consent on 24 September 2021 vacating the trial dates for the petition and setting down the strike out application to be heard on 26 October 2021. On 26 October 2021 I made an order dismissing the strike out application and listed the trial of the petition for three days commencing on 26 January 2022. I delivered my reasons for dismissing the strike out application on 23 November 2021. This judgment should be read in conjunction with that judgment. The trial of the petition eventually commenced on 26 January 2022 but towards the end of the first day the GP applied for an adjournment on the ground in effect that it no longer validly existed in law in the Cayman Islands as its registration as a foreign company had been "ceased by the Cayman Islands Registry on 6 January 2022". The hearing was adjourned with an indemnity costs order being made against the GP. On 16 February 2022 an order was made that the adjourned trial of the petition recommence at 8am on 20 April 2022 for two days. It was further ordered that in the event that the GP was not restored by 4pm on 28 March 2022 the Partnership be wound up. The GP was restored. The adjourned trial recommenced on 20 April 2022 and concluded on 21 April 2022. On 23 May 2022, having received confirmation of no objection from Dr Fan, I granted leave for the GP to adduce the third affidavit of Dr Zhang sworn on 7 May 2022 which basically confirmed that a criminal investigation in China, involving Dr Zhang, had been discontinued.

Summary

13. I apologise for the length of this judgment but felt it necessary, in the particular circumstances of this case, to set out the evidence in some considerable detail in the hope that this would enable the parties and other readers of the judgment to better understand the evidential base of the decisions I have arrived at. Those decisions and the reasons for them are set out in the determination section of this judgment which runs to less than 10 pages.

14. I can summarise my main decision in one line. It is just and equitable to bring an end to the Partnership.

The Evidence

15. The evidence before the court is contained in various affidavits and some oral evidence from Dr Fan, Ms Wang and Dr Zhang. There is also various communications and documentary evidence that impacts on the issues to be decided in this case.

The Evidence given by way of affidavits and oral testimony

Dr Fan's first affidavit

16. Dr Fan in his first affidavit states that he is the co-founder of the Legend Group and served as its de facto CEO from early 2015 until 2018 in addition to serving as its Chief Scientific Officer "from the inception". He says Dr Zhang is "one of the ultimate owners and the director of" the GP. Dr Fan refers to the 2016 Agreement.

17. Dr Fan says that in early 2017 he was informed by Ms Wang that "Legend, the Cayman entity, rather than Legend Nanjing would be the listing vehicle. Ms Wang informed me that the 2016 Agreement was not a formal contract and was inadequate to accomplish its purpose, and that it was in my best interest to sign a subscription agreement and become a limited partner in the Partnership. I was informed that I would be granted the right to subscribe for 65.96% of the interest in the Partnership in exchange for the payment of RMB 2,500,000, which would entitle me to own 10% of Legend shares through the Partnership, which was substantially the same as what I was entitled to under the 2016 Agreement. In connection with the execution of the subscription agreement, I was asked to sign a Confirmation Letter to confirm that the 2016 Agreement would terminate upon the signing of the subscription agreement."

18. Dr Fan says:

> "I relied on the representations made to me by Sally Wang and trusted Frank Zhang to be acting in good faith, and did not have any legal advice with regard to the signing of the Confirmation Letter and the subscription agreement. I always understood that the terms under the subscription agreement and the Limited Partnership Agreement were similar to those under the 2016 Agreement, and I would be able to freely access and dispose of the Legend shares once the IPO had happened. I therefore entered into the subscription agreement dated 25 May 2017 … and agreed to the terms of the Limited Partnership Agreement which was amended and restated on 25 May 2017 … I would not have done so had I understood that the representations were false and that I was being taken advantage of."

19. Dr Fan says that Dr Zhang "holds shares in Legend [Cayman] and Genscript through the GP. By holding the Legend shares owned by the limited partners via the Partnership, he is able to indirectly exercise voting control over such Legend shares, further strengthening his control of Legend, which I believe is a conflict of interest as it means the Partnership acts in Frank Zhang's interests, not the Partnership's or the partners."

Dr Fan's second affidavit

20. In his second affidavit Dr Fan states:

> "I do not intend on selling all or any substantial portion of the shares that I own in Legend after the in specie transfer to me."

And:

> "The Partnership was without a registered office since around April 2021 until very recently …" (his second affidavit was sworn on 6 October 2021).

21. Dr Fan states:

> "In early 2017, I was informed by Sally Wang, who was the Chief Operating Officer at Genscript at the time, that Legend, the Cayman entity, rather than Legend Nanjing would be the listing vehicle. Ms Wang informed me that the 2016 Agreement was not a formal contract and was inadequate to accomplish its purpose, and that it was in my best interest to sign a subscription agreement and become a limited partner in the Partnership. I was informed that I would be granted the right to subscribe for 65.96% of the interest in the Partnership in exchange for the payment of RMB 2,500,000, which would entitle me to own 10% of Legend shares through the Partnership, which reflected my entitlement under the 2016 Agreement. In connection with the execution of the subscription agreement, I was asked to sign a Confirmation Letter to confirm that the 2016 Agreement would terminate upon the signing of the subscription agreement …"

22. Dr Fan states that he relied on the representations made to him by Ms Wang and trusted Dr Zhang to be acting in good faith. Dr Fan adds:

"Frank Zhang had told me that the 2016 Agreement needed to be replaced, and he knew I did not have any legal advice with respect to the signing of the Confirmation Letter and the subscription agreement. I was given to understand by Frank Zhang and Sally Wang that the terms under the subscription agreement and the LPA were substantially the same to those under the 2016 Agreement. I was also told that I would be able to freely access and dispose of the Legend shares once the IPO had happened. I therefore entered into the subscription agreement dated 25 May 2017 and agreed to the terms of the LPA which was amended and restated on 25 May 2017. I would not have done so had I understood that the representations were false."

23. Dr Fan says that in order to obtain the 10% share interest in Legend Cayman he made a payment of RMB 2,500,000 on 12 October 2017 and:

> "As was always the intention, I was then reimbursed RMB 2 million over a four-year period such that my 10% shareholding in Legend reflect the same agreement as had been contemplated in the 2016 Agreement. This was further confirmed by Sally Wang in an email dated 23 June 2016 …. that the shares under the 2016 Agreement would fully vest if the purchase price was paid in full."

24. Dr Fan states:

> "My understanding has always been that I was to receive 10% of the shares of the listed Legend entity as co-founder, and Frank Zhang confirmed the same through a series of WeChat messages with me …"

25. Dr Fan states:

> "Following the IPO in June 2020 there was a 6-month lockup period applicable to the Legend shares. I always operated on the understanding that six months after the IPO, I would be able to deal freely with my shares and that they would be transferred into my personal name."

26. Dr Fan refers to his attempts to obtain a transfer of the shares into his name and in respect of the GP's concern that if Dr Fan sold his shares in Legend Cayman this would have a negative impact on the share price and states:

> "I have made it clear to the GP that I do not intend selling the majority of my Legend shares, and have even made an offer to undertake only to sell a small number within certain periods following the transfer."

27. Dr Fan says that "the GP offered to agree to sell 30,000 of my ADS shares in any given year, which would mean that it would take over 300 years for my total shares of over 10,000,000 ADS shares to be sold."

28. Dr Fan say that Dr Zhang "subsequently agreed to a partial sale of some of my shares, then reneging on that agreement". Dr Fan refers to the GP arranging for individuals at "Legend to change press announcements so that any reference to me being a founder of Legend be removed." Dr Fan says that during "a telephone conversation on 23 April 2021, Dr Zhang threatened that if I was to commence legal proceedings, it would result in the termination of my employment or even loss of my entitled shares."

29. Dr Fan refers to the criminal investigation involving Dr Zhang and says that "as a respected specialist in clinical research, I have no intention of being associated or involved in any criminal investigation into Dr Zhang. I therefore wish to remove myself from the Partnership by having my shares transferred to me."

30. On the conflict point Dr Fan says:

> "[31]. Frank Zhang holds shares in Legend through the GP. I also understand he has an interest in Legend via his ownership of other entities. By holding the Legend shares owned by the limited partners via the Partnership, he is able indirectly to exercise voting control over such Legend shares. In other words, he is able to leverage my shares to strengthen his control of Legend. I believe that his own interest in doing so is in conflict with his duty, on behalf of the GP, to me as a partner. There was no consultation with the limited partners on how the assets of the Partnership were to be managed or when Legend shares might be sold. Instead, Dr Zhang has been able to influence Legend at a level greater than he would if his own economic interest in it were held separately. This clear conflict of interest is another reason that I wish to have my shares transferred to me in specie. Until that point, I am unable to receive dividends from them without the GP authorizing any dividend being distributed by the Partnership (which, for the avoidance of doubt, has never happened).

[32] Sally Wang and Frank Zhang informed me in 2016 that there was an apparent need to restructure ownership to be in the form of the Partnership due to the apparent inadequacy of the 2016 Agreement. I now believe that their true purpose in creating the Partnership was to allow Frank Zhang to exercise control over shares in Legend without having any economic interest in those shares. The GP has not, despite being asked, explained why the Partnership was set up or what its purpose is."

31. Dr Fan says that the Partnership was without a registered office between April to September 2021 following the resignation of its previous registered agent Walkers Corporate Services and the fact that the GP took so long to ensure the Partnership had a registered office in compliance with Cayman law is a matter of further concern to Dr Fan as a limited partner.

Dr Fan's third affidavit

32. The following are extracts from Dr Fan's third affidavit sworn on 3 December 2021:

"In the end of 2014, Genscript group wanted to seed a subsidiary company named "Legend" to develop novel biological drugs of some kind that were undecided. I was invited by Frank Zhang to lead that arm of the business, which was put under the "Project Legend" banner. I thereby co-founded the Legend Group to specialize and develop its business in the discovery and development of novel cell therapies for oncology and other indications…"

33. Dr Fan says that from the outset "I was entrusted by Genscript to lead the set up and growth of the Legend business and, in particular, to focus on development important therapies … My official title was and is Chief Scientific Officer of Legend and I have been listed as co-founder of Legend on Legend's website as well as in Legend's registration statements filed with the US Securities and Exchange Commission."

34. Dr Fan refers his "role as Leader of the Legend project" and the requests to him by Dr Zhang to invest in Legend and adds "my understanding was always that I was to receive 10% of the Legend business regardless of the specific entity whose shares were being issued."

35. Dr Fan says:

> "Sometime between 10 July 2015 and 18 August 2015, following further discussions with Frank Zhang, we agreed that (i) Legend Nanjing would start with a registered capital of RMB 25,000,000, and (ii) I would invest a total of RMB 500,000 (RMB 100,000 each year for 5 years) in exchange for 10% of Legend Nanjing. There was documentation in an agreement which was signed by me and Frank Zhang on 18 August 2015 but was dated 1 January 2016 … (the "2016 Agreement")."

36. Dr Fan says that "During 2016, the Legend business achieved good progress in its first patient dosing of Cilta-cel which I invented in March 2016 … The product I developed is still currently the main asset of the Legend group which is now the largest biotech company in Asia Pacific and one of the world's top companies in the field of cell and gene therapy".

37. Dr Fan says that in mid-2016 he had emails with Ms Wang and she "confirmed that the shares would fully vest once the purchase price was paid in full, and I confirmed that I would pay RMB 2.5 million to subscribe for 10% of the shares in Legend Nanjing (which was at the time the entity envisaged to be listed)."

38. Dr Fan says that in mid to late 2016 Ms Wang and Dr Zhang told him that there was a need to restructure into some kind of partnership to facilitate the IPO of the Legend Group. At some stage a decision was made to list Legend Cayman on NASDAQ rather than listing Legend Nanjing on a Chinese stock exchange and that triggered the restructuring. Dr Fan says he "did not fully understand the reasons for a change in structure that Ms Wang was proposing but raised queries that I thought were appropriate at the time."

39. Dr Fan says that Ms Wang informed him that the 2016 Agreement "was not a very formal contract and may not be adequate to accomplish its purpose, and that it was in my best interest to sign a more formal subscription agreement and become a limited partner in the Partnership."

40. Dr Fan says that he was informed that he would be granted the right to subscribe for 65.96% of the interest in the Partnership in exchange for the payment of RMB 2,500,000 which he understood would entitle him to "effectively own 10% of Legend Cayman shares through the Partnership essentially the same as to what" he was entitled to under the 2016 Agreement.

41. Dr Fan says:

> "I relied on the representations made to me by Sally Wang and trusted Frank Zhang to be acting in good faith. Frank Zhang had told me that the 2016 Agreement needed to be formalized and replaced, and he knew I did not have any legal advice with respect to the signing of the Confirmation Letter and the subscription agreement. I was given to understand by Frank Zhang and Sally Wang that the terms under the subscription agreement and the LPA were substantially the same to those under the 2016 Agreement. I was also told that I would be able to freely access and dispose of the Legend shares once the IPO had happened."

42. Dr Fan said that he raised his queries in respect of the draft LPA in early 2017 and he says he had a phone call with Ms Wang when he discussed his concerns and she gave him assurances and made representations. Dr Fan also had WeChat conversations with Ms Wang and Dr Zhang. Dr Fan entered into the 2017 Agreement "on the basis of the representations given to me by Sally Wang and Frank Zhang. I would not have done so had I understood that the representations were false and that I was being taken advantage of. My understanding was always that these were agreements that reflected the 2016 Agreement but with more technical and legal terms."

43. Dr Fan says:

> "In any event, following the signature of those documents, and in order to obtain my 10% share interest in Legend, I made payment of RMB 2,500,000 on 12 October 2017. As was always the intention, I was then reimbursed RMB 2 million over a four-year period such that my 10% shareholding in Legend Cayman reflected the same agreement as had been contemplated in the 2016 Agreement. This was further confirmed by Sally Wang in an email dated 23 June 2016 …. that the shares under the 2016 Agreement would fully vest if the purchase price was paid in full, and the specific percentages that were envisaged at the time is reflected in Sally's emails to me of 7 June 2017 'Percentage', where my 10% stake in Legend Cayman is confirmed despite the Subscription Agreement not being 'straight-forwardly stated as 10%'."

44. Dr Fan refers to the growth of the Legend Group between 2017 and 2020:

> "The group was growing and becoming financially stronger and I was integral to the growth of the Legend Group and worked hard and diligently to ensure its success, and I was happy to do so because I was always under the impression that the success of the group would result in my own financial benefit via my 10% ownership stake."

45. Dr Fan describes the listing of Legend Cayman on NASDAQ in June 2020 as "the culmination of years of hard work". Dr Fan says he understood after the 6-month lock up period that he would be able to deal freely with his shares and he believed they would be transferred into his personal name "automatically". Dr Fan made various requests for the shares and says:

> "the GP ultimately made two offers to allow the sale of some of Legend Cayman shares with the proceeds distributed to me. However, the first offer would have taken over 300 years for all of my shares in Legend Cayman to fully transfer to me so that I could enjoy the economics of the Legend Cayman shares, and would not allow me to control the voting of the Legend shares … The second 'deal' was to a partial sale of some of my shares, which was initially agreed upon until Frank Zhang then reneged on that agreement."

46. Dr Fan says:

> "The GP has suggested that it is fearful of my selling of the shares in Legend Cayman which could have a negative impact upon Legend's share price. However, I have made it clear to the GP that I do not intend selling the majority of my Legend Cayman shares and have even made an offer to undertake only to sell a small number within certain periods following the transfer."

47. Dr Fan refers to the criminal investigation and the involvement of Dr Zhang which "had a drastic impact on Legend Cayman's stock price" and "increased my concerns over the ability of the GP to properly manage the affairs of the Partnership." Dr Fan says as a respected specialist in cancer drug research and clinical development he did not wish to be "associated or involved in any of the criminal investigation into Dr Zhang. I therefore wish to remove myself from the Partnership by having my shares transferred to him."

48. Dr Fan says he has also lost faith and trust in the GP's ability to manage the Partnership because:

(1) references to him being a co-founder of Legend have been removed;

(2) in a telephone conversation on 23 April 2021 Dr Zhang threatened that if Dr Fan commenced legal proceedings that would "result in the termination of my employment or even loss of all my initial shares";

(3) the Partnership was without a registered office for a period of at least 5 months between April to September 2021; and

(4) the GP failed to pay annual fees and was struck off the Cayman register.

49. Dr Fan deals with the conflict of interest point as follows:

> "Frank Zhang controls shares in Legend Cayman through the GP. I also understand he has an interest in Legend Cayman via his ownership of other entities. By holding the Legend Cayman shares owned by the limited partners via the Partnership, he is able indirectly to exercise voting control over such Legend Cayman shares. In other words, he is able to leverage my shares to strengthen his control of Legend Cayman. I believe that his own interest in doing so is in conflict with his duty, on behalf of the GP, to me as a partner. There was no consultation with the limited partners on how the assets of the Partnership were to be managed or when Legend Cayman shares might be sold. Instead, Dr Zhang has been able to influence Legend Cayman at a level greater than he would if his own economic interest in it were held separately. This clear conflict of interest is another reason that I wish to have my shares transferred to me in specie. Until that point, I am unable to receive dividends from them without the GP authorizing any dividend being distributed by the Partnership (which, for the avoidance of doubt, has never happened, despite distributions being permissible.)"

Dr Fan's fourth affidavit

50. Dr Fan in his fourth affidavit maintains the significance of his contribution to Cayman Legend and denies that the credit for the success of Legend's CAR-T business can be taken by Dr Zhang and Dr Chou. Dr Fan recognises the important role Dr Zhang had in germinating the idea of starting a drug development arm with the GenScript group and setting up the Legend project. Dr Fan maintains that he was "co-founder" in addition to the Chief Scientific Officer of Legend. Dr Fan feels that Dr Zhang has tried to undermine his experience and expertise.

51. Dr Fan says that he did not invite a lawyer to review the position prior to the execution of the 2017 Agreement "because of the assurances given to me by Sally Wang and Frank Zhang."

52. Dr Fan says that he simply wishes to have his shares in Cayman Legend transferred to him personally something which he says he "was entitled to under 2016 Agreement. As a co-founder and the Chief Scientific Officer of the Legend Group, and the key inventor of the Cital-cel drug, I care deeply about the success of Legend and do not intend to do anything to harm the company. Any suggestion that I am going to set about selling off all my shares at once as soon as I get hold of them and thereby causing the company's stock price to dip is unfounded." Dr Fan confirms that he has "every intention on (sic) complying with any and all insider trading policies at Legend." Dr Fan says:

> "There is no legitimate reason why my Shares should not now be transferred to my personal name. The General Partner is effectively saying that I should be forever locked up in the AquaPoint arrangement, without giving any reason for that to be either necessary or desirable."

53. Dr Fan refers to the risk of being "denied of all of the fruits I have toiled for over the years" and adds:

> "Owning Legend Shares indirectly through AquaPoint means nothing if the only way to have any benefit from those shares is dependent on the actions of the GP in whom I have lost all faith and confidence based on its actions."

Dr Fan's fifth affidavit

54. Dr Fan in his fifth affidavit (sworn on 7 April 2022) says that it was brought to the court's attention during the course of the first day of the trial on 26 January 2022 that the GP had been de-registered as a foreign company under the Cayman Companies Act and the GP had no standing and was unable to represent the Partnership which led to the adjournment of the trial. Dr Fan says whilst he understands that the GP has managed to reinstate itself by registering in Cayman "the facts that led to the de-registration provide further evidence of the manner in which the Partnership is being mismanaged and the lack of probity that is being demonstrated by the GP." Dr Fan adds that "in letting its own registration by the Registrar lapse, the GP placed the Partnership into a position where it was in breach of Cayman law." Dr Fan adds:

> "The GP's conduct in allowing the above to take place was incompatible with standards of competence and professionalism that a limited partner is entitled to expect from a general partner acting bona fide in the best interests of the Partnership. This episode, which has resulted in the delay to trial following what was already a delayed trial after the GP's belated and unsuccessful attempt to strike out the Petition, is a further example of why I have lost all faith and confidence in the GP's ability to properly manage and conduct the Partnership."

55. Dr Fan adds:

> "I tendered my resignation to Legend on 11 March 2022, right after I found the secret removing of my "co-founder" title from Legend's official website. Whilst I have been honoured to be part of the success of the Legend group and am proud of the progress made in the field of cell and gene therapy, I felt compelled to end my time with the organization because I could no longer endure the long-term and systematic oppression from Frank Zhang and those in favour with him, including the aforementioned removal of my role as co-founder. The manner in which this dispute has been conducted by the GP and the attempts to discredit my reputation and misuse the legal process to damage my name all underline and demonstrate the fundamental breakdown which is the subject of the Petition, and which made my role within Legend untenable and my time at Legend over the past two years very challenging. It was a very difficult decision for me as I have co-founded the company and invented the only drug of the company that has received FDA approval."

56. Dr Fan says he still believes in the prospects of the new drug and of Legend as a whole and has "no intention of selling off any significant portion of my Shares once they are transferred to me. My resignation is driven by the circumstances mentioned above and is by no means a reflection of loss of confidence in Legend."

57. Dr Fan says that the "GP and the Partnership continue to operate in a manner which is unfair and improper" and that he has had to "borrow money in order to pay for the current litigation" and the actions by the GP and Dr Zhang have had the effect of making it difficult to assert his rights.

Ms Wang's affidavit

58. Ms Wang in her affidavit sworn on 20 December 2021 states that she is authorised to make the affidavit on behalf of the GP. She states that she has held a number of positions across the GenScript group of companies, is the President of GenScript Biotech Corporation and has a beneficial interest in the Partnership. Ms Wang covers the following points, amongst others:

> "The management team of GenScript Biotech Corporation learned that stock options are generally considered by employees to have less, or no, inherent immediate value than being granted shares."

59. Ms Wang refers to consideration of providing employees "with incentives where a business unit was likely to proceed to listing. The preferred option, which was adopted across a number of business units, including Legend, was the general partnership/limited partnership approach."

60. Ms Wang says that she was asked by Dr Zhang to take the lead on exploring the best way to put in place incentive schemes for employees "who make and will make significant contribution to the growth of GenScript Group and its subsidiaries, including Legend."

61. Ms Wang says in mid-2016 "I began to have discussions with Dr Fan about admitting him to AquaPoint LP in order that he would have an interest, albeit an indirect one, in Legend."

62. Ms Wang says Walkers were engaged to help and a copy of a draft LPA was "forwarded to Dr Fan for review and comments. I recall that it took a relatively long period of time before Dr Fan came back with questions, comments and suggested revisions."

63. Ms Wang said she had had no involvement with the 2016 Agreement. Ms Wang says Dr Fan was "initially reluctant to move from one arrangement to the other" and adds:

> "Dr Fan made it clear to me that he wished to hold the shares in Legend instead of an interest in a partnership that held the shares of Legend and that it was not reasonable to offer him an interest in the AquaPoint partnership rather than access to Legend shares directly… During our discussions, I did not tell Dr Fan that he would at any point have direct access to shares after the public offering as this would not be an option available to him. I recall explaining that he would obtain ownership in AquaPoint and thus indirectly benefit from Legends' shares."

64. Ms Wang refers to discussions with Dr Fan recording that Dr Fan:

> "asked me whether we intended to honor what Dr Zhang had promised him, which I understood to be a reference to being provided with the 2016 Agreement. I replied that the lengthy negotiations we had been having were aimed at doing just that."

Ms Wang denies the suggestions that she misled or coerced Dr Fan into signing the LPA.

Dr Zhang's first affidavit

65. Dr Zhang in his first affidavit refers to the exit route under the LPA.

Dr Zhang's second affidavit

66. Dr Zhang in his second affidavit says he resigned various GenScript positions to place "company before the person and resigning was in the best interest of the GenScript Group due to legal proceedings in China."

67. Dr Zhang says the concept of what eventually became Legend was his idea, following his attendance at a conference in which CAR-T was discussed. Dr Zhang says in February 2014 he engaged Dr Chuan-Chu Chou to work on the CAR-T project and it was only after the project was well underway that Dr Fan became involved. Dr Chou recommended Dr Fan be a team leader for CAR-T and in March 2015 Dr Fan first began participating in the CAR-T project. Dr Zhang says he led the new project at the beginning. Dr Zhang adds:

> "Dr Fan constantly asked us to promote him. We first promoted him from Director to Vice President, and later to Chief Scientific Officer. We also recognized Dr Fan as a co-founder in public relations materials for Legend because he was one of the most senior scientists and team leaders … Dr Fan was never the CEO of Legend, either in title or responsibilities … At times, we were concerned about his lack of leadership and noticed he puts his own interests above the interests of our company. One example of when we expressed concern about his leadership appear in an email exchange I had with him in June 2017 concerning incentives for the team beneath him."

68. Dr Zhang says in 2015 he "communicated with Dr Fan to offer him an opportunity to invest in Legend Nanjing … we eventually offered what we has (sic) been called in this case the 2016 Agreement … The incentive plan gives the team rights to 10% of the total share capital of Legend Nanjing."

69. Dr Zhang refers to the lead up to the 2017 Agreement and says: "Sally Wang was the person with the primary responsibility for discussing the new incentive plan with Dr Fan. She handled the majority of the negotiations with Dr Fan on the subject … The discussions with Dr Fan took much longer than expected." Dr Zhang says that Ms Wang "kept me reasonably informed of the status of her conversations with him."

70. Dr Zhang says: "I never told Dr Fan (or Sally Wang) that a limited partner would be free to dispose of his interest six months after the IPO or at any time after the IPO."

71. Dr Zhang says:

> "58. In February 2021, Dr Fan got in touch with me and asked me for permission to sell about 2 million shares of Legend stock (about $56 M value) to the public market. After receiving his request, I then communicated Dr Fan's request to Legend executives, and we mutually decided that Dr Fan's request was unreasonable especially as Legend was in the process of raising capital. Such a big sale to the public market will result in dramatically driving down Legend's stock price and would damage our company since we were in the middle of raising funds from investors. If the stock price goes down, it will cause investors to lose confidence. In order to partially satisfy his demands, after communicating with Legend executives, we agreed we would offer Dr Fan the opportunity to sell shares and obtain $4 to $5 million. This would make him an immediate multi-millionaire."

72. Dr Zhang says that he was shocked and disappointed to receive a letter from Dr Fan's lawyers dated 22 April 2021 with the threat of legal proceedings. He says he reached out to Dr Fan to make sure that he had in fact authorised the letter. Dr Zhang says that he made no threats to fire him but told him "if he was intent on filing a lawsuit, we would defend ourselves to the best of our ability." Dr Zhang refers to Dr Fan apparently recording one of Dr Zhang's conversations with him and adds:

> "We then decided to freeze the approval to sell shares because we believed the whole situation should be reviewed with both inside and outside counsel."

73. Dr Zhang says that he discussed the decision to authorise shares of $4 – 5 million in stock "with, amongst others, the Legend Chief Executive Officer."

74. Dr Zhang at paragraph 64 of his second affidavit states:

> "I have no personal animus against Dr Fan. His work has been of benefit first to the GenScript Group and now to Legend. His request was simply one that we did not believe was in the best interest of the GenScript Group in general or Legend specifically, and I explained to him why."

75. In the very next paragraph (65), Dr Zhang states:

> "I, as a representative of the general partner, have no conflict of interest in the case."

76. Dr Zhang refers to the need to keep control of the voting rights attached to the shares otherwise the company "would become extremely difficult to govern" and there would be the spectre of "shareholder activism". Dr Zhang says that "Dr Fan released inside information and caused us problems with the Hong Kong stock exchange. It can hardly be surprising that the general partner and Legend are wary of placing a large volume of Legend stock in to Dr Fan's hands as he requests, and this is one of the purposes (sic) which AquaPoint was created. Such a course of action would be a substantial risk in all the circumstances and one that does not appear to be balanced by the benefits to be gained by one individual."

77. In respect of the criminal investigation concerning GenScript, Dr Zhang says that "No charges have ever been laid against the company or against me." When the investigation was announced and Dr Zhang was detained the proper course was, he adds, for him to "step down as Chairman and Chief Executive Officer or Legend Biotech and Chairman of GenScript." Dr Zhang says that he was released without charge.

78. Dr Zhang refers to the difficulties with the Partnership "lacking a registered office for a period of time" as Walkers resigned as registered office provider and adds that there was "nothing sinister or improper." in that.

Dr Zhang's third affidavit

79. Dr Zhang in his third affidavit sworn on 7 May 2022 and adduced pursuant to leave given on 23 May 2022 says that on 28 April 2022 he received a "telephone communication from the Zhenjiang Municipal People's Procuratorate concerned the investigation commenced against GenScript Biotech Co Ltd and myself by the Zhenjiang Customs Anti-Smuggling Sub-Bureau in September 2020." Dr Zhang says:

"I was informed that the investigation had been concluded and it had been determined not to charge me or GenScript Biotech Co Ltd with any crime arising out of that investigation."

80. Dr Zhang refers to a statement dated 30 April 2022 from his lawyers (Allbright Law Offices):

"Accordingly, the criminal procedure for this case has been concluded, and Dr Zhang Fangliang is not guilty and will have no criminal liability with respect to the case."

Mr Meng's affidavit

81. Jiange "Robin" Meng ("Mr Meng") in his affidavit says that he has been involved with the GenScript group of companies for over 11 years and, in late 2020, stepped into the Chairman's role when Dr Zhang stepped down. Mr Meng refers to various payments to Dr Fan and says that he was aware that Dr Fan received RMB 1,900,000 in bonus over 2017, 2018 and 2020:

"I recall that the original amount was RMB 2,000,000 but RMB 100,000 was deducted from his bonus because of an inside information disclosure breach that Dr Fan committed."

Dr Zhu's affidavit

82. Dr Li Zhu ("Dr Zhu"), who occupies the position of Chief Strategy Officer at GenScript Biotech Corporation, says that Dr Fan did "not work on CAR-T alone" and that "the reality is that he is the leader of a team, each member of which has contributed to its achievements" and "Dr Fan was not the CEO of Legend."

Dr Wu's affidavit

83. Dr Sheng "Shawn" Wu, VP of GenScript Biotech Corporation, and says that:

> "Dr Fan suffered a loss of part of his bonus in one year for making an unauthorised disclosure of insider information at a conference."

Ms Qian's affidavit

84. Yan "Elaine" Qian, Head of Human Resources of Legend Nanjing, refers to a bundle of documents and suggests that they usually advise employees "to seek their own individual advisors" in respect of "incentive agreements".

Mr Murphy's affidavit

85. Richard Murphy ("Mr Murphy") Senior Manager of FFP (Corporate Services) Limited ("FFP") in an affidavit sworn on 4 February 2022 says that FFP have agreed to act as the new registered agent for the GP, identified in the Order of 26 January 2022, subject to the provision of complete and adequate know your customer documentation.

86. Mr Murphy says that the GP had until 6 January 2022 been registered as a foreign company in the Cayman Islands but "consequent upon resignation of the former registered office of [the GP] the Register of Companies removed [the GP] from the register of companies on 6 January 2022 … [and] [the GP] ceased to fulfil the formal requirements to be a 'qualifying general partner' …". FFP has agreed to "process the reinstatement and registration [the GP] with the Registrar of Companies." Mr Murphy "expected that [the GP] will be reinstated administratively within a few days of the provision of the requested material and fees to the General Registry."

Cross-examination of Dr Fan

87. Dr Fan during his cross-examination gave the following evidence on material matters:

(1) he is a person who pays attention to detail;

(2) he did not get answers to all the questions he asked before signing up to the LPA;

(3) he was working long hours and was under pressure to sign the LPA. He signed it but felt it was unfair;

(4) Dr Fan appeared to find it difficult to directly answer the question "when one person deals with another, then they should each stand by their word? Yes or no?" with his initial response being "Not if there's not a fair deal." Dr Fan says "I keep my promise always";

(5) Dr Fan accepted that as Chief Scientific Officer he was the leader of the team but added "I'm the major scientist for sure, in the early stages of Legend especially for the invention of a Cilta-cel. I'm the sole, I would say I am more than 90% of the contributions, my team won't doubt about it";

(6) "I founded a company in Japan back in 2001." Dr Fan seemed to have difficulty in answering directly and concisely the question as to whether he had "significant business experience" by 2015;

(7) Dr Fan says it was a "bargaining strategy" to say in his 10 July 2015 7:45 email to Dr Zhang that he would think about it with his wife as to whether or not he would participate;

(8) Dr Fan says "I think Dr Zhang means "allowance" to me because he wanted me to invest, but obviously I don't have that fund to invest to 10% investment of that investment. The company …. he promised to give allowance to deduct or reimburse the extra money I need to pay";

(9) Dr Fan believed that Dr Zhang had more business experience than he had;

(10) Dr Fan accepts that he signed the 2016 Agreement of his "own will"; "It's not a perfect agreement but overall I'm confident I can accept the terms … No other person signed a similar deal."

(11) Dr Fan says that the 2017 Agreement was effectively the same as the 2016 Agreement in giving him "a right to shares in Legend". It changed from Legend Nanjing to Legend Cayman but Dr Fan's understanding was that it was still 10% of the shares. Dr Fan says that his understanding was that whatever the 2017 Agreement says it gave him a direct right to shares in Cayman Legend once the IPO has taken place;

(12) Dr Fan accepts that his team were involved in the invention of Cilta-cel: "I lead the team to develop";

(13) Dr Fan said in a phone call with Ms Wang that the 2016 Agreement was a formal one: "Then, I clearly remember, she was amused. She said, "Really? You think the 2016 Agreement is a formal one?";

(14) it was put to Dr Fan that there was nothing in the build up to the 2017 Agreement to stop him asking a lawyer for assistance and Dr Fan responded:

> "I have a lot of work to do. I am very busy, and I trusted Frank and Sally during that time."

(15) Dr Fan was referred to his email to Ms Wang dated 26 September 2016 at 4:46 where he had stated "Recently Frank told me you're helping roll over the share purchase plan to Legend Cayman" and it was put to him that it was clear to him that there was " a move away from any direct shareholding in Legend." Dr Fan responded "No.";

(16) it was Dr Fan's understanding that after the IPO "everything will be released". Dr Fan said he did not know that the incentive was not going to be "directly in shares in Legend";

(17) Dr Fan did not agree that he had a free choice of remaining with the 2016 Agreement or moving to the 2017 Agreement;

(18) Dr Fan appeared to have difficulty in giving a yes or no answer to the question "In the end you decided not to stick with the 2016 Agreement, but to go with the 2017 Agreement.";

(19) Dr Fan accepted that he was given drafts of the LPA and the Subscription Agreement for his consideration and that he made a number of comments and suggested amendments but added:

> "I never imagined that what I hold, what the share I hold in the Partnership is not Legend … My understanding is, even indirectly holding, it's my share" … "I try to not irritate them … so I always using my wife as an excuse to comfort them … My understanding … was I'm holding Legend share, even inside the Partnership, and after IPO it will release";

(20) Dr Fan agreed that he had read and signed the Subscription Agreement. He also agreed that he read the LPA. Dr Fan stated that in 2017 he was 46 years old. It was put to him that he should at least take some responsibility for his own actions. Dr Fan said he was a scientist and he was relying on Dr Zhang and Ms Wang in respect of the 2017 Agreement and he was in a weak position "it's overwhelming";

(21) it was put to Dr Fan that his evidence that although the 2017 Agreement provided he pay RMB 2.5 million in fact he did not pay more than 500,000. Mr Corbett stated 100,000 "was withheld from you for a reason that perhaps doesn't matter anymore". Dr Fan said it was "arranged by Frank and Sally …. Sally told me that a lawyer can't write down the actual arrangement in the formal legal terms. They will reimburse me later, year by year, and that's happened: I think both sides are avoiding to say that because it secret arrangement during that time".

Re-examination of Dr Fan

88. In re-examination Dr Fan said no one else in his team was offered a 10% stake in Legend Nanjing;

Cross-examination of Ms Wang

89. Ms Wang during her cross-examination gave the following evidence on material matters:

(1) Ms Wang said in respect of the 2016 Agreement so long as he met the requirements "it gave him direct access to Legend Nanjing shares";

(2) Ms Wang denied that it was her task to persuade Dr Fan to move from the 2016 Agreement to the new arrangement:

"My task is not to persuade him. To be honest, the Company has no obligation to move Dr Fan from the 2016 Agreement to the new Partnership Agreement. So my task was actually to set up investment platform to award, or keep the key talents.";

(3) Ms Wang accepted that there were only two limited partners in the Partnership namely Dr Fan (69.95%) and herself (30.05%) with Legend Cayman as of 20 April 2022 having a market capitalisation of just over US$6 billion and the Partnership holds 30,320,000 ordinary shares in Legend Cayman at a value of about $593 million;

(4) Ms Wang accepts that she is "a co-founder of the GenScript Group" and agrees that she is giving evidence on behalf of the GP (of which she is a director) and she says that she is not taking any sides but just giving evidence "to the extent that I have been involved in the negotiation process with Dr Fan."

(5) Ms Wang accepts that the GP has a duty to "act in good faith in the interests of the limited partnership", a "fiduciary duty";

(6) Ms Wang had no hesitation in accepting that "Dr Fan led the team that developed the CAR-T breakthrough" and she recognized "he was a successful member or key employee"; "Dr Fan led the effort of making significant progress on the CAR-T programme…Dr Fan led the effort and made a significant breakthrough in that area". Ms Wang agreed that Dr Fan was the only person who got an agreement (the 2016 Agreement) conferring a 10% shareholding on him and "it was his importance and the work he was doing that led to this breakthrough that merited reflecting that contribution with a shareholding in the business" but added that "in 2017 was only limited to Nanjing Legend."

(7) it was put to Ms Wang that the reference by her to the "original agreement" in her WeChat message to Dr Fan on 8 June 2017 was to the 2016 Agreement. Ms Wang hesitated, took a few minutes to look at the whole of the message and then said: "I don't get enough context to guess what the original agreement I was referring to in this message". Mr Valentin asked her what she thought the candidates might be. Ms Wang responded:

> "It could be first, of course, the 2016 Agreement and also the agreement I sent him initially in mid of June. That was our first proposal for a partnership set up in China". Dr Fan's communication dated 2 June 2017 was put to Ms Wang and she was asked when he refers to "original agreement" that must be to the 2016 Agreement:
> > "I believe the agreement was cancelled in the 2016 Agreement. That's the only agreement that was cancelled.";

(8) it was put to Ms Wang that what she was conveying to Dr Fan in her 8 June 2017 message was that the "stake be held under the 2016 Agreement in Legend Nanjing, whatever ownership interest he had under the 2016 Agreement, would be converted or turned into an interest in the Cayman Legend entity." Ms Wang responded:

> "That's actually what the agreement did."

(9) Ms Wang agreed that Dr Zhang trusted her to negotiate or put the arrangements with Dr Fan into existence;

(10) Ms Wang says that Dr Fan "made his own decision" and the discussions "took quite a long time"; "He had the option to stay within the 2016 Agreement";

(11) Ms Wang agreed that the concept that she was helping with was "through this new structure, to roll over the share purchase that Dr Fan had in the Nanjing entity into the new Cayman entity."; "The concept, I think, is still to ensure Dr Fan can get the benefit of the success and growth of Legend";

(12) Ms Wang was referred to the 15 June 2016 email from Dr Fan and her response and says in respect of the "original agreement" reference she believes he was referring to the partnership agreement she sent to him on 6 June "I'm not referring to the 2016 Agreement";

(13) on the conflict of interest point Ms Wang accepted that Dr Zhang with her and one other co-founded the GP and Dr Zhang "owns a significant part of GenScript Corporation" and that Dr Zhang controlled the GP. Ms Wang also accepted that Dr Zhang has an indirect holding in Cayman Legend (15.2%). It was put to Ms Wang that when Dr Zhang is wearing his GP hat "he has to put out of his mind the interests of Legend Cayman, the interests of GenScript, his own personal interest as a shareholder. He has to think about the Partnership, doesn't he?" Ms Wang replied "That's correct";

(14) Ms Wang was asked how could Dr Zhang do that, "isn't there obviously a conflict in the way he acts as the GP representative in that situation?". Ms Wang responded "That's a very good question" and added: "we have certain kinds of mechanism to governance, to make sure when we are acting in differing roles, we are doing what we are supposed to do."

(15) Ms Wang was asked what purpose the Partnership served and was asked to confirm that Dr Fan is the only one incentivised which she duly did. Ms Wang says she believes Dr Zhang's concern "is if we sell too many shares at a very short period of time, of course, that's going to be a big concern for the stability of the share price for both Legend Cayman and its parent company, GenScript.";

(16) Ms Wang says she did not have the impression that during the discussions about the "2017 arrangements" that Dr Fan trusted her because every time she spoke to him it took him a few days before he came back "with a lot of questions … we actually discuss on the same question over and over again and again. If he trusted me, that's not the way."

Re-examination of Ms Wang

90. In re-examination the email of 23 June was put to Ms Wang and she said that the reference to original agreement coming after RMB 2.5 million was not to the 2016 Agreement but to the partnership agreement she sent to Dr Fan on 6 June that was "a partnership agreement in Chinese". Ms Wang said the purpose of the platform was not just to incentivise "one employee":

> "It's to have a kind of controlled exit mechanism to make sure the share price won't be significantly impacted from one big, large sale, which is also good for all the shareholders' interest, including the Partnership."

Cross-examination of Dr Zhang

91. Dr Zhang during his cross-examination gave the following evidence on material matters:

(1) Dr Zhang was asked what role Dr Fan played in the development of the CAR-T project and his answer (through the interpreter) was as follows:

> "So, our firm started the CAR-T project at the beginning of 2014. At the beginning, Dr Cho planned the project … Dr Fan joined the firm in 2014 … and in March 2015 he joined this new CAR-T project. Later on, Dr Cho left the CAR-T and Dr Fan started to lead the CAR-T project in September of 2015 and therefore, he also played an important role in the CAR-T project";

Dr Zhang accepted that Dr Fan led the team that discovered the CAR-T breakthrough and that "Dr Fan made a significant contribution to the success of" Legend Cayman. Dr Zhang, despite the content of his affidavit evidence, did not accept that he had tried to diminish the role of Dr Fan in his affidavit evidence;

(2) Dr Zhang said the 10% stake in Legend Nanjing was not just to Dr Fan but to Dr Fan and his team. Dr Zhang criticised Dr Fan for putting himself above his team: "He worries about himself on top of their needs";

(3) Dr Zhang, somewhat unconvincingly, said that where he uses references to "your stock" in a communication dated 14 June 2017 "what I mean is that he has some stock in the limited partnership";

(4) Dr Zhang said that the 2016 Agreement was dated and signed on 1 January 2016 and was not signed in August 2015;

(5) Dr Zhang agreed that the 2016 Agreement prevented Dr Fan from selling any shares prior to the IPO;

(6) Dr Zhang agreed that the purpose of the 2016 Agreement was to incentivise Dr Fan to stay so that the CAR-T project could succeed with his involvement and the success of the project played "a very significant" "an important" role to do a future IPO. Dr Zhang was asked "you couldn't afford to lose Dr Fan, could you?" and responded somewhat evasively "We don't want to lose any talent, not just him." Dr Zhang did however accept if Dr Fan had left in 2016 the progress of the CAR-T project "would have been affected." Dr Zhang however seemed to have difficulty in unhesitatingly accepting the value and significant role of Dr Fan. It was put to Dr Zhang that he granted Dr Fan a 10% shareholding in Legend Nanjing "because you needed him to stay" and, despite the fact that there was no evidence before the court of any claims by any members of Dr Fan's team, he replied:

> "I would like to repeat one more time, this was for his team and not just for him, one person.";

(7) Dr Zhang was referred to exchanges of messages with Dr Fan on 19 February 2017 and his comment "How can you question your partners" and seemed to accept that he was trying to reassure Dr Fan that he would honour the 2016 Agreement:

> "Yes, we will, we will honour 2016 Agreement."

Dr Zhang agreed to Ms Wang's evidence that the "aim was to ensure that the new arrangement honoured what Dr Zhang had promised Dr Fan":

> "Yes, but the 2017 Agreement is a totally different agreement to the 2016 [Agreement]."

Dr Zhang said Dr Fan had a choice to stay with the 2016 Agreement or move to the 2017 Agreement.

Dr Zhang said that "Dr Fan would enjoy the same benefits whether the subject matter of the agreement was shares in Legend Nanjing or shares in Legend Cayman". Dr Zhang did not agree that a shareholding in Legend Nanjing would be worth considerably less than a shareholding in Legend Cayman if an IPO took place;

(8) it was put to Dr Zhang that the shares that the Partnership holds in Legend Cayman on 19 April 2022 were worth approximately US$590 million and he was asked what were the shares in Legend Nanjing worth and Dr Zhang said he did not know their exact worth. Dr Zhang accepted that on 19 April 2022 the market capitalisation of Legend Cayman was just over US$ 6 billion. Dr Zhang gave "a rough number" for the value of Legend Nanjing at "maybe $4 billion, you know, but my CFO will know the answer better. The exact number." Dr Zhang agreed that Legend Nanjing was not listed;

(9) Dr Zhang openly accepted that he co-founded the GP and that he "substantially" owns it and at the time of the IPO had control over the GP and he still does. Dr Zhang agrees that he has an interest in Cayman Legend shares. Dr Zhang agrees that he personally controls the GP and he personally controls the shares in Legend Cayman that are held by the Partnership;

(10) Dr Zhang said that employees who own shares have to get approval before they sell shares and, without referring to any evidence in support, added "even after they leave the Company they still have to follow the Company's policies" as "if he or she has the freedom to sell them at any time, that would cause great damage to the Company. It is essentially like suicide for the firm";

(11) Dr Zhang was asked what detriment to the Company's business had to do with the interests of the Partnership and illuminatingly replied:

> "So my rule in the Partnership is, we always want to keep the stock price stable. If the stock price stable, it's good for the Company, it's good for the partners, the limited partners, the LP. My role as the GP of AquaPoint, I have an obligation to the LP …. When we sell shares … there were damages in interest of another LP. If Dr Fan sells shares … he will damage the interests of Ms Sally Wang and also damage Legend Biotech, damage the investors and all the employees. So, that's just not right … we want this company to succeed, we don't want to damage this company … I can control with key stakeholder in the Company and the top management, so we make a consensus decision … the long term benefits of the Company".

(12) Dr Zhang accepted that the Company agreed to a 180 day lock-up period but after the lock-up again insisted that the "employee when they sell off their shares, they need to get the Company's approval.";

(13) Dr Zhang agreed that he was a representative of the GP and he understood that it was the GP's "duty to act at all times in good faith and in the interests of the limited partnership." Dr Zhang was asked when he takes account of the interests of the Partnership what he is taking account of and responded as follows:

> "I take account of the individual LP, I take account of the Company as a whole, the Legend Biotech as a whole, because those two things cannot be separated from each other and this LP. Dr Fan … in … selling the shares should be bound by the Company policy … if the Company does well, the LP does well … It's damaging the other LP, then damaging the whole company."

(14) In a remarkably frank and illuminating exchange Mr Valentin put the following to Dr Zhang:

> "If both limited partners came to the GP and said, "We would like our shares to be transferred to us" wouldn't you have to agree with them in that situation?"

Dr Zhang, without hesitation, responded:

> "I will working for their interest, and I will working for also the Company's interest, in that mission. I am working for the LP's interest, the Company's interest, together.";

(15) it was put to Dr Zhang that he was confusing the interests of the limited partners with the interests of the Company in which he holds shares: "You're blending the two together, aren't you". To which Dr Zhang replied "You are blending them together, you know."

(16) it was put to Dr Zhang that he had not approved any of Dr Fan's requests to distribute shares to him and Dr Zhang responded:

"I give approval $4 to $5 million of his share, his partner share, his partner's share to sell, but he filed a lawsuit, immediately. So that was, and then I consulted with our internal legal counsel and our internal legal counsel asked to put a hold on the shares.";

(17) it was put to Dr Zhang that he knew that when Dr Fan entered into the 2017 arrangement he had not got independent legal advice. Dr Zhang responded.

> "He was very, very smart guy and he has done business before and I don't know whether he got a lawyer or not.";

(18) it was directly put to Dr Zhang that the respect in which the 2016 Agreement and the 2017 Agreement were the same was that "Dr Fan was led to believe, by you and Sally Wang, that he would get his 10% of shares once the IPO was complete and he entered into the 2017 arrangements on the basis of those assurances, that nothing materially would change between the two arrangements." Dr Zhang sought the assistance of the interpreter and through the interpreter protested as follows:

> "This is absurd. We have never told him that he would directly hold 10% of shares of Legend. We have also never told him that after IPO, that he can directly access those shares. He, himself, also knows that the 2017 Agreement is different from the 2016 Agreement. In the 2016 Agreement, there were only two pages but in the 2017 Agreement, there were at least 40 pages. Dr Fan is a very good scientist and he also has business experience. Nobody misled him and he knew about it.";

(19) Dr Zhang was asked about the difficulties with the lack of registered office and the registration issue. He accepted that mistakes had been made and he took responsibility for the mistakes: "I should have thought about it more closely."

Re-examination of Dr Zhang

92. In re-examination Dr Zhang said that clause 10 of the Subscription Agreement dealt with the position as to "what happens if conflicts of interest arise". Dr Zhang said that when the decision was made about distribution to Dr Fan of some shares Dr Zhang was not the only person who was involved in that decision:

> "When Dr Fan want to sell partners shares, so that fact, mentioned to Biotech, so, I conferred with Legend Biotech executives and the board members, and also GenScript Corp."

93. Dr Zhang referred to the $4 to $5 million possibility. Dr Zhang denied that it was the GP's intention to keep the "shares in the Partnership forever."

Evidence provided by way of documents and communications

94. I now turn to the evidence provided by way of documents and communications.

95. An email dated 3 April 2015 from Dr Zhang to Jingwei and Qian Yan:

> "Can you set up a temporary structure using Project Legend name? Frank Fan will be the project leader and he will report to me directly."

96. The 2016 Agreement was contained in a document entitled "Nanjing Legend Biotechnology Co. Ltd. Share Incentive Plan" dated "7 January 1, 2016". Under a clause headed "Eligibility" it was indicated that eligible would be Nanjing Legend Biotechnology Co. Ltd's management personnel as approved by the board of directors. It is further indicated that "The total planned investment of the Company shall be RMB25, 000,000, and the total share capital of the Company shall be 100,000,000 shares with a par value of RMP 0.25 each." In respect of the numbers of shares:

> "It is intended to grant 10,000,000 shares of the Company to the Participants as from June 1, 2016 under this Plan (total share capital of the Company: 100,000,000 shares), representing 10% of the existing shares of the Company."

Four conditions are specified in Clause 2 (d) including "Making investment of RMB 100,000 in the Company annually for five (5) years from January 1, 2016."

Clause 2(e) provides:

"Prior to the Company's IPO, without the approval of the Company, no Participant shall transfer any of his/her shares to others …"

There is another version of this document which refers to "Equity Incentive Plan" rather than "Share Incentive Plan" and the word "Participant" rather than "Participants" is used.

97. By email dated 23 March 2016 Dr Zhang congratulates Dr Fan and his team on the "good progress" that has been made.

98. There is an email dated 6 June 2016 from Ms Wang to Dr Fan which counsel said attached what was referred to as a proposed draft "Chinese Partnership" which led to nowhere and was not executed. There were many blanks in the document and no figures or names were included. It seemed to contemplate establishing a limited partnership under the provisions of the Partnership Law of the People's Republic of China.

99. Extracts from email Dr Fan to Ms Wang copied to Dr Zhang 15 June 2016 at 10:54 a.m.:

> "Hi Sally & Frank
> Thank you very much for your sincere communication last week. I understand that the company has undergone some changes compared with last year. But I fully appreciate that you and Frank really want to help me become a formal partner, and I really appreciate your trust and recognition of my past work …

I don't have experience in investing …. I can only try my best to raise the 500K RMB that I committed to last year. The other 2 million RMB is really difficult …. I hope you can help me here, and provide me in advance the amount of the original promised bonus … I definitely will work hard to make the Legend achieve great things and take off!"

100. Email Ms Wang to Dr Fan 15 June 13:25:

"Could you please come to my office at 10:30 tomorrow morning to discuss the following matters."

101. Email Ms Wang to Dr Fan 23 June 2016 14:22 re "Share Purchase Plan":

"As for the share purchase plan we talked about last time, since the group has recently completed its contribution to the capital increase of Legend, and it is better to complete the capital increase and the equity investment plans simultaneously or at a similar time, so please let me know your decision not later than June 25. If I fail to receive your reply before that time, you will be considered as giving up the right to purchase shares in such capital increase.

The RMB 2.5 million equity incentive under the original agreement can be determined as vested in advance by way of subscription. If you would like early vesting, please let me know the specific number of shares.

If you wish to participate in the equity investment plan, please be prepared for the payment shortly …"

102. Dr Fan thanks Ms Wang for the "reminder" by email dated 23 June 2016 14:43 and adds:

"After careful consideration, my wife and I decide to try to raise such funds shortly to participate in this capital increase equity investment plan and share the risks and benefits of starting the business of Legend. We will pay RMB 2.5 million to subscribe for 10% of the shares. Thank you and Frank for giving me this opportunity." (My underlining)

103. On 25 August 2016 Dr Fan sent Ms Wang a chaser and asked if it was "possible to change the lock-up period of the restricted shares held by me as a limited partner from 5 years to 4 years" in view of the time which had lapsed since the 2016 Agreement had been signed (which on Dr Fan's case was 18 August 2015).

104. Ms Wang in her email dated 26 August 2016 refers to "some policy obstacles with the government in China in taking forward limited partnerships." Dr Fan responded on the same day: "Understood. Thank you for your detailed explanation. I hope the issue can be resolved soon."

105. Dr Fan later that day sent an email to Ms Wang with the question: "Is it possible to establish the partnership in Hong Kong, or even the Cayman Islands or the British Virgin Islands to address the equity investment issue?" Dr Fan also added:

> "I would like to know the legal effect of the agreement I signed with Frank last year … My anxiety is that I don't wish to hold on my hands any agreements I totally do not understand."

And added:

> "Legend R & D and clinical achievements are amazing and will have a huge impact. Now it is coming into the public vision soon, so I hope you and Frank can help me get the shares that are legally protected as soon as possible …"

106. Ms Wang responded on 29 August 2016 referring to the problems in China, indicating it was difficult to have a "specific timetable" and suggesting that Dr Fan talk to Dr Zhang who was in Nanjing.

There then follows an email from Dr Fan to Ms Wang (cc Dr Zhang) dated 26 September 2016:

> "Recently Frank [Dr Zhang] told me that you are helping roll over the share purchase plan to Legend Cayman. For me, it is a good thing to operate in the red chip structure at the Cayman level, as I hold a Canadian passport …" (my underlining)

107. Ms Wang responded by email dated 28 September 2016 indicating that they were "actively facilitating this matter, but it is difficult to give you a specific schedule … we will definitely proceed with this matter, and there are no substantial obstacles at this stage …"

108. Email dated 21 November 2016 subject "name for an investment fund" Ms Wang to Dr Fan:

> "We are going to set up a Limited Partnership Fund in the Cayman Island (sic) for the purpose of investing in Legend by key personnel. We need a name for the fund. Any suggestions?"

109. Dr Fan responded on 22 November 2016 and on 23 November 2016 Ms Wang emailed Dr Zhang (cc Dr Fan) suggesting a number of names including "AquaPoint".

110. On 19 February 2017 9:46 PM Dr Fan sent an email to Ms Wang (cc Dr Zhang) stating:

> "Thank you for your long-term hard work to get the partnership project to proceed to this far. I briefly read it and find it is comparable to the previous Chinese version of the agreement. My main concern is that throughout the partnership agreement,

I fail to see any reasonable legal protection of the interest of the limited partner. Especially the Clause 7.8 is too harsh to the limited partner …

If the whole Clause 7.87 remain in the agreement, we prefer to say with the original agreement which at least reasonably protect my earning of Legend shares based on an annual basis even it also has some vague conditions …. If an agreement make the limited partners wishes the general partner's goodwill all the time for keeping their own "investment", it is meaningless to encourage the limited partner's peace of mind and confidence. By the way, I believe given the key role and contribution of mind into Legend Biotech so far, I deserve to be granted generously at least 10% of unconditional share …?

111. WeChats 19 February 2017:

Dr Fan:

"Frank, another two to three months have passed with the so-called investment plan. And Sally has never contacted me regarding the progress or any issue, or even replied to me on WeChat… how come execution is so inconceivably poor with this particular lawyer? I trust you act in good faith, but there're problems with her attitude and execution. Do you and Sally see me as a partner for Legend at all? Or"

Dr Zhang:

"Xiaohu: It's totally understandable and right for you to follow up this issue, but you question too much, don't you think so? As you may know if you check GenScript's statements, the company has offered almost 25% of its shares to employees, and sets aside a lot of its shares to retain staff members each year after the IPO. After all, it is the company, not you, that proposed your shareholding in Legend first, correct? Also, the company has previously (sic) signed an agreement with you to this end, the new investment agreement is executed only to make things clearer. Although it's clearer, it's still merely a file, if you don't trust the agreement previously signed by the company, how can you possibly trust the new one? Do you think Legend will grow into a big company if you, one of the main leaders of Legend, always question your partners? Frank." (my underlining)

Dr Fan:

> "Frank, you know I'm short-tempered … I don't mean to be impatient but just want to keep on top of progress … it's not that I don't trust you and Sally, I didn't expect it's so complicated …"

112. On 20 February 2017 2:27am Ms Wang sent an email to Dr Fan (cc Dr Zhang) indicating that the Partnership "the fund for investing Legend was finally incorporated on Feb 16th". Ms Wang attaches the "ARLPA agreement" and asks Dr Fan to review it "and let me know if you have any question" and "Once the ARLPA is finalised, we will move on the subscription agreement …. Since this is our first time to set up such a fund, we don't have any previous experience for reference to understand how much time the whole process will take. The only thing we can do is to push it forward as soon as we can."

113. On 16 March 2017 Dr Fan sends Ms Wang an email:

> "Sorry for taking so long to get back to you. It took me lots of time to convince my wife that this ELP initiative may serve our interest than the previously signed incentive plan in which I can directly access the share of Legend Biotech. Please find attached a revised agreement which we may accept.
> We really appreciated your efforts on this ELP plan are expecting a full agreement with schedule 1 to be available."

Schedule 1 was to include details of capital commitment and contributions. The tracked changes to the draft, amongst other issues, suggested amendments to paragraph 6.6 under the heading "Transfer of Limited Partner Interest" and paragraph 7.8 "mandatory withdrawals".

114. Ms Wang appeared to have forwarded these comments and suggested amendments to Walkers by email 21 March 2017. Some of the changes were accepted and some were rejected.

115. On 27 March 2017 Ms Wang sent an email to Dr Fan attaching a revised draft of an "Amended and Restated Exempted Limited Partnership Agreement by AquaPoint L.P." prepared by Walkers adding:

> "Please give me a call after you review it. I can explain to you the opinion from the attorney."

116. On 28 March 2017 Ms Wang sent an email to Walkers asking for another change suggested by the "employee" in respect of item 7.8 which they thought was reasonable.

117. In the bundle (at page 533) is a document dated "May 25, 2017" entitled "SUBSCRIPTION DOCUMENTS AquaPoint L.P. a Cayman Islands Exempted Limited Partnership" and on the following page (which is signed by Dr Fan) "Subscription Amount: RMB 2,500,000" there is in bold a warning that:

> "EACH ACQUIROR OF A PARTNERSHIP INTEREST MUST BE PREPARED TO BEAR THE ECONOMIC RISK OF INVESTMENT THEREIN FOR AN INDEFINITE PERIOD OF TIME. THE SUBSCRIBERS ARE ENCOURAGED TO SEEK INDEPENDENT LEGAL, ACCOUNTING, INVESTMENT AND TAX ADVICE REGARDING THEIR INDIVIDUAL CIRCUMSTANCES AND

FINANCIAL OBJECTIVES IN DETERMINING WHETHER TO SUBSCRIBE FOR AN INTERST IN THE PARTNERSHIP."

Dr Fan is the Subscriber and at paragraph 5 of the Subscription Agreement (which appears to have been signed on page 11 by Dr Fan) Dr Fan gives various representations, warranties and covenants. At paragraph 5(b) Dr Fan states he has "no intention of distributing or reselling any portion" of his Partnership Interest and "understands the Interest is transferable only with the consent of the General Partner." At paragraph 5(c) Dr Fan agrees that he will not sell or otherwise dispose of "the Interest without the consent of the General Partner, which may be granted or withheld in its sole discretion." Paragraph 5 (e) reads:

> "(e) in formulating a decision to invest in the Partnership, the Subscriber has not relied or acted on the basis of any representation or other information purported to be given on behalf of the Partnership or the General Partner except as set forth in the Partnership Agreement (it being understood that no person has been authorised by the Partnership or the General Partner to furnish any such representation or other information); and
> (f) the Subscriber recognises that there is not now any public market for the Interests and that such a market is not expected to develop; accordingly, it may not be possible for the Subscriber readily to liquidate the Subscriber's investment in the Partnership."

At paragraph 7(b) Dr Fan represents and warrants that he "has reviewed and understands the Partnership Agreement and this Subscription Agreement". At paragraph 7(c) it is provided that Dr Fan has not received, nor is entitled to rely upon, any representations by the Partnership, the General Partner or any agent thereof. At paragraph 7(d):

"the Subscriber is aware that except as provided in the Partnership Agreement, the Subscriber will have no right to withdraw from the Partnership or to receive distributions in liquidation of the Partnership Interest"

Paragraph 7(g)

"the Subscriber is not relying on the Partnership, the General Partner or any of their partners, members, directors, officers, employees agents or representatives for legal accounting, investment or tax advice, and the Subscriber has sought independent legal, accounting, investment and tax advice to the extent the Subscriber has deemed necessary or appropriate in connection with the Subscriber's decision to subscribe for Partnership Interest."

Paragraph 10 concerns conflict of interest and provides:

"The Subscriber acknowledges and is aware that the General Partner or its directors may from time to time provide investment management or advisory service or be otherwise involved in other collective investment schemes established by parties other than the Partnership whether or not such schemes have similar objectives to those of the Partnership. It is, therefore, possible that the General Partner or its directors or any of them may, in the course of business, have potential conflicts of interest with the Partnership and the Subscriber will not hold the General Partner or its directors liable to any damage suffered by the Subscriber arising therefrom.

The Subscriber further acknowledges and is aware that the General Partner, its directors or any of its associates may invest in, directly or indirectly, or manage or advise other collective investment schemes or accounts which invest in assets which may also be purchased or sold by the Partnership. Neither the General Partner, its directors nor any of its affiliates nor any of its associates is under any obligation to offer investment opportunities of which any of them becomes aware to the Partnership or to account to the Partnership (or share with the Partnership or inform the Partnership) any such transaction or any benefit received by any of them from any such transaction."

118. The LPA is dated "May 25 2017". Clause 6.6 concerns the "Transfer of Limited Partner Interest" and was set out in full in my judgment delivered on 23 November 2021. Clause 9 concerns distributions and provides:

> "At the time or times determined by the General Partner, the General Partner shall cause the Partnership to distribute any assets of the Partnership that it does not, in its discretion, consider to be necessary to the operation of the Partnership. Any distribution pursuant to this Clause 9 shall be made to the Partners pro rata in accordance with the Partners' respective interests determined by reference to their Capital Contribution from time to time."

119. There is a WeChat message:

28 May 2017 Frank Fan to Ms Wang:

"I have signed it, and will send it right away."

120. On 1 June 2017 Ms Wang sent Dr Fan an email:

> "Our attorney requests one more document to be signed before the new investment documents can be fully executed. Please find it attached. Basically it will stop the previous contract."

The document attached was entitled "Acknowledgement" (sometimes referred to as the "Confirmation Letter" in Dr Fan's evidence) and Dr Fan acknowledged that the "Original Share Incentive plan" only contained "general provisions and principles." Dr Fan agrees it is terminated on the execution of the LPA and that he will not claim any rights "in accordance with any provisions of the Original Share Incentive Plan." It is common ground that the Acknowledgement was executed.

121. On 2 June 2017 Frank Fan in a WeChat message to Ms Wang raises concerns in respect of the 25 May 2017 date and asks what the difference is between the "Partnership Agreement" and the "Restated Partnership Agreement" adding:

> "I don't quite get certain parts of the agreement …"

In an apparent reference to the Acknowledgement by WeChat message 2 June 2017 to Ms Wang, Dr Fan says: "Now under this agreement, all the shares in Legend previously awarded to me are cancelled … So could the lawyer take my concerns into consideration, and carefully revise the provisions of the agreement to duly protect my interests under the original agreement under such circumstances or under other unforeseeable extreme conditions. If so I'll sign it without any hesitation. Otherwise, I hope to sign a new agreement that is duly revised based on the original agreement."

122. There then follows further WeChat messages:

3 June 2017

Ms Wang:

> "…the risk you mentioned does not exist … They aren't going to divest Legend … The best news for you is that your stake in Nanjing Legend will be turned into shares in Cayman Legend. The entity to be listed will definitely be Cayman Legend, and can't be Nanjing Legend by any means. This is what really matters." (my underlining)

3 June 2017:

Dr Fan

> "Is the AquaPoint investment only a capital increase? How much does my modest investment account for the total equity in Legend?"

3 June 2017 Ms Wang:

> "It'll hit CNY 25 million after the capital increase as set out in the original agreement. You will hold a 10% stake in AquaPoint."

3 June 2017 Dr Fan:

> "… I just want to get a full understanding of the partnership program, and details concerning me …"

Ms Wang:

> "No problem. The one that has already been signed is about the establishment of AquaPoint. It was prepared by the Cayman lawyer. AquaPoint investment in Legend involves a listed company … The shareholding ratio that you're concerned about is clearly specified in it."

123. Email 7 June 2017 from Ms Wang to Dr Fan:

> "Attached please find the Legend subscription agreement. Please keep it confidential. Your percentage of share may not be straightforward stated as 10% in this document. I will forward another email from the attorney explaining how it was set up. The document hasn't been completed yet, mainly they have to determine if RMB can be accepted in this document. Do let me know first if you have any question." (my underlining)

124. Further WeChat messages on 8 June 2021 Dr Fan:

> "…The original plan is that I contribute CNY 2.5 million, of which CNY 2 million will be paid by the company as allowance over the five years … Then will it soon become even worse for me than the original deal? … Can you find time to talk and explain to me? Thanks. Or rather, I misunderstand. Please advise, thanks."

Ms Wang:

"It's always been CNY 25 million. The allowances remain the same, only that no such clause will be included in this agreement. The 10 million refers to the number of shares."

Dr Fan:

"OK. Got it"

Ms Wang:

"The total investment in the company is CNY 25 million"

Dr Fan:

"I understand now, thanks."

Ms Wang:

"The valuation is conducted based on this. This agreement is not to change any material personal interest of your's. It's only intended to make the original agreement legitimate, and to create scope for future development. You made headlines in the past couple of days. Won widespread international recognition! Chinese cancer immunotherapy achieved breakthrough …" (my underlining)

125. Email 8 June 2017 8:39 PM from Ms Wang to Dr Fan:

"If you don't have any further concern, please signed the attached document and return one original copy to me at your earliest convenience so that we can move forward."

126. Email 8 June 107 9:32 PM from Ms Wang to Dr Fan:

> "Make sure you use the version I sent today since it has some changes and also with dates filled in. I will try my best to push it faster. At the same time, let's hope everything goes smoothly."

127. Dr Fan returns the signed Acknowledgement by email to Ms Wang dated 9 June 2017 10:21 AM and that appears to have completed the execution of the three documents which comprised the 2017 Agreement, namely (1) the Subscription Agreement, (2) the LPA and (3) the Acknowledgement.

128. By email dated 14 June 2017 subject "Option award" Dr Zhang requests Dr Fan to send to him a list of key employees who need to be awarded options. Dr Fan responds on 15 June 2017 specifying twelve names with his name first on the list and adds:

> "However, I do suggest the first option plan to cover all Legend employees."

129. Dr Zhang responded on 14 June 2017:

> "A good leader should take care of their employees first. If their employees are not successful, the leader cannot possibly be successful.
> Since it has taken a long time take care of your stock, can we spend some time to take care of your employees first?" (my underlining)

130. WeChat message 11 January 2020 Dr Fan to Ms Wang in respect of a questionnaire: "Does the aqurapoint (sic) fund have any voting power on Legend Cayman? and further, do I need to list all my share as "no voting power" and "no investment power"?"

131. In the registration statement filed by Legend Cayman 13 May 2020 with the Securities and Exchange Commission in Washington page 207 there is reference to "Lock-up Agreements" and an agreement that the shares shall not be sold or otherwise disposed of until 180 days after the date of the prospectus.

132. The principal shareholders are specified on page 176 and include:

(1) GenScript Biotech Corporation Number of Ordinary Shares Beneficially Owned 169,680,000; Percentage of Shares Beneficially Owned Before Offering 76.9%;

(2) AquaPoint L.P 30,320,000; 13.7%; and

(3) Dr Zhang 34,234,267; 15.2%.

133. By email dated "01/06/2021" subject "Request the dissolve of AP partnership" Dr Fan wished Ms Wang a happy new year and added:

> "As the lock up period for the holding of the shares in Legend Biotech Corporation ("Legend") by AquaPoint L.P. (the "Partnership") has expired, I would like to discuss with you the status of the Partnership.
> As you know, I had agreed to have my shares in Legend to be held through the Partnership. Now that the IPO of Legend has taken place successfully and the lock up period has expired, I do not see any reason for me to continue to hold the shares through the Partnership … I understand that you are now exercising the powers of Genscript Corporation, the general partner, and that you could therefore take the appropriate steps to implement this dissolution and distribution of the shares … I hope you can appreciate the importance of this matter for me and the reason why I want to have it resolved quickly and amicably."

Dr Fan sent a chaser on 18 January 2021 and Ms Wang responded that day as follows:

> "There is one thing I have to clarify that I'm not authorised to exercise the power of GenScript Corporation, meaning that I can pass your request and collect information needed but I'm not the person to make the decision."

134. Dr Fan on the same day raised the following question:

> "Could you please further clarify who can fully represent the GP of AP partnership for now and how to efficiently communicate with the GP in the future for the interest of the LP?"

135. Ms Wang responds on 20 January 2021:

> "We have considered your request and the proposal stated in your email and consulted Cayman legal advice in this.
>
> Pursuant to the amended and restated exempted limited partnership agreement (the "LPA" of AquaPoint L.P. (the "Partnership") may be wound up voluntarily upon certain Winding Up Event (as defined in the LPA). Based on your circumstances described, this does not fall within any of the Winding Up Event stated, and we also do not consider it a viable option to wind up the Partnership as this would involve the interest of the other limited partners.
> We propose that the Partnership will consider and assist in the sale of shares in Legend Biotech Corporation ("Legend") upon your written request and prior notice. After receiving such notice, the General Partner will exercise its discretion to approve and determine the amount of shares to sell and the manner of such mechanism to facilitate the sale and distribution upon your request. Please be advised that all such sales has to follow regulations.

Please let us know your plans on selling.

Thank you."

136. Dr Fan replies on "2021-02-03" and sets out the reasons for his view that it would be appropriate for the Partnership to be dissolved and its assets distributed to the limited partners in accordance with their partnership interests. Dr Fan states:

"Given that I am a key found of Legend Biotech and continue to serve as the Chief Scientific Officer, I believe my request to be very reasonable. I simply wish to hold my shares in Legend directly myself, particularly now that the lockup period has expired for a while.

We have worked together for a number years and have always sought the growth and benefit of Legend. I do not wish for this matter to become contentious or litigious and believe that it is in our mutual best interest as well as the best interest of Legend to have this resolved amicably as soon as possible so that we can move on and focus our efforts on advancing the research and development of Legend and bring the company to a new level.

In any event, I would like to request that up to 2,000,000 Legend ADR shares be sold in one year and the proceeds distributed to me while we sort out our differences regarding the Partnership. I will send you a rule 10b5-1 plan in a separate email to get the process started. Please note that this request is an interim request and does not in any way compromise my position above."

Dr Fan sends the draft sales plan on 9 February 2021 with chasers on 11 and 20 February 2021. Ms Wang asks him to contact Dr Zhang "directly".

137. GenScript Biotech Corporation on 9 February 2021 provided an announcement to the Stock Exchange of Hong Kong entitled "Update on the Investigation". It referred to announcements dated 21 September and 22 November 2020. The Board reported that Dr Zhang, the former chairman and chief executive officer of the Company and the former Chairman of the board of directors and chief executive officer of Legend Biotech was released on bail on 9 February 2021. To the best of the Company's knowledge it is stated that "no formal charge has been made against Dr Zhang."

138. By email dated 17 February 2021 Dr Fan communicates with Dr Zhang and Ms Wang regarding "the sales plan of my shares in Legend" (my underlining) and noting that "it is great that now you are more accessible" but if Dr Zhang wanted to delegate his authority to Ms Wang he should confirm that he'll set up a 1:1 meeting with her and send all future communications to her. Ms Wang responded on 19 February 2021 asking Dr Fan to contact Dr Zhang directly.

139. There appears in the bundle a note from Dr Fan of a call on 19 February 2021 with Dr Zhang suggesting a 1:1 meeting rather than communicating via email. Dr Fan's note of the meeting on 26 February at Dr Zhang's office says that Dr Zhang refused the sales plan "and only mentioned maybe let me sale 1 million $ amount (about 30k ADR) in one year. His reason is that Legend need to raise fund this year and my sales plan will crash the stock price …" I decided to communicate with him via instant messaging (WeChat) in Chinese which we used to interact efficiently."

140. Dr Fan sent an email dated 5 March 2021 to Dr Zhang subject "Request of discussing sale plan of Frank Fan's security" Importance: High:

"Since we very briefly discussed my stock sales plan last time on the 1:1 appointment, I haven't heard back from you …

It has been extremely difficult to access you since Sept 2020 and I was very happy that you become more reachable after you was granted a parole. However, obviously, my application of the 10b-5-1 sales plan encounter unexpected difficulties. I was ever very optimistic to my very first time stock sales in improving my life style after enduring so many years of low salary pay given the key leader position I am holding in field of global cell therapy since 2017.

Again, since I never expected such difficulties in the communication of approval as well as the surprisingly still very restricted position even after IPO of Legend Biotech, I did initiate a few personal financial plan which now will highly likely giving me trouble down the road, given the trade window (Mar 22-24) will be missed soon if I still fail to win your cooperation.

So, please, please do response to my requests in writing (either by WeChat, phone messaging or email) and give me your offer ASAP of a reasonable amount of my stocks you allow me to sell so the trade window can be catch. Otherwise I will be in big trouble in personal financing. I also modified the 10b-5-1 plan and further reduced the asked sales amount to merely up to 1 million ADR. I attached the modified 10b-5-1 document for your approval. If you are still not satisfied with my current bargain please do offer me ASAP a maximum number which you think is reasonable and fair.

I really appreciate your consideration and looking forward to a prompt reply with these."

141. Dr Zhang (signing off as "Frank Zhang, Ph.D. Former Chairman of GenScript Biotech") responded on 5 March 2021:

> "I have talked to Legend Management team and board. Since they are in the process of raising capitals, they feel very uncomfortable that one of the major shareholder will sell stocks. They intend not to grant stock selling. After many rounds of discussions, here is the amount of share they will allow you to sell:
> ADS: 200,000 shares.
> That will give you around $4-5 M USD.
> This is the final offer. We hope that you understand the effort and current situation. So many of our employees are working very hard to get over the crisis, and your stock in Legend will become more valuable after the crisis."

142. Dr Fan responded on 5 March 2021 thanking Dr Zhang for the offer and accepting it. He asked who the contact person will be. Dr Zhang responded on 5 March 2021 "For the procedures, Sally will appoint a person for you to contact".

143. By email dated 10 March 2021 from Ms Wang to Dr Zhang (cc Dr Fan) the following question was asked:

> "Can you please advise how many ADS you approved to sell?"

144. By letter dated 22 April 2021 from Travers Thorp Alberga ("TTA"), the attorneys representing Dr Fan, to the Partnership and the GP. TTA stated that Dr Fan was "the scientific founder of the Legend group." Reference was made to the 2016 Agreement and the 2017 Agreement and a demand was made that the GP transfer to Dr Fan the shares held by the Partnership in Legend Cayman. It was stated that Dr Fan is "a limited partner holding 65.96% of the partnership interests."

145. There follows various WeChat conversation records between Emma Dong and Dr Fan in respect of progress of the selling of the shares including the following exchange:

"23 April 2021 at 15:13, Emma Dong

Hi Dr Fan! Today Frank [Dr Zhang] said let's delay the AquaPoint trade, and he needs to consider other things, but he didn't give any details. How about this, you will discuss with him, and I continue the preparation work as formal for now.

23 April 2021 at 15:22, Frank Fan [Dr Fan]. "Noted, he is punishing me."

146. In a document entitled "Apr. 23, B1 recording" the following appears (upon which Dr Zhang and Dr Fan were not cross-examined):

Frank Zhang:
Let's help you, OK? You can think about it again. Once you file a lawsuit, the nature of the matter will change …. First you asked to sell shares and the company has agreed. If now you intend to file a lawsuit, I'm not sure whether it will affect your sale.)

Frank Fan:
What do you mean? You have already approved.

Frank Zhang:
That is to say, you aim at me … I can't intervene in how the legal department deals with these matters right now … I can only advise you as a friend and a former co-worker. But you have brought things to a deadlock. If you still decide to file a lawsuit against me and the company, everyone will suffer a bad end, right? ….

Frank Zhang:

….If you really file a lawsuit, that will definitely become a fight between the two sides …. In a lawsuit, each side will try every mean to find reasons to defend itself.

Frank Fan:

That's completely different from what you just said. You didn't listen to my explanation at all. You said that I didn't have the right. You implied that I would be fired if I file a lawsuit, right? I would lose my job and be taken back my shares because I violate the AquaPoint agreement.

Frank Zhang:

Xiaho, you have the right to file a lawsuit, and you even have your right to kill a person. Do you understand? ….

Frank Zhang:

All decisions are risky, right? Once you make a decision, such as going to kill a person today, you have the right to kill. But what would happen after killing? You have to think about it, right?

Frank Fan:

At least it's not like what you just said – you're going to fire me once I file a lawsuit. Not that attitude, right?

Frank Zhang:

No, not at all.

Frank Fan:

Thank you for changing your attitude …

Frank Zhang:

> …. It's possible that you will win the lawsuit and get your voting rights, and you can sell your shares as many as you want. In other words, I have also got that right to sell my shares at any time, but how many can I sell? …

Frank Fan:

> … I hope that you will not interfere with the sale as you have approved …

Frank Zhang:

> Xiaohu, I have no right to do that, OK? … The legal department here doesn't report to me. And I can only approve the matters that others want me to approve. If they don't want me to approve, I can only do accordingly.

Frank Fan:

> Really? What do you mean? You are still the GP of Aqua Point. I hope …

Frank Zhang:

> I'm the GP, but the GP is also under control by others.

Frank Fan:

> OK. I'm just talking about your rights as a GP.

Frank Zhang:

> It's still about control. If I was told not to allow you to sell shares, then of course I need to obey the order.

Frank Fan:

As far as I know, you are still the actual controller of GenScript. You have all the rights. No one will interfere with your rights. If the 200,000 shares that have been approved for me to sell cannot be sold, it must be your own decision, not that others can influence you. So I hope you can keep your promise and fulfil your promise. You have approved it!

Frank Zhang:

I can't … I can't promise you that, okay? …

Frank Fan:

… But don't threaten my job and don't threaten to take back my equity. I don't think you have such right, even based on Aqua Point's.

Frank Zhang:

Yes, I don't have such right. You are right. Alright …

Frank Fan:

… I am an employee, but I am also one founder of Legend. I have made so many contributions to the company. Did I get enough recognition and affirmation for my contributions? … You can know your rights and I will understand mine. Shall we still resolve this issue friendly through lawyers?

Frank Zhang:

Yes, we can solve this issue through lawyers."

147. TTA sent a further letter dated 26 April 2021 referring to the discussions between Dr Zhang and Dr Fan and Dr Zhang's instruction to Emma Dong to suspend the sale of shares by the Partnership. TTA said this supported Dr Fan's position that the Partnership should be dissolved. TTA sent a chaser on 12 May 2021 enclosing a copy of the draft petition. Dentons, acting for the GP, responded on 21 May 2021 indicating that the 2016 Agreement was rescinded by the 2017 Agreement and referred to the other signed documentation. Dentons stated that Dr Fan had not adopted the correct methodology for attempting to transfer his interest in the Partnership. Dentons added:

> "There are perfectly good reasons for not wishing to allow Dr Fan to have the ability to directly sell 10% of the shares of the Company on the open market with their corresponding voting rights. The most obvious reason is that impact on share price would result from flooding the market with that proportion of shares, which would operate to the manifest disadvantage not only of the Partnership but also the Company and its shareholders. It cannot be suggested that avoiding such a result is anything other on the part of the GP than acting in full accordance with its duties to the Partnership."

148. By letter dated 26 May 2021 from Dentons to TTA the following was stated:

> "Our client is willing to release to your client 5% of the proportion of Legend shares held under his interest in the Partnership within 21 days of settlement, followed by 3.5% every year thereafter. This offer is conditional upon both parties bearing their own costs and is open for acceptance for a period of 14 days.
> We are sure your client will recognise that selling even the above number of shares in Legend on the market each year would present a substantial risk to the share price of the company and potentially disadvantage other shareholders. Naturally, our client wishes to avoid unnecessary prejudice to the shareholders of Legend in general."

149. Dentons wrote further on 12 August 2021 asking if Dr Fan "will attempt an LPA compliant exit within the next 7 days."

150. TTA by letter dated 17 December 2021 suggested that the GP "transfer all of the proportionate shares in Legend Cayman attributable to our client's interest in the Partnership to our client and our client's name shall be placed onto the register of members of Legend Cayman. For the avoidance of doubt, should your client accept this offer of settlement, our client will be receiving, on our undertaking, 20,000,000 ordinary shares, or 10,000,000 ADS shares in Legend Cayman." and following the transfer the winding up petition would be withdrawn.

151. I bear in mind the point well made by Lord Briggs in Lungowe v Vedanta [2019] 2 WLR 1051 at paragraph 66 in respect of the potential for distortion involved in the translation of the evidence.

The Assessment of the Evidence

152. The contemporaneous documents and communications are of great assistance in my assessment of the evidence and the findings of the material facts in this case.

Dr Fan

153. As regards the oral evidence where there was any conflict on material points between the evidence of Dr Zhang and Dr Fan I generally preferred the evidence of Dr Fan. It is correct that Dr Fan did not always answer questions concisely and directly and frequently went off on a tangent. However, his evidence on the main factual issues in dispute had the ring of truth about it and was largely supported by the contemporaneous communications between him and Dr Zhang and Ms Wang. He understandably had very strong feelings in respect of the unfair, unjust and inequitable way in which he had been treated. I do not think his evidence can be dismissed on the basis that he unduly exaggerated his contribution and his desire for the shares was just the "wishful thinking" of someone who plainly had a significant stake in the outcome of the hearing. Dr Fan's evidence is largely consistent with the contemporaneous communications put before the court. His evidence is largely internally consistent and also consistent with what he has said on other occasions. The inherent probabilities based on the evidence as a whole point to Dr Fan's evidence on the main issues in dispute being true. His evidence on the material points was largely unshaken by way of a lengthy cross-examination. It is unnecessary for me to determine the factual dispute as to whether Dr Fan was a co-founder and the de facto CEO. It was common ground that, at the very least, Dr Fan made a "significant contribution" and I so find.

Dr Zhang

154. Even taking into account language difficulties, the unreliability of human memory, the involvement of translators and an interpreter and difficulties with evidence being given via video link rather than in person I found, as will be plain from my findings below in the determination section of this judgment, Dr Zhang's evidence on various material points unsatisfactory and difficult to accept. His reluctance to openly acknowledge, without prompting, the very significant contribution of Dr Fan did not reflect upon him well. Dr Zhang's efforts to belittle Dr Fan were also unimpressive and tainted his evidence generally. He was however very open on the conflict of interest point and I shall refer to this in further detail below.

Ms Wang

155. Insofar as Ms Wang was concerned she came across as a very intelligent and astute person of business. She answered the majority of the questions in a direct and carefully considered manner. Her loyalties however were plainly towards Dr Zhang and supporting his position. It is likely that the GP called her in the knowledge that she was "on side". Her evidence on the "original agreement" exchanges seemed difficult to justify although Mr Corbett did his best to do so in his closing submissions. It is surprising that she did not express any views as to her position as a limited partner and her wishes in that respect. I gained the impression that she did not want to say anything that may displease Dr Zhang or the GP. Where her evidence on material disputed facts conflicted with Dr Fan's evidence, I preferred the evidence of Dr Fan.

The Law

156. There was no serious dispute as to the applicable law which was in effect one of the few areas of common ground between the parties. There was, however, a significant dispute as to the application of the relevant law to the facts and circumstances of this case.

Jurisdiction

157. Fortunately it is common ground between the parties that the court has jurisdiction to wind up the Partnership if it is just and equitable to do so and I accept that this court has such jurisdiction. It is unnecessary for me to enter the interesting debate at first instance as to the precise nature of the jurisdiction (see for example Parker J in Padma Fund LP unreported FSD judgment 8 October 2021; and Kawaley J in Formation Group (Cayman) Fund I, LP unreported FSD judgment 21 April 2022). It may require a judgment of the Court of Appeal, or the Privy Council or legislation to finally determine and put those knotty jurisdictional issues to bed. Counsel in the case before me agreed that the court has jurisdiction to dissolve or wind up an exempted limited partnership. The debate at first instance is whether such jurisdiction arises pursuant to section 35 (e) of the Partnership Act as applied by section 3 of the ELPA or pursuant to section 92(e) of the Companies Act as applied by section 36(3) of the ELPA. Under section 35 (e) of the Partnership Act on application by a partner the court may decree a dissolution of the partnership "whenever in any case circumstances have arisen which, in the opinion of the court, render it just and equitable that the partnership be dissolved". Section 92 (e) of the Companies Act provides that a company may be wound up by the court if "the Court is of the opinion that it is just and equitable that the company should be wound up." It is not in dispute between the parties that the court has jurisdiction and the main issue before the court is whether it is "just and equitable" that the Partnership be "wound up"/"dissolved".

Just and Equitable

158. Counsel referred to my brief summary of the law in respect of the just and equitable ground at paragraph 10 (11) and (12) of my judgment delivered on 23 November 2021 dismissing the application of the GP that the winding up petition be struck out and I do not repeat such summary here but have full regard to it and also to paragraphs 71 and 72 of such judgment and Lau & Chu [2020] I WLR 4656 (JCPC).

159. Ma CJ and Lord Millett NPJ delivering the leading judgment of the well regarded Hong Kong Court of Final Appeal in Re Yung Kee Holdings Ltd [2015] 6 HKC 644 applied the well-known authority Ebrahimi v Westbourne Galleries Ltd [1973] AC 360 and held that considerations of a personal character arising between individuals might make it unjust, or inequitable to insist on legal rights, or to exercise them in a particular way. This might come in the form of a mutual understanding and there might be situations in which equity might find sufficient unfairness or breaches of good faith so as to attract relief granted by the court. The jurisdiction to wind up on the just and equitable ground is a wide jurisdiction but it must be exercised in a principled manner. The relevant constitutional documents provide for the way in which the relevant entity should be run and normally govern the relations between the various stakeholders. However in certain circumstances equity will intervene by reference to notions of good faith "meaning that in certain circumstances equity would restrain the exercise of strict legal rights." (paragraph 44). There may be situations in which equity may find sufficient unfairness or breaches of good faith so as to attract relief being granted by the court but "this does not mean that a judge can do whatever he or she happens to regard as fair" (paragraph 45). The law needs to be as clear and as defined as possible so everyone knows as much as possible where they stand.

160. Lord Wilberforce in Ebrahimi wisely stated that it "would be impossible and wholly undesirable to define the circumstances in which these considerations may arise". Lord Wilberforce referred to relationships being sometimes adequately and exhaustively laid down in the relevant constitutional documents adding: "The superimposition of equitable considerations requires something more", typically including an element of a personal relationship involving mutual confidence and/or an agreement or understanding over and above what is specified in the constitutional documents.

161. Ribeiro PJ, Tang PJ and Fok PJ agreed with Ma CJ and Lord Millett NPJ. I agree that when courts at the first instance are considering whether there is "something more" they must conduct such exercise in a principled way and with full regard to the desirability of legal certainty especially in matters of commerce. They should not however sacrifice justice, equity and fairness on the altar of legal certainty.

162. The judgment of Moses JA in FamilyMart China Holding Co. Ltd. v Ting Chuan (Cayman Islands) Holding Corporation (23 April 2020) is also of assistance. I note that the Board granted permission to appeal on 29 September 2021 and the judgment of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council is awaited with interest. The general just and equitable and conflict of interests principles and their application in partnership cases however appeared to be common ground between the parties.

ELPA

163. I have also considered the ELPA and statutory context and caselaw within which exempted limited partnerships exist and operate under the laws of the Cayman Islands. I have noted the judgment of Parker J in Kuwait Ports Authority v Port Link GP Ltd (FSD unreported judgment 25 November 2021) which is also subject to a pending appeal and the judgment of the Court of Appeal is awaited with interest.

The submissions

164. I do not lengthen this already too lengthy judgment by setting out all the submissions, both in writing and orally, put before the court. They form part of the court record and I have full regard to them all. It should be obvious from the determination section of this judgment which submissions I have accepted and which submissions I have rejected.

Determination

165. When I conducted an initial, somewhat superficial, survey of the papers in this case some preliminary thoughts were that Dr Fan may be strictly bound by the 2017 Agreement he had signed up to and he may have to take the consequences of his failure to take legal advice. However, having now heard oral evidence and submissions and on mature and considered reflection, I am persuaded that there is "something more" and equitable considerations lead me to conclude that it is just and equitable that the Partnership be brought to an end. As will be seen below, I have concluded that there is plenty "more" in Ebrahimi terms.

Justifiable loss of trust and confidence

166. Dr Fan has proved a justifiable loss of trust and confidence in the management of the Partnership by the GP judged to the requisite objective standards in the circumstances of this case. Moreover, in my judgment the affairs of the Partnership have been conducted by the GP (with Dr Zhang being in the driving seat in that respect) in a manner which is oppressive and in breach of Dr Fan's legitimate expectation and understanding.

Frustration of legitimate expectation and reasonable understanding

167. Dr Fan had a legitimate expectation and reasonable understanding outside the 2017 Agreement. The legitimate expectation and reasonable understanding was that 6 months after the IPO he would be entitled to have access to 10% of the shares in Legend Cayman. The legitimate expectation and understanding was created and encouraged by Dr Zhang and Ms Wang on Dr Zhang's behalf. That legitimate expectation and understanding has been unreasonably frustrated by the Partnership, the GP and Dr Zhang.

168. There is ample supportive evidence before this court in this respect. I highlight some of the more obvious examples below:

(1) the affidavit and oral evidence of Dr Fan which I accept on this legitimate expectation/understanding issue;

(2) I do not accept that the references to the "original agreement" in the various communications were references to some agreement other than the 2016 Agreement. I find that the references to "original agreement" were in fact to the 2016 Agreement or at the very least this was Dr Fan's reasonable understanding. Even if I am wrong in this respect there is plenty of other evidence over and above communications which rely on the "original agreement" reference to justify Dr Fan's reasonable understanding and legitimate expectation;

(3) the evidence of Ms Wang was that they intended to honour what Dr Zhang had promised by way of the 2016 Agreement and Dr Zhang seemed to accept this;

(4) the various email and WeChat messages are supportive of the legitimate expectation/understanding;

(5) I do not accept Dr Zhang's evidence that where he was referring Dr Zhang to "your stock" he was referring to "some stock in the limited partnership". The references to "your stock" were, I find, to the shares in the company which was the subject of the IPO;

(6) Dr Fan's uncontradicted legitimate expectation and understanding is plain from his email to Ms Wang (cc Dr Zhang) dated 26 September 2016 and his reference to "roll over the share purchase plan to Legend Cayman.";

(7) Dr Zhang in his WeChat with Dr Fan on 19 February 2017 referred to "After all, it is the company, not you, that proposed your shareholdings in Legend first, correct?...the new investment agreement is executed only to make things clearer..";

(8) Ms Wang in her WeChat with Dr Fan on 3 June 2017 openly confirmed the position:

"The best news for you is that your stake in Nanjing Legend will be turned into shares in Cayman Legend. The entity to be listed will definitely be Cayman Legend and can't be Nanjing Legend by any means. This is what really matters.";

(9) Ms Wang also recognised that Dr Fan had a 10% share in her email dated 7 June 2017;

(10) Dr Fan's legitimate expectation and understanding was further confirmed by Ms Wang by way of a WeChat exchange on 8 June 2021. Ms Wang confirmed that the 2017 Agreement "is not to change any material personal interest of yours. It's only intended to make the original he intended to make the original agreement legitimate and to create scope for future development." I find that the reference to the "original agreement" in that context was the 2016 Agreement. I also find that Ms Wang was at pains to provide reassurance to Dr Fan that his "material personal" interests would not be changed by way of the 2017 Agreement;

(11) Dr Zhang in effect confirmed this again by his email to Dr Fan on 14 of June 2017 and the reference to "your stock";

(12) furthermore when Dr Fan in his email dated 17 February 2021 to Dr Zhang and Ms Wang refers to "my shares in Legend" neither of them sought to contradict him; and

(13) Dr Zhang in his email dated 5 March 2017 to Dr Fan referred to "your stock in Legend."

169. Dr Fan in entering into the 2017 Agreement trusted Dr Zhang and Ms Wang to do the right thing and to honour the roll over of Dr Fan's Legend Nanjing shares to Legend Cayman shares. Dr Zhang and the GP have betrayed that trust and it can easily be seen how Dr Fan legitimately and reasonably believes, after his significant contribution to the increasing value of Legend Cayman, that he has been badly let down by the GP and those that control the GP. Dr Fan has been unfairly treated. It was not mere "wishful thinking" by Dr Fan. It was a reasonable and legitimate expectation that he would get the Legend Shares after the IPO, whatever was stated in the 2017 Agreement.

170. Mr Corbett criticised Dr Fan for hunting down a goldmine but it was, I find on the evidence, a goldmine largely created by the efforts of Dr Fan. It is only fair, just and equitable that he shares in the benefits now rather than having to wait 300 years (as originally in effect suggested by the GP) or 26 years (as subsequently in effect suggested by the GP) to obtain his shares. The GP's consideration of and reactions to Dr Fan's reasonable requests for the shares shows the GP in a bad light. Such is indicative of the GP's breach of its fiduciary duties and its failure to act in the best interests of the Partnership and its limited partners. Dr Fan had nearly a 70% interest. He should have been treated with respect and fairness. He was not so treated. He was left with no reasonable alternative but to file the petition.

Fiduciary duties and conflicts of interest

171. There is considerable strength in Dr Fan's point that the GP has been acting in breach of its fiduciary duties in particular its duty to act in good faith and in the best interests of the Partnership. Dr Zhang is in control of the GP. Dr Zhang is hopelessly conflicted. He is the beneficial owner of shares in Legend Cayman. He also has control of the Partnership's shares in Legend Cayman. The GP (through the actions of Dr Zhang) is not acting in the best interests of the Partnership. The clearest example of this is the GP's approach when it receives a request from Dr Fan for his portion of the shares to be transferred to him. A general partner acting in good faith and in the best interests of the Partnership would primarily have regard to the position of the limited partners and yet remarkably there is no evidence of the GP consulting Ms Wang and seeking her views. I also note that Ms Wang as a limited partner has not opposed the making of a winding up order.

172. It was put to Ms Wang, who came across as a very intelligent witness well aware of fiduciary duties and the need to properly manage conflicts of interests, that when Dr Zhang is wearing his GP hat "he has to put out of his mind the interests of Legend Cayman, the interests of GenScript, his own personal interest as a shareholder. He has to think about the Partnership doesn't he?" Ms Wang, in a well-considered answer, properly replied "That's correct". Ms Wang was asked how Dr Zhang could do that, "isn't there obviously a conflict in the way he acts as the GP representative in that situation?" Ms Wang responded "That's a very good question" and indeed it was. Ms Wang had no real answer to the question, although she sought refuge in vague generalisations that they had a "governance mechanism" to cover that. There was no evidence before the court as to the "governance mechanism" or as to compliance with it. Dr Zhang was hopelessly conflicted but even during cross examination refused to accept this obvious conflict. Dr Zhang said:

> "I take account of the individual LP. I take account of the Company as a whole, the Legend Biotech as a whole, because those two things cannot be separated from each other and this LP."

173. Dr Zhang was asked what if both limited partners had asked for their shares to be transferred to them? Dr Zhang, with extraordinary frankness, responded:

> "I will working for their interest, and I will working for also the Company's interest in that mission. I am working for the LP interest, the Company's interest together."

174. It was fairly put to Dr Zhang that he was confusing the interests of the limited partners with the interests of the Company in which he holds shares and that he was blending the two together and all that Dr Zhang could come up with in response, no doubt on the basis that the best form of defence is to attack, was "You are blending them together, you know".

175. In re-examination Dr Zhang said when Dr Fan wanted to sell the "partners shares" Dr Zhang "mentioned to Biotech, so, I conferred with Legend Biotech executives and the board members, and also GenScript Corp"

176. Dr Zhang, at paragraph 58 of his second affidavit refers to the approach in February 2021 from Dr Fan for permission to sell about 2 million shares of "Legend stock (about $56M value)". Dr Zhang says he was in contact with "Legend executives" and they in effect decided against it because it would be bad for Legend Cayman. They decided to offer Dr Fan "the opportunity to sell shares and obtain $4 to $5 million." It is plain from the evidence that Dr Zhang was putting his own personal interests and the interests of Legend Cayman above the interests of Dr Fan. The GP (with its strings being pulled by Dr Zhang) was more concerned over the interests of Legend Cayman and Dr Zhang than the interests of Dr Fan a limited partner with a nearly 70% interest in the Partnership.

177. In my judgment Dr Zhang was hopelessly conflicted and he has caused the GP not to act in the best interests of the limited partners.

178. I was totally unpersuaded by Mr Corbett's valiant efforts to salvage something from this adverse conflict point by way of reliance on paragraph 10 of the Subscription Agreement. There is nothing in paragraph 10 that can come to the rescue of the GP in this case.

179. The conflicted position of the GP (under the control of Dr Zhang) and its preference of the interests of Dr Zhang, Legend Cayman and the Legend Biotech group as a whole over and above the interests of Dr Fan a limited partner (holding almost 70%) persuades me that the position of the GP is unsustainable and the Partnership must be brought to an end in the best interests of the limited partners. Dr Fan applies for a winding up order and this has not been opposed by Ms Wang, the only other limited partner.

GP's cavalier attitude towards compliance with the laws of the Cayman Islands

180. Also of concern is the GP's somewhat cavalier attitude towards compliance with important local legal requirements in the Cayman Islands in respect of the maintenance of a registered office and the registration of the GP in the Cayman Islands. The latter led to the adjournment of the hearing on 26 January 2022 with indemnity costs against the GP. In respect of these serious failings Dr Zhang has in effect now held his hands up and openly accepted responsibility and that much is in his favour. However these failings are another reason which leads me to conclude that the GP has not conducted itself in a responsible way and such supports the making of a winding up order. I should, in fairness, make it plain that taken on their own these administrative failings (albeit serious), in the circumstances of this case, would not have led me to wind the Partnership up. I do not however intend to belittle the importance of proper compliance with local requirements in respect of the maintenance of a registered office and the registration of foreign companies.

Discontinued criminal investigation in China

181. In respect of the recently discontinued criminal investigation involving Dr Zhang, I can see why, from at least a reputational perspective, Dr Fan would be concerned over being associated with someone who was the subject of a criminal investigation in China. This on its own however would not be sufficient to justify the making of a winding up order.

Relationship has irretrievably broken down

182. It is plain to me that at the early stage when Dr Fan joined up with Dr Zhang that their relationship was one of mutual trust and confidence but that relationship has now irretrievably broken down and, on an objective analysis, Dr Fan has lost trust and confidence in Dr Zhang, the GP and the Partnership. Dr Fan's relatively recent resignation was not, in my judgment, a tactical ploy. It is plain that Dr Fan could not work in the environment created by Dr Zhang. Dr Zhang has attempted to belittle Dr Fan's role and contribution. Dr Zhang has preferred his own interests over the interests of Dr Fan. The GP, for reasons best known to itself, filed evidence that made reference to Dr Fan and an insider dealing incident. It had no relevance to the issues before the court for determination. It was not referred to in the comprehensive legal submissions before the court but the filing of it is a further indication of the lack of trust and confidence between the parties.

183. The GP agreed via Dr Zhang's communication of 5 March 2021 to permit 200,000 shares to be sold, but then reneged even on this meagre offering. There is significant hostility and lack of trust between the parties. Dr Fan has now resigned. That must have been a very difficult decision for him. Mutual trust and confidence no longer exists. This situation cannot continue indefinitely. The Partnership and the GP have already dragged these proceedings out for far too long.

184. This is not a case of a dissatisfied investor, having been treated fairly, simply wanting an early exit and a return on his investment outwith the terms of the agreements he signed up to and the relevant constitutional documents. In my judgment there is plainly "something more" in this case and fairness requires equitable considerations to trump the strict rights and obligations of the parties pursuant to the contractual and constitutional documents.

The LPA and the ELPA

185. I have considered possible arguments that if the GP is simply doing what it is entitled to do under the LPA and the ELPA how can it, in such circumstances, be just and equitable to wind up a solvent Partnership? I think the short answer to that is that the law expressly permits a partnership to be brought to an end on the just and equitable basis so the "equitable considerations" referred to in the case law are imported and plainly relevant in respect of the winding up of the Partnership.

No reasonable alternative remedy

186. In respect of the argument that there is a reasonable alternative remedy I dismiss that essentially for the reasons stated in my judgment delivered on 23 November 2021. Dr Fan is entitled to the shares and only a winding up order will give him his shares.

187. Having considered the evidence, submissions and the relevant law, I have reached the conclusion that Dr Fan has established that it is just and equitable to put an end to the Partnership.

The Order

188. I make an order substantially in terms of the prayer for relief in the petition but without blanket authorisation with respect to the powers specified in Schedule 3 of Part I of the Companies Act. The Part II powers are exercisable without sanction. If further powers are required they can be separately applied for. The relief I grant is as follows:

(1) The Partnership be wound up;

(2) Martin Trott of R & H Restructuring (Cayman) Limited and Kan Lap Kee also known as Terry Kan of Shinewing Specialist Advisory Services Limited be and are appointed as joint official liquidators of the Partnership (the "JOLs");

(3) the JOLs shall not be required to give security for their appointment;

(4) the JOLs shall have power to act jointly and severally in their capacity as liquidators of the Partnership;

(5) the JOLs are authorised to take such action as may be necessary or desirable to obtain recognition of their appointment in any relevant jurisdiction and to make applications to the courts of such jurisdictions for that purpose;

(6) the JOLs are authorised to exercise all the powers set out in Part II of the Third Schedule to the Companies Act;

(7) no disposition of the Partnership's property by or with the authority of the JOLs in carrying out their duties and functions and the exercise of their powers under this Order shall be voided by virtue of section 99 of the Companies Act;

(8) the JOLs shall be at liberty to appoint attorneys, counsel and professional advisers, whether in the Cayman Islands or elsewhere, as they may consider necessary to advise and assist them in the performance of their duties;

(9) the JOLs are authorised to render and pay invoices out of the assets of the Partnership for their own remuneration and the JOLs be at liberty to meet all disbursements reasonably incurred in connection with the performance of their duties; and

(10) liberty to apply.

Ancilliaries

189. Any ancillary applications (such as applications for costs) be filed within 14 days after the delivery of this judgment (with concise written submissions in support) and any concise written submissions in reply to be filed within 14 days thereafter. I intend to deal with any such applications on the papers.

190. Counsel to file a draft order reflecting the above for my approval and signature as soon as possible and in any event within 7 days of the delivery of this judgment.

JUDGMENT

Field JA

Introduction

1. This is an appeal from the order of Justice Doyle ("the judge") dated 13 June 2022 winding up the appellant exempted limited partnership ("ALP") on the just and equitable basis on four separate grounds. The order was preceded by a judgment dated 10 June 2022 ("the Judgment").

2. ALP was formed on 16 February 2017 under the Exempted Limited Partnership Act ("the ELPA"). The petitioner seeking the winding up order was the respondent Dr Xiaohu Fan ("Dr Fan") who became a limited partner in ALP having executed on 25 May 2017 a subscription agreement ("the Subscription Agreement), an Amended and Restated Limited Partnership Agreement ("the LPA") and an acknowledgement agreement ("the Acknowledgement"). The judge referred to this suite of agreements as "the 2017 Agreement" and I shall do likewise.

3. The sole asset owned by ALP was and remains its holding of 30,320,000 ordinary shares of US$0.0001 each in Legend Biotech Corporation ("Legend Cayman"), a Cayman Islands exempted limited company listed on NASDAQ. This holding represented 15.6% of Legend Cayman's issued shares in 2017.

4. Legend Cayman is the parent company in a group of companies ("the Legend Group") which carry on business developing novel cell therapies for oncology. The Legend Group's principal operations and employees are located in Nanjing and Zhenjiang in the PRC.

5. At all material times the general partner of ALP ("the GP") was and remains GenScript Corporation ("GenScript"), a Delaware corporation registered in the Cayman Islands under Part IX of the Companies Act. From the start, Genscript was and remains under the control of its majority shareholder, Dr Fangliang Zhang ("Dr Zhang").

6. In addition to Dr Fan, the other limited partners of ALP are the Ye Wang Family Trust and GenScript. The respective percentage shares of the three limited partners in ALP's sole asset are 65.96%, 32.98% and 1.06%. The interest held by the Ye Wang Family Trust is the result of a transfer by Ms Ye Wang of her original interest of 32.98%. Dr Fan's 65.96% interest equates to 19,999,072 ordinary shares in Legend Cayman.

7. It was in July 2002 that Dr Zhang, Dr Larry Wang and Ms Ye Wang ("Ms Wang") founded the GenScript Group of companies which subsequently became subsidiaries of Legend Cayman. In 2014 the GenScript Group decided to form a subsidiary company named "Legend" to develop novel biological drugs and they invited Dr Fan, who was working within the GenScript Group doing important research on cell therapy, immunology and cell biology, to be involved in this venture. Dr Fan accepted the invitation and was appointed Chief Scientific Officer of the new project.

8. In November 2014, GenScript incorporated Nanjing Legend Biotechnology Co Ltd ("Legend Nanjing") in the PRC with a view to it issuing an IPO. In order to incentivise Dr Fan, Legend Nanjing, acting by Dr Zhang, entered into an agreement with him dated 1 January 2016 ("the 2016 Agreement") under which Legend Nanjing agreed to grant Dr Fan a 10% holding of the shares in Legend Nanjing (10,000,000 shares) on terms that he pay RMB 100,000 annually for five years and that, prior to Legend Nanjing's IPO, he could not transfer these shares or create any security interest over them without Legend Nanjing's approval.

9. Since late 2014, Dr Fan had been significantly involved in critical developments of a number of therapies for the treatment of myeloma. In March 2016, he was responsible for the invention of citacabtageneautoleucel (Cilta-cel), a ground-breaking investigational B-cell maturation antigen directed chimeric antigen receptor T cell (CAR-T) therapy.

10. Subsequently, it was decided that instead of proceeding with an IPO by Legend Nanjing, the listing vehicle should be Legend Cayman which would proceed with an IPO on NASDAQ. In conjunction with this change of strategy, Dr Zhang set out to persuade Dr Fan: (a) to enter into an arrangement based on the establishment of a Cayman Islands exempted limited partnership ("ELP") which would hold approximately 15% of Legend Cayman's shares and whose limited partners would be Dr Fan, Ms Wang and GenScript; and (b) to accept that the 2016 Agreement would terminate when he became a limited partner in the ELP.

11. The implementation of Dr Zhang's plan to persuade Dr Fan to become a limited partner in a Cayman ELP began around mid to late July 2016. (Earlier, on 7 June 2016, Ms Wang had sent Dr Fan a draft agreement in Chinese for the establishment of an PRC partnership but nothing came of this). By mid to late July 2016, there had been good progress in the first dosing of Cilta-cel. The persuasion of Dr Fan was largely delegated to Ms Wang, who was a director of GenScript, acting on Dr Zhang's instructions, although Dr Zhang also played a direct role. Thus, it was Ms Wang who sent to Dr Fan the developing and the final versions of the LPA for signature and the Subscription Agreement and the Acknowledgement by which Dr Fan acknowledged that the 2016 Agreement contained only "general provisions and principles" and would terminate upon his becoming a limited partner in ALP. It was principally Ms Wang, reflecting the views of Dr Zhang, who dealt with Dr Fan's questions and comments on the documents she sent him.

12. When Dr Fan was approached with Dr Zhang's new strategy, his chief concern was that he should still be entitled after the IPO to be registered as the owner of 10% of the shares in the listing entity, as he had been under the 2016 Agreement in respect of 10% of the shares in Legend Nanjing. He made this very clear on several occasions to Ms Wang and Dr Zhang who both assured him that the 2016 Agreement would be "rolled over" into the arrangement involving a Cayman ELP. Dr Fan relied on these assurances when signing the 2017 Agreement: he would not have signed the constituent agreements if the assurances had not been given. His interest in the partnership under the 2017 Agreement was the equivalent of 10% of the shares in Legend Cayman which was the same percentage he was promised in respect of the shares in Legend Nanjing. In the light of these matters the judge held that Dr Fan had a legitimate expectation and reasonable understanding that 6 months after the Legend Cayman IPO he would be entitled to have access to 10% of the shares in Legend Cayman[1].

13. Legend Cayman was listed on NASDAQ on 5 June 2020, at which time GenScript and Dr Zhang owned 169,680,000 and 34,234,267 Legend Cayman shares respectively, which holdings constituted 76.9% and 15.2% of the company's issued share capital.

14. On 12 October 2017, Dr Fan paid RMB 2,500,000 in respect of the 10% of the Legend Cayman shares he had been assured would be registered in his name and available for disposition six months after the Legend Cayman IPO. He was then reimbursed RMB 2 million over a four-year period. RMB 2,500,000 was the sum that was payable under the 2016 Agreement.

15. Following the end of the 6 month lock in period, Dr Fan informed Ms Wang and Dr Zhang that he wanted access to 10% of the Legend Cayman shares held by ALP. He first suggested that ALP be dissolved to achieve this and was invited to serve a written request that his Legend Cayman shares be sold subject to the GP exercising its discretion accordingly. He then proposed that 2 million Legend Cayman ADS shares (equivalent to 20 million ordinary shares) be sold as an interim measure whilst the differences between him and Dr Zhang and Ms Wang were sorted out. At a meeting on 26 February 2021, Dr Zhang refused Dr Fan's sales plan, mentioning that maybe Dr Fan would be able to sell about 30,000 Legend Cayman

[1] It was a term of the Legend Cayman IPO that the shares in Legend Cayman were to be the subject of a 6 month lock up period.

ADS shares raising about US$ 1 million, which would have meant that it would have taken over 300 years for Dr Fan's total shares to be sold. Dr Zhang's declared reason for this response was that the company needed to raise funds and Dr Fan's sales plan would "crash the stock price". Dr Fan then asked Dr Zhang on 5 March 2021 for an offer to allow the sale of a reasonable amount of his shares to which Dr Zhang responded the same day, stating that the Legend Cayman management team and board were only prepared to sell 200,000 ADS shares producing around $US 4.5 million and this was a final offer. This offer Dr Fan accepted, but no steps were taken by the GP to implement it. Instead, Dr Zhang let Dr Fan know that he had been instructed not to sell the shares. Following a chasing letter from Dr Fan's attorneys, Travers Thorp Alberga ("TTA"), ALP's then attorneys, Dentons, stated in a letter dated 21 May 2021 that Dr Fan had not adopted the correct methodology for attempting to transfer his interest in the partnership and added that he could not be allowed to sell 10% of the Legend Cayman shares on account of the impact this would have on the share price. Five days later, by a letter dated 26 May 2021, Dentons, on behalf of ALP, offered to release 5% of the Legend Cayman shares held under Dr Fan's interest in the partnership followed by 3.5% every year thereafter but Dr Fan rejected this offer.

16. The winding up petition was due to come on for trial on 17 September 2021 but the hearing was adjourned at very short notice to accommodate an application by ALP for the petition to be struck out on the ground that it was an abuse of the process. That application was dismissed with detailed reasons by the judge on 26 October 2021 ("the strike out judgment") and on the same day Dr Fan served an Amended Petition that began to be heard on 26 January 2022. However, at the end of the first day, the GP applied for another adjournment, this time because its Cayman Islands' registration as a foreign company had been terminated on the grounds that it had failed to maintain a registered office and its registration in the Cayman Islands. The application was granted with indemnity costs against the GP and the hearing of the Amended Petition re-commenced on 20 April 2022, over six months after the date it had first came on for trial before the Grand Court.

17. On 11 March 2022, Dr Fan resigned from his position in Legend Cayman shortly after learning that he was no longer described on the company's website as a "Co-Founder" of the company.

The judgment below

The judge's four distinct grounds for winding up ALP

18. The distinct grounds that the judge found justified an order for the winding up of ALP on just and equitable grounds were:

(1) Frustration of Dr Fan's legitimate expectation that the GP would transfer 10% of the shares in Legend Cayman shares into his name as the beneficial owner thereof: see para [167] of the Judgment:

> "Dr Fan had a legitimate and reasonable understanding outside the 2017 Agreement. The legitimate expectations and reasonable understanding was that 6 months after the IPO he would be entitled to have access to 10% of the shares in Legend Cayman. The legitimate expectation and understanding was created and encouraged by Dr Zhang and Ms Wang on Dr Zhang's behalf. The legitimate expectation and understanding has been unreasonably frustrated by the Partnership, the GP and Dr Zhang".

(2) Irretrievable breakdown in the relationship between Dr Fan and Dr Zhang that had begun as one of mutual trust and confidence.

Paras [182] – [184] of the Judgment read:

> "It is plain to me that at the early stage when Dr Fan joined up with Dr Zhang that their relationship was one of mutual trust and confidence but that relationship has now irretrievably broken down and, on an objective analysis, Dr Fan has lost trust and confidence in Dr Zhang, the GP and the Partnership. Dr Fan's relatively recent resignation was not, in my judgment, a tactical ploy. It is plain that Dr Fan could not work in the environment created by Dr Zhang. Dr Zhang has attempted to belittle Dr Fan's role and contribution. Dr Zhang has preferred his own interests over the interests of Dr Fan. The GP, for reasons best known to itself, filed evidence that made reference to Dr Fan and an insider dealing incident. It had no relevance to the issues before the court for determination. It was not referred to in the comprehensive legal submissions before the court but the filing of it is a further indication of the lack of trust and confidence between the parties". [182]

"The GP agreed via Dr Zhang's communication of 5 March 2021 to permit 200,000 shares to be sold, but then reneged even on this meagre offering. There is significant hostility and lack of trust between the parties. Dr Fan has now resigned. That must have been a very difficult decision for him. Mutual trust and confidence no longer exists. This situation cannot continue indefinitely. The Partnership and the GP have already dragged these proceedings out for far too long". [183]
"This is not a case of a dissatisfied investor, having been treated fairly, simply wanting an early exit and a return on his investment outwith the terms of the agreements he signed up to and the relevant constitutional documents. In my judgment there is plainly "something more" in this case and fairness requires equitable considerations to trump the strict rights and obligations of the parties pursuant to the contractual and constitutional documents". [184]

(3) The justifiable loss of trust and confidence in the management of the Partnership judged to the requisite objective standards in the circumstances of this case.

See para [166] and para [10(12)] of the judge's judgment refusing ALP's application to strike out the winding up petition ("the strike out judgment") referred to in the Judgment at [158]:

"Dr Fan has proved a justifiable loss of trust and confidence in the management of the Partnership by the GP judged to the requisite objective standards in the circumstances of this case. Moreover, in my judgment the affairs of the Partnership have been conducted by the GP (with Dr Zhang being in the driving seat in that respect] in a manner which is oppressive and in breach of Dr Fan's legitimate expectation and understanding." [166]

"It is well established that a company can be wound up on the just an equitable ground if it is established that there has been a justifiable loss of confidence in management, for example, on account of serious misconduct or serious mismanagement of the affairs of the company by the management or the majority owners (paragraph 22 Martin JA in Tianrui). For a loss of confidence ground to succeed it has to be a justifiable loss of confidence in the conduct and management of the company's affairs and not a subjective loss of confidence arising from dissatisfaction about the conduct of the domestic policy of the company (RCB Thai v Asia Fund 1996 CILR 9 at pages 22-23 per Smellie J, as he then was). This loss or lack of confidence must be grounded on the conduct of management, not in regard to their private lives or affairs, but in regard to the company's business; lack of probity in the conduct of the companies affairs may make it just and equitable that the company be wound up (Lord Shaw, in the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in Loch v Blackwood Ltd [1924] AC 783 at 788." [10 (12)]

(4) The GP's conflict of interest and breach of the fiduciary duty to act in good faith.

See [171] – [179], especially [171] and [179] of the Judgment which read:

> "There is considerable strength in Dr Fan's point that the GP has been acting in breach of its fiduciary duties in particular its duty to act in good faith and in the best interests of the Partnership. Dr Zhang is in control of the GP. Dr Zhang is hopelessly conflicted. He is the beneficial owner of shares in Legend Cayman. He also has control of the Partnership's shares in Legend Cayman. The GP (through the actions of Dr Zhang) is not acting in the best interests of the Partnership. The clearest example of this is the GP's approach when it receives a request from Dr Fan for his portion of the shares to be transferred to him. A general partner acting in good faith and in the best interests of the Partnership would primarily have regard to the position of the limited partners and yet remarkably there is no evidence of the GP consulting Ms Wang and seeking her views. I also note that Ms Wang as a limited partner has not opposed the making of a winding up order". [171]
>
> "The conflicted position of the GP (under the control of Dr Zhang) and its preference of the interests of Dr Zhang, Legend Cayman and the Legend Biotech group as a whole over and above the interests of Dr Fan a limited partner (holding almost 70%) persuades me that the position of the GP is unsustainable and the Partnership must be brought to an end in the best interests of the limited partners. Dr Fan applies for a winding up order and this has not been opposed by Ms Wang, the only other limited partner". [179]

19. In respect of all four of the above grounds for winding up ALP, the judge held that there was no reasonable alternative remedy to a winding up order. In his view, Dr Fan was entitled to the shares represented by his interest in the limited partnership and only a winding up order would give him his shares.

Jurisdiction

20. Referring to the decisions of Parker J in Padma Fund LP (unreported FSD judgment 8 October 2021 and Kawaley J in Formation Group (Cayman) Fund I (unreported FSD judgment 21 April 2022)[2], the judge noted that there is an unresolved issue as to whether the jurisdiction of the Court to hear a petition presented by a limited partner to wind up a limited partnership on just and equitable grounds is derived from section 35 of the Partnership Act, pursuant to section 3 of the ELPA, and/or Part V of the Companies Act pursuant to section 36 (3) of the ELPA. In light of the fact that it was common ground that the Court had jurisdiction under one or other or both of those statutory provisions, the judge decided it was unnecessary to pronounce on the issue, observing that "it may require a judgment of the Court of Appeal or the Privy Council or legislation to finally determine and put these knotty jurisdictional issue to bed".

21. For my part, I would have been disposed to this Court deciding the issue if we had received written and oral submissions on the point. However, perhaps unsurprisingly, neither side advanced any submissions before us on the point and in these circumstances it would plainly be inappropriate to decide the question.

The legal principles relied on by the judge

22. The judge proceeded on the basis[3] that the success of Dr Fan's winding up petition depended on its factual basis being within the reach of those situations where the context was not an out and out conventional partnership but was sufficiently akin to that relationship in accordance with the indicia identified by Lord Wilberforce in Ebrahimi v Westbourne Galleries [1973] AC 360 to justify a winding up on just and equitable grounds.

23. It will be recalled that in Ebrahimi, the appellant Mr Shokrollah Ebrahimi and Mr Asher Nazar had carried on the business as dealers in Persian carpets as partners equally sharing management and profits for a number of years. In 1945, however, the business was taken over by the respondent company with Mr Ebrahami and Mr Asher Nazar each becoming directors and holding 500 shares. Soon after the formation of the company, Mr Asher Nazar's son, George Nazar, was appointed a director and Mr Ebrahimi and Mr Asher Nazar each transferred to him 100 shares. The profits of the company were distributed as directors' remuneration. About ten years later, the Nazars, father and son, secured the passing of an ordinary resolution effective by virtue of section 184 of the Companies Act 1948 ("the 1948 Act") removing Mr Ebrahami from the office of director. Mr Ebrahami presented a petition under section 222 (f) of the 1948 Act that the company be wound up on the ground that it was just and equitable so to do.

24. Although they have frequently been cited in numerous subsequent cases I think it appropriate to set out the key passages in Lord Wilberforce's judgment that followed his review of numerous English, Scottish and some Commonwealth decisions.

[3] See [10 (11)] and [10 (12) of the strike out judgment referred to in [158] of the Judgment.

"My Lords, in my opinion these authorities represent a sound and rational development of the law which should be endorsed. The foundation of it all lies in the words " just and equitable " and, if there is any respect in which some of the cases may be open to criticism, it is that the courts may sometimes have been too timorous in giving them full force. The words are a recognition of the fact that a limited company is more than a mere legal entity, with a personality in law of its own: that there is room in company law for recognition of the fact that behind it, or amongst it, there are individuals, with rights, expectations and obligations inter se which are not necessarily submerged in the company structure. That structure is defined by the Companies Act and by the articles of association by which shareholders agree to be bound. In most companies and in most contexts, this definition is sufficient and exhaustive, equally so whether the company is large or small. The "just and equitable" provision does not, as the respondents suggest, entitle one party to disregard the obligation he assumes by entering a company, nor the court to dispense him from it. It does, as equity always does, enable the court to subject the exercise of legal rights to equitable considerations; considerations, that is, of a personal character arising between one individual and another, which may make it unjust, or inequitable, to insist on legal rights or to exercise them in a particular way. It would be impossible, and wholly undesirable, to define the circumstances in which these considerations may arise. Certainly the fact that a company is a small one, or a private company, is not enough. There are very many of these where the association is a purely commercial one, of which it can safely be said that the basis of association is adequately and exhaustively laid down in the articles. The superimposition of equitable considerations requires something more, which typically may include one, or probably more, of the following elements: (i) an association formed or continued on the basis of a personal relationship, involving mutual confidence—this element will often be found where a pre-existing partnership has been converted into a limited company; (ii) an agreement, or understanding, that all, or some (for there may be "sleeping " members), of the shareholders shall participate in the conduct of the business; (iii) restriction upon the transfer of the members' interest in the company —so that if confidence is lost, or one member is removed from management, he cannot take out his stake and go elsewhere." [emphasis added]

"It is these, and analogous, factors which may bring into play the just and equitable clause, and they do so directly, through the force of the words themselves. To refer, as so many of the cases do, to " quasi-partnerships " or " in substance partnerships " may be convenient but may also be confusing. It may be convenient because it is the law of partnership which has developed the conceptions of probity, good faith and mutual confidence, and the remedies where these are absent, which become relevant once such factors as I have mentioned are found to exist: the words " just and equitable " sum these up in the law of partnership itself. And in many, but not necessarily all, cases there has been a pre-existing partnership the obligations of which it is reasonable to suppose continue to underlie the new company structure. But the expressions may be confusing if they obscure, or deny, the fact that the parties (possibly former partners) are now co-members in a company, who have accepted, in law, new obligations. A company, however small, however domestic, is a company not a partnership or even a quasi-partnership and it is through the just and equitable clause that obligations, common to partnership relations, may come in."

25. In paragraph [159] of the Judgment the judge referred approvingly to the decision of the Hong Kong Court of Final Appeal in Re Yung Kee Holdings Ltd [2015] 6 HKC 644 where, following Ebrahimi, the court proceeded on the basis that considerations of a personal character arising between individuals might make it unjust, or inequitable to insist on legal rights, or to exercise them in a particular way which might come in the form of a mutual understanding and there could be situations in which equity might find sufficient unfairness or breaches of good faith so as to attract relief but the discretion had to be exercised in a principled manner.

26. In paragraphs [160- 161], the judge said:

> [160] "Lord Wilberforce in Ebrahimi wisely stated that it "would be impossible and wholly undesirable to define the circumstances in which these considerations may arise". Lord Wilberforce referred to relationships being sometimes adequately and exhaustively laid down in the relevant constitutional documents adding: "The superimposition of equitable considerations requires something more", typically including an element of a personal relationship involving mutual confidence and/or an agreement or understanding over and above what is specified in the constitutional documents".
> [161] "… I agree that when courts at the first instance are considering whether there is "something more" they must conduct such exercise in a principled way and with full regard to the desirability of legal certainty especially in matters of commerce. They should not however sacrifice justice, equity and fairness on the altar of legal certainty".

The judge's findings of fact

27. The judge conducted a detailed review of the evidence which consisted of affidavits and oral testimony from, inter alios, Dr Fan, Dr Zhang and Ms Wang, a large number of emails and WeChat messages between these three witnesses, and other documents including the Subscription Agreement, the LPA, the Acknowledgement and the 2016 Agreement. There is no appeal from any of his significant findings of fact[4] (as distinct from the legal significance he found them to have).

[4] ALP submitted that the judge erred in stating that there was no evidence of the GP consulting Ms Wang and seeking her views on Dr Fan's request to have access to his 10% of the shares in Legend Cayman. Support for this submission was said to be the fact that Ms Wang rejected a request Dr Fan sent to her seeking the transfer of Legend Cayman shares. In my view, this submission lacks merit given the evidence that throughout Ms Wang was essentially acting as Dr Zhang's conduit who was the GP's controlling shareholder.

28. In paragraph [168] the judge set out 13 "obvious examples" of the "ample evidence" that supported his finding expressed in [167]. Since the judge's findings of fact are of great importance in this appeal, I proceed to set out some of these examples, occasionally together with the relevant text of the emails referred to:

(1) The evidence of Dr Fan which he preferred to the evidence of Dr Zhang and Ms Wang where his evidence differed from that given by those two witnesses.

(2) The evidence of Ms Wang was that they intended to honour what Dr Zhang had promised by way of the 2016 Agreement and Dr Zhang seemed to accept this.

(3) I do not accept Dr Zhang's evidence that where he was referring … to "your stock" he was referring to "some stock in the limited partnership". The references to "your stock" were, I find, to the shares in the company which was the subject of the IPO. [The email in question dated 15 June 2017 reads: "A good leader should take care of the employees first. If their employees are not successful, the leader cannot possibly be successful. Since it has taken a long time [to] take care of your stock, can we spend some time to take care of your employees first?"]

(4) Dr Fan's uncontradicted legitimate expectation and understanding is plain from his email to Ms Wang (cc Dr Zhang) dated 26 September 2016 ["Recently Frank told me that you are helping roll over the share purchase plan to Legend Cayman …] and his reference to "roll over the share purchase plan to Legend Cayman."

(5) Dr Zhang in his WeChat with Dr Fan on 19 February 2017 referred to "After all, it is the company, not you, that proposed your shareholdings in Legend first, correct?...the new investment agreement is executed only to make things clearer.."

(6) Ms Wang in her WeChat with Dr Fan on 3 June 2017 openly confirmed the position: "The best news for you is that your stake in Nanjing Legend will be turned into shares in Cayman Legend. The entity to be listed will definitely be Cayman Legend and can't be Nanjing Legend by any means. This_is what really matters."

(7) Ms Wang also recognised that Dr Fan had a 10% share in her email dated 7 June

2017. ["Attached please find the Legend subscription agreement. Please keep it confidential. Your percentage of share may not be straightforward stated as 10% in this document. I will forward another email from the attorney explaining how it was set up. The document hasn't been completed yet, mainly they have to determine if RMB can be accepted in this document. Do let me know first if you have any question."]

(8) Dr Fan's legitimate expectation and understanding was further confirmed by Ms Wang by way of a WeChat exchange on 8 June 2021. Ms Wang confirmed that the 2017 Agreement "is not to change any material personal interest of yours. It's only intended to make the original he intended to make the original agreement legitimate and to create scope for future development." I find that the reference to the "original agreement" in that context was the 2016 Agreement. I also find that Ms Wang was at pains to provide reassurance to Dr Fan that his "material personal" interests would not be changed by way of the 2017 Agreement.

(9) Dr Zhang in effect confirmed this again by his email to Dr Fan on 14 of June 2017 and the reference to "your stock".

(10) Furthermore when Dr Fan in his email dated 17 February 2021 to Dr Zhang and Ms Wang refers to "my shares in Legend" neither of them sought to contradict him.

29. In addition to the factual findings stated in the paragraphs of the Judgment referred to in paragraph [18] above, I draw attention to the following:

(A) The findings in paras [169] – [170].

(a) Dr Fan in entering into the 2017 Agreement trusted Dr Zhang and Ms Wang to do the right thing and to honour the roll over of Dr Fan's Legend Nanjing shares to Legend Cayman shares. Dr Zhang and the GP have betrayed that trust and it can easily be seen how Dr Fan legitimately and reasonably believes, after his significant contribution to the increasing value of Legend Cayman, that he has been badly let down by the GP and those that control the GP. Dr Fan has been unfairly treated. It was not mere "wishful thinking" by Dr Fan. It was a reasonable and legitimate expectation that he would get the Legend Shares after the IPO, whatever was stated in the 2017 Agreement. [169]

(b) It is only fair, just and equitable that he shares in the benefits now rather than having to wait 300 years (as originally in effect suggested by the GP) or 26 years (as subsequently in effect suggested by the GP) to obtain his shares. The GP's consideration of and reactions to Dr Fan's reasonable requests for the shares shows the GP in a bad light. Such is indicative of the GP's breach of its fiduciary duties and its failure to act in the best interests of the Partnership and its limited partners. Dr Fan had nearly a 70% interest. He should have been treated with respect and fairness. He was not so treated. He was left with no reasonable alternative but to file the petition. [170]

(B) The following WeChat message from Ms Wang to Dr Fan on 8 June 2017 very shortly before Dr Fan signed the LPA

> "The agreement is not to change any material personal interest of your's. It's only to make the original agreement legitimate, and to create scope for future development." [124]:

ALP's/GP's case on appeal

30. The principal case advanced on behalf of ALP by the GP is that the judge erred in holding that the facts on which Dr Fan's petition is founded fell within Lord Wilberforce's indicia of those relationships which are sufficiently related to conventional partnership to justify a winding up on just and equitable grounds. Two distinct submissions were advanced by Mr Smith KC under this broad rubric:

(i) In the light of the Subscription Agreement, the LPA and the ELPA, ALP lacks any of the characteristics that, pursuant to Ebrahimi, are necessary for the relationship between ALP (acting by the GP) and Dr Fan to constitute the type of "quasi-partnership" or other relationship sufficiently akin to partnership required for it to be open to the Court to wind up ALP on the just and equitable ground.

(ii) The LPA, which was specifically negotiated and agreed over a quite a lengthy period of time, and the Subscription Agreement preclude resort to the just and equitable winding up ground since those agreements are and were intended to be an exhaustive statement of the parties' rights and obligations and specifically deal with the limited partner's rights to withdraw or transfer his/her/its interest in the partnership and to a distribution. Accordingly, the judge erred in proceeding on the basis of his finding that Dr Fan had a legitimate expectation that 10% of the Legend Cayman shares would be transferred into his ownership conditioned the rights and obligations of the GP under the LPA.

31. In support of these submissions, Mr Smith drew attention to the following differences between a partnership under the Partnership Act and an ELP under the ELPA that were adverted to by this Court in Kuwait Ports Authority et al v Port Link GP Ltd et al at [24] [unreported 20 January 2023]:

(i) Limited partners of an ELP are not liable for the debts of the ELP (see section 4 (2) of the ELPA) whereas the General Partner is liable for the debts and obligations of the ELP.

(ii) Limited partners are prohibited from having any active involvement in the business of the ELP which is carried on by the General Partner who enters into all contracts by and on behalf the ELP.

(iii) Section 19 (1) of the ELPA imposes an express duty of good faith on the General Partner of an ELP requiring the General Partner to act in the best interests of the ELP.

(iv) Whereas in an ordinary partnership, mutual and reciprocal rights and obligations are owed to each other by partners, section 19(2) of the ELPA provides that unless the partnership agreement provides to the contrary, a limited partner owes no fiduciary duty either to the ELP or to other partners.

32. Mr Smith submitted that it followed from (ii) and (iv) that, unlike in the usual quasi-partnership type of case, Dr Fan as a limited partner had no expectation that he would participate in ALP's business which in any event consisted of simply acting as a vehicle to hold shares in Legend Cayman. There was also nothing in the LPA that provided that Dr Fan owed a fiduciary duty to the ELP, the General Partner or to other limited partners. Thus, there was no mutuality of obligations of good faith between Dr Fan quo ad Ms Wang in her capacity as a limited partner or quo ad the GP, acting by Dr Zhang and/or Ms Wang as directors thereof, which was one of the classic indicia of a quasi-partnership. Indeed, despite the word "partnership" in the name "exempted limited partnership" given by the ELPA to an entity formed under section 9 thereof, such an entity lacked any of Lord Wilberforce's indicia of a relationship akin to conventional partnership and thus no just and equitable winding up petition to wind it up based on such a relationship could ever succeed.

33. Mr Smith took us to section 32(3) ELPA that provides in relevant part that "where the requirements for all conditions to an admission contained in the partnership agreement have been complied with in accordance with the terms… any person however admitted shall … be deemed to have adhered to and agreed to be bound by the terms and conditions of the partnership agreement and shall have the rights and be subject to the obligations contained in the partnership agreement, and this Act …"

34. Mr Smith also referred us to the following provisions in the LPA and the Subscription Agreement:

The LPA

(i) Clause 3.1, that sets out the limited liability of a limited partner and Clause 3.2 that sets out five broadly drawn limitations on the authority of limited partners including a lack of authority to take part in the conduct, administration, control, management or conduct of the partnership business;

(ii) Clause 6.2 of the LPA, that provides that for a subscriber to become a limited partner he, she or it must execute an effective deed of adherence to the LPA;

(iii) Clause 7.1, that provides that the limited partners are to have capital accounts in respect of their interests in the partnership and Clause 7 .7 that provides that no limited partner will be permitted to withdraw from the partnership or to withdraw any part of his, her or its capital account save with the General Partner's prior consent which consent may be given or withheld for any reason or no reason at all in the sole absolute discretion of the General Partner;

(iv) Clause 9: "At the time or times determined by the General Partner, the General Partner shall cause the Partnership to distribute any assets of the Partnership that it does not, in its discretion, consider to be necessary to the operation of the Partnership. Any distribution pursuant to this Clause 9 shall be made to the Partners pro rata in accordance with the Partners' respective interests determined by reference to their Capital Contribution from time to time."

(v) Clause 12. 2, that states that it was not anticipated that meetings of the partners will be held;

(vi) Clause 12.11 -- the Entire Agreement Clause - that provides: "This Agreement, together with the other documents required to be delivered pursuant hereto, constitutes the entire agreement between the parties to this Agreement with respect to the subject matter of this Agreement, and cancels and supersedes any prior understandings and agreements between the parties with respect to such subject matter. There are no representations, warranties, terms, conditions, undertakings, or collateral agreements, express, implied or statutory, between the parties with respect to the subject matter of this Agreement, other than those expressly set forth in this Agreement, and/or the other documents required to be delivered pursuant to such agreements".

The Subscription Agreement

(i) Paragraph 4 of the introduction to the agreement

EACH ACQUIROR OF A PARTNERSHIP INTEREST MUST BE PREPARED TO BEAR THE ECONOMIC RISK OF INVESTMENT THEREIN FOR AN INDEFINITE PERIOD OF TIME. THE SUBSCRIBERS ARE ENCOURAGED TO SEEK INDEPENDENT LEGAL, ACCOUNTING, INVESTMENT AND TAX ADVICE REGARDING THEIR INDIVIDUAL CIRCUMSTANCES AND FINANCIAL OBJECTIVES IN DETERMINING WHETHER TO SUBSCRIBE FOR AN INTEREST IN THE PARTNERSHIP

(ii) Clause 3 (e): "… the subscriber agrees to comply with the terms of the Partnership Agreement …"

(iii) Clause 5: "To induce the Partnership to accept this subscription, the Subscriber hereby makes the following representations, warranties and covenants to the General Partner, the Partnership and ...":

> "The Subscriber further understands the Interest is transferable only with the consent of the General Partner." [5 (b)]
> "The Subscriber … will not sell, transfer, distribute or otherwise dispose of the Interest without the consent of the General Partner, which may be granted or withheld in its sole discretion …" [5 (c)]
> "… in formulating a decision to invest in the Partnership, the Subscriber has not relied or acted on the basis of any representation or other information purported to be given on behalf of the Partnership or the General Partner except as set forth in the Partnership Agreement (it being understood that no person has been authorised by the Partnership or the General Partner to furnish any such representation or other information)." [5 (e)]

(iv) Clause 7: The Subscriber hereby represents and warrants to the General Partner …

> "the Subscriber has reviewed and understands the Partnership Agreement and this Subscription Agreement …" (b)
>
> "the Subscriber acknowledges and agrees that, except as set forth in the Partnership Agreement, this Subscription Agreement or an additional written document (executed by a director or officer of the General Partner) which clearly and explicitly indicates that the Subscriber is entitled to rely thereon, the Subscriber has neither received, nor is entitled to rely upon, any representations or warranties from the Partnership, the General Partner, or any partner, member, director, officer, employee or agent thereof". (c)
>
> "the Subscriber is aware that except as provided in the Partnership Agreement, the Subscriber will have no right to withdraw from the Partnership or to receive distributions in liquidation of the Partnership Interest". (d)
> "the Subscriber is not relying on the Partnership, the General Partner, or any of their partners, members, directors, officers, employees agents or representatives for legal, accounting, investment or tax advice, and the Subscriber has sought independent legal, accounting, investment and tax advice to the extent the Subscriber has deemed necessary or appropriate in connection with the Subscriber's decision to subscribe for the Partnership Interest."(g)

> When referring hereafter to 'the entire agreement clauses', I include clause 12.11 of the LPA, clauses 5(e) and 7(c) of the Subscription Agreement and similar provisions in the Acknowledgement.

35. Mr Smith pointed out that the disclosed documents showed there were occasions when Dr Fan commented on and suggested amendments to certain provisions in the drafts of the LPA sent to him from the beginning of February 2017. (The first draft he received in early February 2017 can be ignored since this related to a PRC partnership). In respect of later drafts of the LPA, Dr Fan's suggestions included an observation that clause 7.8 (dealing with when a limited partner can be required to withdraw his interest) was too harsh and his provision of a marked-up version of the LPA showed proposed changes in red, including changes to clause 7.8. Some of Dr Fan's proposed amendments were accepted and some not. Mr Smith also relied on Dr Fan's acceptance in his oral evidence that he paid attention to detail and that he had read and signed the Subscription Agreement and had read the LPA.

36. Mr Smith made a number of submissions founded on the italicised words in the following passage that begins at p. 379B in Lord Wilberforce's judgment in Ebrahimi.

> The words [just and equitable] are a recognition of the fact that a limited company is more than a mere legal entity, with a personality in law of its own: that there is room in company law for recognition of the fact that behind it, or amongst it, there are individuals, with rights, expectations and obligations inter se which are not necessarily submerged in the company structure. That structure is defined by the Companies Act and by the articles of association by which shareholders agree to be bound. In most companies and in most contexts, this definition is sufficient and exhaustive, equally so whether the company is large or small. The just and equitable provision does not, as the respondents suggest entitle one party to disregard the obligation he assumes by entering a company, nor the court to dispense him from it. It does, as equity always does, enable a court to subject the exercise of legal rights to equitable considerations, that is, of a personal character arising between one individual and another, which may make it unjust, or inequitable, to insist on legal rights, or to exercise them in a particular way.

37. In Mr Smith's submission, Lord Wilberforce was here concerned with a case where the rights, expectations and obligations are not set out in the documents of the company. Mr Ebrahami and Mr Nazar père had not concluded any agreement as to the circumstances in which the former might be removed as a director. Whereas, if the arrangements and relationships between the parties are set out (submerged) in the constitutional and/or contractual documents, this is sufficient and exhaustive and does not allow for the intervention of equitable considerations derived from the words "just and equitable". In short, the agreements "occupied the field". It follows that the just and equitable jurisdiction is not available in the instant case in light of the detailed provisions in the LPA and the Subscription Agreement, particularly those that declare that the GP has a sole and absolute discretion as to the transfer or withdrawal of a limited partner's interest and distributions and the entire agreement clauses. What Dr Fan is attempting to do, contended Mr Smith, is impermissibly to circumvent the clear meaning of the 2017 Agreement, by seeking to bring his case within the scope of Lord Wilberforce's judgment in Ebrahimi, when the proper course was for him to establish by an action in contract that he is not bound by those provisions in the 2017 Agreements that constitute very substantial obstacles in establishing his "frustration of a legitimate expectation" case. Indeed, to permit Dr Fan to challenge the effect of the 2017 Agreements by petitioning for a winding up on just and equitable grounds rather than bringing proceedings in contract would set a very undesirable precedent as it would open the door to an investor avoiding the effects of a relevant agreement governing his investment by establishing that its terms do not properly reflect his own subjective expectation at the time of entering into the agreement.

38. Mr Smith further relied on a number of passages in the judgments in the following "unfair prejudice" cases[5] : O'Neill v Phillips [1999] 1WLR 1092; Re Coroin Ltd (No 2) [2012] EWHC 2343 (Ch); and Cool Seas (Seafoods) Ltd v Interfish Ltd et al [2018] EWHC 2038 (Ch).

O'Neill

Lord Hoffmann at p. 1102 B –

> In In re Saul D. Harrison & Sons Pic. [1995] 1 B.C.L.C. 14, 19, I used the term "legitimate expectation," borrowed from public law, as a label for the "correlative right" to which a relationship between company members may give rise in a case when, on equitable principles, it would be regarded as unfair for a majority to exercise a power conferred upon them by the articles to the prejudice of another member. I gave as an example the standard case in which shareholders have entered into association upon the understanding that each of them who has ventured his capital will also participate in the management of the company. In such a case it will usually be considered unjust, inequitable or unfair for a majority to use their voting power to exclude a member from participation in the management without giving him the opportunity to remove his capital upon reasonable terms. The aggrieved member could be said to have had a "legitimate expectation" that he would be able to participate in the management or withdraw from the company. It was probably a mistake to use this term, as it usually is when one introduces a new label to describe a concept which is already sufficiently defined in other terms. In saying that it was "correlative" to the equitable restraint, I meant that it could exist only when equitable principles of the kind I have been describing would make it unfair for a party to exercise rights under the articles. It is a consequence, not a cause, of the equitable restraint. The concept a legitimate expectation should not be allowed to lead a life of its own, capable of giving rise to equitable restraints in circumstances to which the traditional equitable principles have no application. That is what seems to have happened in this case".

[5] Brought in O'Neill under s.459(1) of the Companies Act 1985 as amended by the Companies Act 1989 and in Coroin and Cool Seas under s. 994 of the Companies Act 2006

Coroin

Richards J (as he then was)

[635] "For part of his case, however, Mr McKillen relies also on legitimate expectations of participation in the management of the company. In my judgment, this is not sustainable. The importance of the passage from the speech of Lord Wilberforce in In re Ebrahimi Ltd cited by Lord Hoffmann in O'Neill v Phillips is that it indicates the circumstances in which reliance may be placed on equitable considerations (Lord Hoffmann deprecates the use of the expression 'legitimate expectations', regretting that he introduced it into this area of the law: see p.1102) as giving rise to a possible case of unfair prejudice. It is very important to note that in that passage, having identified that the structure of a company is defined by company law and the articles of association, Lord Wilberforce observed that;

> "In most companies and in most contexts, this definition is sufficient and exhaustive, equally so whether the company is large or small."

Equitable considerations, affecting the manner in which legal rights can be exercised, will arise only in those cases where there exist considerations of a personal character between the shareholders which makes it unjust or inequitable to insist on legal rights or to exercise them in a particular way. Typically that will be in the case of a company formed by a small number of individuals on the basis of participation by all or some of them in the management of the company."

[636] "In my judgment, there is no room for equitable considerations of this kind in the present case. The company was formed by a group of highly sophisticated and experienced business people and investors with a view to the purchase of a well-known group of hotels for a price running into many hundreds of millions of pounds and to retaining and managing some of those hotels. There was little prior relationship between many of the investors and some were unknown to each other until a few days before the company was formed. More importantly, articles of association and a shareholders agreement were negotiated and drafted, containing lengthy and complex provisions governing their relations with each other and with the company. I find it hard to imagine a case where it would be more inappropriate to overlay on those arrangements equitable considerations of the sort discussed by Lord Wilberforce and Lord Hoffmann."

[637] "This part of Mr McKillen's case arises in relation to his allegation that he has been unfairly prejudiced by exclusion from participation in management. His right to participate in the management of the company is defined by his right as the holder of a particular class of shares to appoint a director to the board of the company. He exercised that right by appointing himself and by appointing Mr Cunningham as his alternate. There has been no interference with that right and no interference with the rights of either Mr McKillen, or in his absence, Mr Cunningham to attend board meetings. On the contrary, they, but mainly Mr Cunningham, have attended all or most of the board meetings held since the purchase of Misland by the Barclay interests. It is clear from the evidence that Mr McKillen and Mr Cunningham have been in no respect inhibited from exercising their rights as directors and from arguing their position. Mr McKillen submits that he has been put in a position of being a permanent minority because directors appointed by the Barclay interests and by Mr Quinlan formed a majority. But there is clearly nothing in the articles or the shareholders' agreement which entitles directors to more than the votes at board meetings conferred on them by the shareholders' agreement. Nor do the articles or the shareholders agreement prohibit particular groups of shareholders from co-operating with each other unless they have done so in a way which triggers the pre-emption provisions or which constitutes in some way a breach of the obligations of good faith to which I shall later return. The fact that the directors appointed by the Barclay interests and Mr Quinlan may take a position different to that of Mr McKillen does not involve any exclusion of Mr Quinlan or any unfairness unless the position which they take is taken in breach of their duties as directors."

Cool Seas

Rose J (as she then was)

[126] "Applying the principles from those authorities[6] to the present case I am fully satisfied that there was no legitimate expectation that Mr Anderson and Colin Anderson would continue as directors once they ceased to be employed by the company for whatever reason. The relationship between all the participants in the transaction in January 2014 and thereafter was as set out in the contractual documents and there are no overlying equitable considerations applicable here. The factors I have taken into account when arriving at that conclusion are as follows."

[127] "First, there was no previous personal relationship, such as a partnership or family connection, between these parties. Prior to 2013, the only business dealings between Fresh Catch (on the one hand) and Interfish and Altaire (on the other hand) had been a short business relationship for around a year in the 1990s when Interfish placed a large order with Fresh Catch for mackerel fillets..."

[6] Re Saul D Harrison & Sons; Ebrahimi; O'Neill; Fisher v Cadman et al [2005] EWHC 377 (Ch); Grace v Biagiolo et al [2005] EWCA (Civ) 1222.

> [128] "… I accept Mr Colam's evidence was that he viewed the relationship between Interfish and Cool Seas as a commercial relationship on terms that had been negotiated and agreed between them in detailed contractual documents which were developed with the benefit of professional advice. I do not believe that Mr Anderson can have formed any different view."
> [129] "Secondly, this is not a case where the constitution of the company is an off-the-shelf draft which is not revised to reflect the underlying agreement between the parties as to how the business would be run. On the contrary the agreements entered into on 2 January 2014 were bespoke agreements carefully drafted by each side's solicitors, going through several drafts following the signature of the initial Heads of Terms."

39. Turning to the judge's second ground for winding up ALP on just and equitable grounds – the irretrievable breakdown in the relationship between Dr Fan and Dr Zhang – Mr Smith contended that this ground required it being established that the relationship between the individuals involved was that of a "quasi partnership" of the sort contemplated in Ebrahimi and the judge had erred in proceeding on the basis that this requirement had been met. For the first part of this contention Mr Smith relied on Lau v Chu [2020 UKPC 24 at [14] – [17] where Lord Briggs distinguished between "functional deadlock" in the management of a company and an "irretrievable break down in trust and confidence" between the participating members where the company is a "quasi partnership".

40. Turning to the second part of his contention, Mr Smith relied on the submissions based on Ebrahimi he advanced when contesting the judge's first ground for winding up ALP – frustration of a legitimate expectation. In particular, Mr Smith laid stress on the fact that Dr Fan was simply a limited partner with no role in the conduct of the business of the partnership so that it would have made no difference to the management and administration of the partnership if the two doctors never met or spoke to each other. In this regard, Dr Fan's situation was to be contrasted with that in the well-known case of In Re Yenidje Tobacco Company Ltd [1916] 2 Ch 426 where it was held that it was just and equitable to wind up a private company formed by two traders in tobacco products who held equal shareholdings and constituted the board of directors and had become so hostile that neither spoke to the other. In Lord Cozens-Hardy MR's view, the court was "bound to say that circumstances which would justify the winding up of a partnership between these two by action are circumstances which should induce the Court to exercise its jurisdiction under the just and equitable clause to wind up the company".

41. In regard to the judge's third ground for winding up ALP – justifiable loss of trust and confidence in the management of the partnership – Mr Smith first summarised uncontroversially the law applicable to this ground by reference to paragraph [22] in Martin JA's judgment in Tianrui (International) Holding Co Ltd v China Shanshui Cement Group Ltd [2019(1) CILR 481:

> "It is well established that a company may be wound up on the just and equitable ground if it is established that there has been a justifiable loss of confidence in the management, for example on account of serious misconduct or serious mismanagement of the affairs of the company by the directors or the majority shareholders: Loch v John Blackwood Ltd ([1924] AC at 788)".

42. Mr Smith then went on to submit that the judge had failed properly to apply the test inherent in this statement of the law because he did not identify in paragraph [166] the material on which he was relying for his conclusion. What the judge should have done was to identify the relevant material before the court calling into question the conduct and management of the affairs of the partnership and then to have determined on the basis of that material whether Dr Fan had justifiably lost trust and confidence in the management of the partnership on account of serious misconduct or serious mismanagement of the partnership's affairs. If the judge had proceeded as he ought to have done, he would have been bound to find that there was no material from which he could conclude that this third ground for winding up ALP was sustainable.

43. Mr Smith further argued that, even if it be permissible to look at findings made by the judge in paragraphs other than [166], the common thread of these is that they are all premised on Dr Fan's case that he had a legitimate expectation and understanding arising from a relationship akin to partnership as contemplated by Lord Wilberforce in Ebrahimi, which case is misconceived for the reasons he (Mr Smith) had already advanced. In short, the GP should not be condemned and found guilty of serious misconduct and mismanagement for acting in accordance with the 2017 Agreement.

44. Mr Smith then turned to the judge's fourth ground for winding up ALP – the GP's conflict of interest and breach of the fiduciary duty to act in good faith. He submitted that if the judge reached his conclusion that the GP failed to act in good faith because it frustrated Dr Fan's legitimate expectation by refusing his request to have transferred to him 10% of the Legend Cayman shares, the judge erred because his legitimate expectation finding was misconceived for the reasons he (Mr Smith) had earlier advanced. This left the question whether the GP's decision to decline to approve Dr Fan's request for the transfer of 10% of the Legend Cayman shares was outwith the discretion conferred by Clauses 7.7 and 9 of the LPA.

45. Arguing that the section 19 ELPA good faith duty was owed to the partnership as a whole and not to an individual limited partner apart from any other such partners, Mr Smith contended that it was open to the GP to take into account the wider interest of the partnership in Legend Cayman continuing to thrive and not have regard simply to the interest of Dr Fan as a limited partner, and this is what the GP did. The evidence provided in Dr Zhang's second affidavit showed that the reason the GP declined to grant the approval sought by Dr Fan was that, although Cayman Legend had great potential and had achieved a high initial capitalisation, it was spending so much capital on activities such as research and clinical trials that it was loss making and needed to raise fresh capital from the market on a regular basis which would be jeopardised if a large block of shares became available at the same time. In Dr Zhang's view, "if Dr Fan's request to sell $ 56 million worth of stock to the public had been granted, Legend [Cayman] would not have been able to raise $300 million in May 2021, impacting Legend's survival. Therefore, approval and control of inside selling is vital for Legend to survive …".

46. Mr Smith also argued that Dr Fan was clearly aware of the role of Dr Zhang at the time he entered into the 2017 Agreement and thereby consented to and/or waived any conflict of interest which did exist by reason of Clause 10 of the Subscription Agreement:

> "The Subscriber further acknowledges and is aware that the General Partner, its directors or any of its associates may invest in, directly or indirectly, or manage or advise other collective investment schemes or accounts which invest in assets which may also be purchased or sold by the Partnership".

47. Finally, Mr Smith contended that there was an adequate alternative remedy open to Dr Fan, namely a direct claim against the GP for breach of the section 19 good faith duty. In support of this submission, Mr Smith referred to [64] of the judgment of this Court in Kuwait Ports Authority[7]. We were also referred to [23] of the judgment of this Court in Tianrui where Martin JA stated that it is well settled that a winding up petition will not succeed if there exists an adequate alternative remedy which the petitioner has unreasonably failed to pursue. Mr Smith submitted that the court hearing a breach of the section 19 duty case would have available a more flexible range of remedies to meet the situation as it sees fit, than the court hearing a winding up petition which was effectively a "nuclear" all or nothing option.

48. The overall submission made on behalf of Dr Fan by Mr Valentin KC was that the judge's winding up order was validly made for the reasons the judge gave in both of his judgments. The judge did not err in finding that the relationship between Dr Fan and Dr Zhang was a close and personal one akin to the relationship that exists between partners of the sort identified by Lord Wilberforce in Ebrahimi both at the time when: (i) before ALP was constituted, Dr Fan was assured by Dr Zhang and his delegate, Ms Wang, that 6 months after the IPO he would be given access to the Legend Cayman shares represented by his interest in the partnership that was the equivalent of 10% of Legend Cayman's issued capital; and (ii) when, after the establishment of ALP, Dr Fan's request that those shares be transferred into his ownership was repeatedly refused by Dr Zhang on behalf of the GP, at which time the GP was also under the duty to act at all times in good faith in the interest of the exempted partnership imposed by section 19 (1) ELPA and under an equitable duty to avoid a conflict between Dr Zhang's interest in Cayman Legend's share capital and Dr Fan's interest in obtaining his shares.

49. Mr Valentin drew support for this submission from the following passages, amongst others, in Lord Wilberforce's judgment:

(1) "No doubt, in order to present a petition [the petitioner] must qualify as a shareholder, but I see no reason for preventing him from relying upon any circumstances of justice or equity which affect him in his relations with the company or, in a case such as the present, with other shareholders." [p.375A]

(2) "It would be impossible, and wholly undesirable, to define the circumstances in which these considerations [of a personal character arising between one individual and another, which may make it unjust, or inequitable to insist on legal rights, or to exercise them in a particular way], may arise." [p.379 C/D & E]

(3) Elements (i) and (iii) referred to on p. 379E-G that may require equitable considerations, namely: (i) an association formed or continued on the basis of a personal relationship, involving mutual confidence, an element that will often be found where a pre-existing partnership has been converted into a limited company; (iii) a restriction upon the transfer of the member's interest in the company – so that if confidence is lost, or one member is removed from management, he cannot take out his stake and go elsewhere.

50. Mr Valentin challenged Mr Smith's contention that no petition to wind up an exempted limited partnership established in conformity with section 9 ELPA based on an alleged relationship between the petitioning limited partner and another limited partner and/or the GP of the sort identified by Lord Wilberforce, could ever be properly granted. Mr Valentin submitted that Mr Smith could not escape from the fact that an exempted limited partnership was a partnership, albeit of a particular kind, and section 36 ELPA expressly provides that "on application by a partner, creditor or liquidator, the court may make orders and give directions for the winding up and dissolution of an exempted limited partnership as may be just and equitable". [emphasis supplied]

51. Mr Valentin also challenged Mr Smith's reliance[8] on the penultimate and ultimate sentences of the passage set out in paragraph [36] above. In Mr Valentin's submission, in these sentences Lord Wilberforce was not positively adopting the submission that the phrase "just and equitable" does not operate so as to entitle one party to disregard the obligation he assumes by entering a company, nor the court dispensing him from it; rather, he was dismissing the argument advanced by junior counsel for the respondent that is reported at p.369C-D:

> "The words of section 222 (f) are ex facie unlimited in scope. There are five considerations which should be borne in mind in construing it. (1) … (2) … (3) It is an accepted principle of our law that pacta sunt servanda, and when one is construing even words as wide as " just and equitable " that principle should be borne in mind; it would follow that, certainly in the absence of bad faith, the majority of the shareholders should not be punished for carrying out a power which, as well as being in the Act, is part of the express contract between the parties. (4) …"

(i) Mr Smith's submission is inconsistent with the Ebrahimi decision where the company had the contractual right under the articles and the statutory right to remove Mr Ebrahimi from his office as a director but nonetheless equity intervened to wind up the company.

(ii) Dr Fan's complaint is not that the entirety of the provisions of the 2017 Agreement that established the partnership are void or voidable on grounds of misrepresentation, mistake or non est factum. Instead, given the assurances conveyed to Dr Fan that after the IPO 10% of the shares in Legend Cayman would be his to sell, the GP should be held to that assurance, this being something within the power of the GP under Clause 7.7[9].

(iii) Lord Wilberforce's observation at p.380B-E that, even where there is a statutory power to remove a director and the articles provide for other removal powers, the just and equitable provision nevertheless comes to [the director's] assistance if he can point to, and prove, some special underlying obligation of his fellow members in good faith, or confidence…" supports Dr Fan's case.

(iv) The decisions in O'Neill, Coroin and Cool Seas are all distinguishable from the instant case since in none of the former was there an assurance made outside the pertinent agreements that a power would be exercised in a particular way in favour of shareholder which was not honoured by the assurer.

(v) ALP is not entitled to rely on the entire contract clause in the ELP or Clause 7(c) in the Subscription Agreement because to do so would be contrary to general considerations of equity arising from the relationship between Dr Fan and Dr Zhang in light of the assurance given and also because reliance on this provision would be: (i) a breach of the section 19 ELPA good faith duty; and (ii) an implied duty to act in good faith; see Familymart China Holding Co. Ltd. v Ting Chuan (Cayman Islands) Holding Corporation [CICA Appeals 7 & 8 of 2019, unreported, 23 April 2020]

[9] When making his oral submissions Mr Valentin rightly accepted that Clause 7.7 rather than clause 9 was the power that best suited his argument.

53. Familymart was a case involving a petition to wind up a joint venture company ("the Company") on, inter alia, the just and equitable ground that an "understanding" as to how part of the business was to be operated had been abandoned after several years by the majority shareholder. The Company had been incorporated pursuant to Foundation Agreements which were amended from time to time leading, inter alia, to a Shareholders Agreement ("the SHA"), clause 20.2 of which provided: "without prejudice to any other provisions under this Agreement, this Agreement … upon the Effective Date, constitute (sic) the entire agreement and supersedes all prior agreements and understandings, both written and oral, among the Parties with respect to the subject matters hereof." [emphasis added]. The lead judgment was delivered by Sir Alan Moses JA with the concurrence of Rix and Martin JAA. The Court of Appeal reversed the decision of the judge below that reliance in the petition on the "understanding" should be struck out by reason of clause 20.2. In para 37 of his judgment Moses JA said:

> "Even where parties to a commercial joint venture agreement include an entire agreement clause, as in the instant case, an obligation to act in good faith may be imposed. (See Ross v Waverley Commercial [2004] BCLC 545] and Sheikh Tahnoon Al Nehayan v Kent [2018] EWHC 333 (Com)."

The Court of Appeal also reversed Kawaley J's order staying the petition on the ground that the dispute was governed by an arbitration agreement contained in the SHA. On 20 September 2023 the Privy Council set aside the Court of Appeal's order on the sole ground that the dispute was indeed covered by the arbitration agreement[10].

54. When dealing with the second just and equitable ground upheld by the judge – irretrievable breakdown in the relationship between Dr Fan and Dr Zhang that had begun as one of mutual trust and confidence – Mr Valentin accepted that this ground depended on the establishment of a relationship akin to partnership of the sort envisaged by Lord Wilberforce and submitted that the judge correctly stated the law in paragraphs [182] – [183] of the Judgment and paragraphs [74] – [75] in the strike out judgment which the judge correctly applied to the relevant facts in reaching his conclusion that this ground was established.

55. Turning to the judge's third winding up ground – justifiable loss of trust and confidence in the management of the partnership – Mr Valentin submitted that the judge's statement of the applicable law in [10(12)] of the strike out judgment was impeccable. The establishment of this ground did not depend upon there being a relationship between Dr Fan and Dr Zhang that was akin to partnership in accordance with criteria set in Ebrahimi. Responding to Mr Smith's contention that there was no material from which to conclude that there had been an objectively verifiable loss of confidence in the GP, Mr Valentin identified the following findings made by the judge:

(i) "in my judgment the affairs of the Partnership have been conducted by the GP (with Dr Zhang in the driving seat in that respect) in a manner which is oppressive and in breach of Dr. Fan's legitimate expectation and understanding"[166]. Mr Valentin submitted that this is a reference to the judge's (correct) findings at [167] that Dr Zhang had created and encouraged Dr. Fan to believe that six months after the IPO, he would be entitled to have access to 10% of the Legend Cayman shares, but that expectation and understanding had then been unreasonably frustrated by the Partnership, the GP and Dr. Zhang. The "oppression" of Dr. Fan consisted in the failure by the GP (represented by Dr. Zhang) to honour what Dr. Zhang had promised Dr Fan in respect of the Legend Cayman shares. It also includes the attempts of Dr Zhang to belittle Dr Fan's role and contribution referred to by the judge in [182] and [154]).

(ii) "Dr. Fan in entering into the 2017 Agreement trusted Dr. Zhang and Ms Wang to do the right thing and to honour the roll over of Dr. Fan's Legend Nanjing shares to Legend Cayman. Dr. Zhang and the GP have betrayed that trust and it can easily be seen how Dr Fan legitimately and reasonably believes, after his significant contribution to the increasing value of Legend Cayman, that he has been badly let down by the GP and those that control the GP. Dr Fan has been unfairly treated." [169]

(iii) "The GP's consideration of and reactions to Dr Fan's reasonable requests for the shares shows the GP in a bad light. Such is indicative of the GP's breach of its fiduciary duties and its failure to act in the best interests of the Partnership and its limited partners. Dr. Fan had nearly a 70% interest. He should have been treated with respect and fairness. He was not so treated. He was left with no reasonable alternative but to file the petition." [170]

56. In regard to the judge's fourth winding up ground – the GP's conflict of interest and breach of the fiduciary duty to act in good faith – Mr Valentin disputed Mr Smith's contentions that: (a) the GP was entitled to be regarded as acting in the overall interest of the partnership consistently with the section 19 (1) good faith duty and in accordance with the 2017 Agreement in declining to allow Dr Fan to have access to 10% of the Legend Cayman's issued shares at a time when the company needed to raise capital to fund its clinical trials and research; and (b) there was in any event no conflict between the interests of the partnership, Legend Cayman and Dr Zhang, all of whom had an interest in protecting and enhancing the value of Legend Cayman. Mr Valentin argued that in considering what is in the interest of the partnership viz the limited partners, the GP must ignore its and its majority shareholder's interest in Legend Cayman, and this the GP, acting by Dr Zhang, manifestly failed to do as the judge was fully entitled to find in [178]. Further, even if the sole interest of Dr Zhang and Legend Cayman was in protecting and enhancing the value of Legend Cayman (a proposition not supported by the evidence), it does not follow that this was Dr Fan's interest (or sole interest). It is also to the point that Ms Wang did not oppose Dr Fan's petition.

57. Mr Valentin, next turned to Mr Smith's contention that by Clause 10 of the Subscription Agreement[11], Dr Fan had consented to or waived any conflict of interest that the GP (through Dr Zhang) might have had. In Mr Valentin's submission, the judge had plainly been correct to hold in [178] that there was nothing in Clause 10 that could come to the rescue of the GP in this case.

58. Finally, Mr Valentin challenged Mr Smith's contention that a more suitable and reasonable remedy than a winding up petition for Dr Fan to take was a claim for breach of the section 19 (1) good faith duty against the GP wherein the court would have available a more flexible range of remedies to meet the situation as it saw fit. Mr Valentin submitted that Dr Fan wanted the shares in Legend Cayman he had been promised and a winding up petition was by far the most straightforward way of achieving this objective.

59. In support of this submission, Mr Valentin relied on paragraphs 36 and 37 of Martin JA's judgment in Tianrui. In that case the appellant ("Tianrui") presented a petition to wind up the respondent ("the Company") on the just and equitable basis on the ground, inter alia, that two of the other three significant shareholders of the Company, ACC and CNBM, had acted unfairly and/or oppressively towards Tianrui and/or that the affairs of the Company had been conducted with a lack of probity and Tianrui had justifiably lost confidence in the management of the Company. At first instance, Mangatal J struck the petition out on the ground that the Tianrui had available alternative remedies which could be reasonably pursued. Paragraphs 36 and 37 of Martin JA's judgment read:

> 36. "If the allegations set out in the petition are true, it seems to us clear that they are capable of establishing that it would be just and equitable to wind up the company. Put simply, Tianrui's position as evinced by its petition is that it cannot be expected to remain in association with CNBM and ACC in light of their conduct towards it. None of the remedies identified by the judge deals with that underlying complaint".

[11] "The Subscriber acknowledges and is aware that the General Partner, its directors or any of its associates may invest in, directly or indirectly, or manage or advise other collective investment schemes or accounts which invest in assets which may also be purchased or sold to the Partnership".

37. "The company suggests that if the underlying complaint is as we have identified, Tianrui can bring its association with CNBM and ACC, and with the company, to an end by selling its shares on the Hong Kong stock exchange. It accepts that Tianrui could only sell the shareholding it now has, and that a 21.40% shareholding might fetch proportionately less than the 28.16% shareholding that Tianrui originally had, since its former shareholding enabled Tianrui to block special resolutions; but the company says that the effect of selling would be to crystallize a claim for damages which could then be pursued by means of an action for conspiracy. In our view, these assertions epitomize what is wrong with the company's position. If the actions of the company, prompted by directors appointed at the instance of a majority of its shareholders, have resulted in a justifiable loss of confidence in the management of the company, Tianrui has a statutory right to petition for the winding up of the company on the just and equitable ground. It cannot be deprived of that right merely because the company can point to other remedies which, alone or in combination, might arguably go all or some of the way to compensating Tianrui for what has occurred. In our judgment, Tianrui may legitimately take the view that it prefers the company to be wound up to having to pursue piecemeal a series of actions, by litigation or otherwise, or by a combination of litigation and other steps, that might be capable of redressing some, or even all, of its concerns."

Discussion and decision

The first winding up ground

60. Upon signing the 2016 Agreement Dr Fan had an unconditional and unqualified contractual right to have transferred into his ownership 10% of the issued shares in Legend Nanjing after completion of the company's contemplated IPO, regardless of the effect on the value of the company's shares if he chose to sell his 10% shareholding. As a consequence of the assurances he received from Dr Zhang and Ms Wang that he would have the exact equivalent of his entitlement under the 2016 Agreement in respect of shares in Legend Cayman's shares ("the assurances"), Dr Fan signed the 2017 Agreement (the LPA, the Subscription Agreement and the Acknowledgement) on 9 June 2017. Dr Zhang and Ms Wang were directors of Genscript and Dr Zhang held the majority of the shares in that company. ALP was established on 16 February 2017 with Genscript as its General Partner. The assurances began to be given from about mid-June 2016 and continued on and off until shortly before Dr Fan executed the 2017 Agreement. As recorded above, in her email to Dr Fan dated 3 June 2017 Ms Wang stated: "The best news for you is that your stake in Nanjing Legend will be turned into shares in Cayman Legend". This was followed by her WeChat message of 8 June 2017: "This agreement is not to change any material interest of your's. It's only intended to make the original agreement legitimate, and to create scope for future development." As Dr Zhang and Ms Wang must have realised, Dr Fan accepted their assurances without seeking independent legal advice because he trusted them having worked closely with them for Genscript since 2014. As the judge found at [169], he relied on them to honour the assurances whatever was stated in the 2017 Agreement.

61. In my opinion, the repudiation by the GP (Genscript) of the assurances it gave to Dr Fan through Dr Zhang and Ms Wang is an egregious act of bad faith and the judge was right for the reasons that follow to order the winding up of ALP on the ground that the GP had frustrated Dr Fan's legitimate expectation that the GP would transfer to him 10% of the issued shares in Legend Cayman following the IPO and the end of the ensuing six month lockdown period.

62. ALP is very different from a conventional partnership under the Partnership Act for the reasons identified by Mr Smith. Nonetheless, under the law of the Cayman Islands it is a partnership, albeit an exempted limited partnership, and a partner therein has a statutory right under section 36 (3) (g) to petition for its winding up on the ground that it is just and equitable to do so.

63. As recorded above, Dr Fan received the assurances both before and after Genscript had become the General Partner of ALP. The assurances were not included in the 2017 Agreement and were intended to induce Dr Fan to become a limited partner of ALP and succeeded in doing so as a result of Dr Fan having a close and trusting relationship with the assurers. Honouring the assurances depended on the necessary action being taken by the GP which alone had authority (acting by Dr Zhang) to conduct the business of ALP. Furthermore, as envisaged at (iii) of the indicia for the existence of 'something more' for the superimposition of equitable considerations in the passage from Ebrahimi quoted at paragraph [24] above, Dr Fan could not exit from ALP without the consent of the GP. It follows in my judgment that, as the judge held, the relationship between Dr Fan and Dr Zhang was sufficiently akin to partnership of the sort contemplated by Lord Wilberforce in Ebrahimi for the assurances to be of a character arising between one individual and another that made it inequitable for the GP to insist on a claimed entitlement to refuse to agree to Dr Fan's request to have 10% of the Legend Cayman shares transferred to him.[12]

64. I reject Mr Smith's submission that the GP had a duty to do what it considered to be in the best interests of the partnership which was that they were best served by refusing Dr Fan's request for else the fortunes of Legend Cayman and ALP's interest in the company would be adversely affected. As stated above, Dr Fan had an unqualified right under the 2016 Agreement to own, and sell if he chose to do so, 10% of the shares in Legend Nanjing post the IPO, regardless of the effect that this might have on the value of Legend Cayman's shares; and the assurances he was given were that he would have the equivalent right in respect of the Legend Cayman shares. ALP (effectively the limited partners) should therefore have taken the consequences resulting from the honouring of the assurances for the value of Legend shares, those assurances having been given by Dr Zhang of the GP (also a limited partner) and Ms Wang, a limited partner.

65. As will be apparent from [64], I am not persuaded by Mr Smith's submission that the terms of the 2017 Agreement, including in particular Clause 7.7 and the entire agreement clauses, preclude a winding up on just and equitable grounds. As Mr Valentin submitted, the decisions in O'Neill, Coroin and Cool Seas are all distinguishable from the case in hand and, as Mr Valentin noted, Dr Fan's petition is consistent with the 2017 Agreement since the GP had power under Clause 7.7 of the LPA to honour the assurances by acceding to Dr Fan's request for the transfer of 10% of the Legend Cayman shares. In my view, the case falls squarely within the emphasised passage in Ebrahimi quoted at paragraph [24] above. The existence of the assurances made it unjust and inequitable for the GP to exercise the power conferred on it by clause 7.7 in a particular way, i.e. by refusing consent to the withdrawal rather than consenting. I would also point out that the assurances were not merely Dr Fan's own subjective expectation at the time of concluding the 2017 Agreement, as suggested by Mr Smith[13], but were objectively found by the judge to have been repeatedly given, from which finding there is no appeal.

66. So far as the entire agreement clauses are concerned, I am of the view that reliance thereon in the circumstances of this case would be inconsistent with the free-standing duty to act in good faith which I find to be engaged in respect to the assurances, the honouring of which is a matter that I find affected the conscience of the GP; see Familymart at [37] (quoted at paragraph [53] above) and the following passage in the judgment of Smith J in In re Wondoflex Textiles Pty Ltd [1951] VLR 458, cited with strong approval[14] by Lord Wilberforce) in Ibrahimi at 378E-H:

> " It is also true, I think, that, generally speaking, a petition for winding up, based upon the partnership analogy, cannot succeed if what is complained of is merely a valid exercise of powers conferred in terms by the articles: .. . To hold otherwise would enable a member to be relieved from the consequences of a bargain knowingly entered into by him: . . . But this, I think, is subject to an important qualification. Acts which, in law, are a valid exercise of powers conferred by the articles may nevertheless be entirely outside what can fairly be regarded as having been in the contemplation of the parties when they became members of the company; and in such cases the fact that what has been done is not in excess of power will not necessarily be an answer to a claim for winding up. Indeed, it may be said that one purpose of [the just and equitable provision] is to enable the court to relieve a party from his bargain in such cases." [emphasis supplied].

67. I am also of the view that to rely on the entire agreement clauses would be a breach by the GP of the section 19 (1) EPLA duty of good faith. The duty is owed to "the exempted limited partnership" which must mean the limited partners, which include Dr Fan and, in my opinion the other limited partners, the GP, Ms Wang and later the Ye Wang Family Trust -- would surely have no standing to dissent because the GP and Ms Wang gave and repudiated the assurances. If I am wrong about this, the free-standing duty of good faith that I have held in [66] to apply to the assurances will be unaffected.

68. In my judgment, the judge did not err in holding that proceedings by Dr Fan for breach of the section 19 (1) duty to act fairly would not be a more reasonable remedy than his winding up petition. As the judge observed, Dr Fan is seeking the transfer into his ownership from the shares held by ALP the equivalent of 10% of Legend Cayman's issued shares which will be the result if his winding up petition succeeds, and this represents a much more straightforward proceeding than a claim under section 19(1) ELPA.

The second winding up ground

69. Mr Smith's challenge to this winding up ground is founded on Lord Briggs' statement in Lau v Chu at [15]: that: "where the company is a corporate quasi-partnership, an irretrievable breakdown in trust and confidence between participating members may justify a just and equitable winding up" [emphasis added].

70. I have already held that by reason of Dr Fan having been induced to become a limited partner of ALP by the assurances given by the GP (acting by Dr Zhang and Ms Wang) and the existence of (iii) of the indicia indicated in Ebrahimi, the relationship between Dr Fan and the GP was sufficiently akin to a partnership to engage the applicability of the just and equitable winding up ground consistently with Lord Wilberforce's judgment in Ebrahimi, as the judge found.

71. I turn to consider whether it is necessary for the establishment of this second ground that, in addition to there being a relationship akin to partnership consistent with Ebrahimi, the petitioner has to have been a participant in the running of the business. In paragraph [9] of Lau v Chu, Lord Briggs observed that the jurisdiction to wind up a BVI company on the just and equitable ground was entirely statutory following the similar jurisdiction in UK with the result that the UK case-law was the primary source of authority for the scope of the jurisdiction. He then went on to say in [17] that where the company is a corporate quasi-partnership a winding up on just and equitable grounds "is the response of equity to a state of affairs between individuals who agreed to work together on the basis of mutual trust and confidence where that trust and confidence has completely gone." [emphasis supplied]. In light of the fact that the judge and the parties in the proceedings below also took the approach that the UK case-law was the primary source of authority for the scope of the just and equitable jurisdiction in the case of a Cayman Islands ELP, with the judge stating in [158] that he had had regard to Lau v Chu, I find I find myself constrained to conclude that in respect of this second winding up ground, Dr Fan had to establish that he was a participant in running the business of ALP which was a condition that on the evidence he was never going to be able satisfy. As Mr Smith was at pains to point out, Dr Fan was never going to be involved in running the business of the partnership by reason of the effect of section 14 (1) & (2)) ELPA. It follows in my view that Mr Smith's challenge to the judge's second winding up ground succeeds and in consequence this ground should be set aside.

The third winding up ground

72. It is important to appreciate that the establishment of this just and equitable ground is not dependent on there being a relationship akin to partnership in accordance with Lord Wilberforce's judgment in Ebrahimi.

73. I am not persuaded by the submissions Mr Smith advanced in seeking to have this winding up ground overturned. On a fair reading of the Judgment, it is clear in my view that in finding this ground was established, the judge proceeded on the basis of his findings in paragraphs

[166], [167], [169] and [182] that the GP's failure to honour the assurances which it was obliged to do in good faith amounted to misconduct in the management and affairs of the partnership. For the reasons I have given in upholding the judge's first winding up ground, I am also satisfied that the judge was entitled to make this finding and to conclude that by reason of this misconduct on the part of the GP, Dr Fan had justifiably lost trust and confidence in the management of the affairs of the partnership to the requisite objective standards.

The fourth winding up ground

74. In my view, the judge's conclusion in paragraph [178] of the Judgment that the wording of Clause 10 of the Subscription Agreement does not mean that Dr Fan consented to or waived any conflict of interest to which the GP was subject is unassailable.

75. I am also of the opinion that the judge was entitled to conclude that the GP (acting by Dr Zhang) was in breach of the fiduciary duties to act in good faith and avoid a conflict of interest. However, this conclusion is dependent on the judge's finding that the GP frustrated Dr Fan's legitimate expectation that the GP would transfer into his ownership 10% of the Legend Cayman shares contrary to the good faith duty it owed in regard to the assurances. Thus, if Mr Smith's submission that the judge's first ground for winding up ALP should be set aside, on the ground say that the terms of the 2017 Agreement preclude the first winding up ground, the GP would have been entitled to conclude that the interests of the partnership would be better served if Dr Fan were not permitted to sell his claimed 10% of Legend Cayman shares. It follows that in substance the first and the fourth winding up grounds are duplicitous, but I do not think that this is a reason for setting the fourth ground aside.

Conclusion

76. For the reasons given above I would uphold the first, third and fourth grounds of the judge's decision for winding up ALP and reject the second ground. It follows that the appeal against the judge's winding up order is dismissed.

A closing observation

77. No doubt for sound and sensible reasons which I do not for a moment criticise, the hearings below and on appeal in this litigation were conducted on the basis that the English and Welsh and Commonwealth jurisprudence (including decisions of the Privy Council) was applicable to petitions to wind up on just and equitable grounds a Cayman Islands ELP, the new kid on the block, pursuant to section 36 (3) (g) ELPA, notwithstanding the marked differences between an ELP and a partnership governed by the Partnership Act and a company incorporated under the Companies Act. For my part, I would have been very interested to have heard a "further and in the alternative" case that the expression "just and equitable" in section 36 (3) (g) ELPA was to be construed in an expansive and flexible way, taking full account of the special nature of an ELP and less account of the overseas jurisprudence.

ITEM NO. 138

21/1/10

IN THE GRAND COURT OF THE CAYMAN ISLANDS
FINANCIAL SERVICES DIVISION
The Hon. Mr Justice Andrew J. Jones QC
Tuesday 19th January 2009 2010

CAUSE NO. FSD 15 of 2009 (AJJ)

IN THE MATTER OF SECTION 92 OF THE COMPANIES LAW (2009 REVISION)

AND IN THE MATTER OF BELMONT ASSET BASED LENDING LTD

Appearances: Mr Simon Dickson of Mourant du Feu & Jeune for the Petitioner
Mr Sam Dawson of Solomon Harris for the Fund

JUDGMENT

1. This is a petition presented pursuant to section 94(e) of the Companies Law (2009 Revision) for an order that Belmont Asset Based Lending Ltd ("the Fund") be wound up compulsorily and that Messrs Wight and Sybersma of Deloitte be appointed as joint official liquidators.

FACTUAL BACKGROUND

2. The Fund was incorporated on 24th October 2003 as an open ended investment fund and was registered with the Cayman Islands Monetary Authority pursuant to section 4(3)(c) of the Mutual Funds Law. It was promoted by Harcourt Investment Consulting AG ("Harcourt") which is part of the Vontobel Banking Group, headquartered in Zurich, Switzerland. Harcourt acts as the Fund's investment adviser and Alternative Investment Solutions Limited, a wholly owned subsidiary of Harcourt, acts as its investment manager. The Fund's board of directors comprises three individuals who are all employees either of Harcourt or other Vontobel group companies. A nominal 100 voting shares have been issued to the Investment Manager. The Fund's investors have subscribed for redeemable participating shares which do not carry any voting rights. The result of this structure is that the Fund is wholly controlled by Harcourt. The holders of the redeemable participating shares, who own the whole economic interest in the Fund, are not entitled to requisition an extraordinary general meeting for the purposes of passing a special resolution to put the Fund into voluntary litigation. Only Harcourt has power to put the Fund into voluntary liquidation, but it has declined to do so for reasons which have not been explained to the Court.

3. The Fund's administrator is Citco Fund Services (Europe) BV, which is wholly independent of the Vontobel group. Its custodian and bankers are also members of the Citco group. The Administrator does not now have any representation on the Fund's board of directors.

4. The Petitioner is Bear Sterns Alternative Assets International Ltd ("Bear Sterns") which operated as a division of the Bear Sterns investment bank and is now part of the JP Morgan Chase Group. Bear Sterns is registered as owner of approximately 1.18 million redeemable participating shares in the Fund which were valued at approximately $104 million, based upon the NAV figures issued by the Fund for 30th September 2008. On 19th September Bear Sterns submitted a redemption request in respect of that number of shares which would have a value of $8,800,000 as at 30th September 2008.

5. The investment objective of the Fund, as stated in Section 3 of its offering document (entitled Confidential Information Memorandum), is to provide long term capital appreciation to shareholders by investing in a diversified portfolio of asset-based lending and related strategies. As a result of events occurring in September 2008 it is accepted by all those involved in the management of the Fund that it is no longer in a position to pursue its investment objective and that is not now viable as a mutual fund. This situation came about as a result of two factors, namely the general market conditions which caused a severe credit crunch and the effects of a fraud committed by Mr Tom Petters. Allegations of fraud against him were first made public in September 2008 and he has recently been convicted by a US District Court in Minnesota of carrying out what was described as a "multi billion dollar Ponzi scheme". The value of various investments made by the Fund in entities which were managed by or related in some way to Petters Company Inc have been written off or substantially written down in value. Harcourt concluded that investments in Lancelot Investors Fund Ltd and Palm Beach Offshore II (which represented 14.57% of the Fund's recorded assets) should be written off. An investment in Stewardship Credit Arbitrage Fund (representing 4.79% of the Fund's recorded assets) was written down by 61% and investments in other funds (representing 7.9% of its recorded assets) became unrealisable because those funds suspended redemptions.

6. The combination of the credit crunch and the Petters fraud had a serious adverse impact upon the Fund. As a consequence, on 27th October 2008 the Fund's board of directors passed a series of written resolutions by which they (a) recommended that the Investment Manager (as owner of the voting shares) pass a special resolution placing the Fund into voluntary liquidation and (b) declared a suspension of the calculation of NAV and consequential suspension of redemptions and subscriptions. The copy of these written resolutions exhibited (at page148) to Mr Edouard Tijou's affidavit is signed by only one of the three directors, but I was told by counsel that duplicates of the resolutions were in fact signed by all three directors. On 31st October the Fund's Administrator sent a circular letter to the shareholders informing them of the Board's decision. The Administrator stated "the Directors have deemed that the continued operation of the [Fund] is no longer viable and that steps should be taken to realise the [Fund's] portfolio and to place [the Fund] into voluntary liquidation". Since two of these directors are themselves employees of Harcourt and the third is an employee of another Vontobel group company, the shareholders were entitled to assume that the directors' recommendations were in reality decisions which would be implemented immediately.

7. For reasons which have not been explained, Harcourt changed its mind and has not in fact taken the steps necessary to put the Fund into voluntary liquidation pursuant to the Companies Law. Instead, Harcourt set about the task of realising the assets and making distributions to shareholders without having put the Fund into liquidation and appointing a liquidator. Bear Sterns become dissatisfied with the way in which the informal liquidation process was being conducted and on 26th November 2009 presented a petition for an order the Fund be wound up compulsorily by order of the Court and that qualified insolvency practitioners be appointed as official liquidators. It is not in dispute that the Fund is solvent on a balance sheet test. Nor is it in dispute that the Fund is no longer viable as a mutual fund.

BEAR STEARN'S WINDING UP PETITION

8. By its petition Bear Stearns contended that the Fund should be wound up on the "just and equitable" ground for three reasons, namely that (a) having suspended NAV, the Fund's management were acting in a manner which was contrary to its articles of association and therefore in breach of the legal bargain between the company and its shareholders; (b) Harcourt is acting in breach of duty and has lost the confidence of shareholders; and (c) there has been a "loss of substratum", meaning that the purpose for which the Fund was established can no longer be carried out and that it has ceased to be viable as a mutual fund.

9. The Petition was listed for directions on 18th December 2009 in accordance CWR Order 3, rule 11. Having determined that the Petition should be treated as a proceeding against the Fund, as opposed to treating it as a proceeding between shareholders in which the Fund itself is merely the subject-matter of the proceeding, I directed that one of the Fund's directors, Mrs Margaret Thompson, should send to every other shareholder and every known creditor copies of the winding up petition, the verifying affidavit, the supporting affidavits sworn by the qualified insolvency practitioners nominated for appointment as official liquidators and any explanatory statement made by Harcourt. Given that the petition contained allegations of breach of duty against Harcourt, this was the classic case in which the independent directors should have determined the Fund's response to the winding up petition in the interests of its investors. It is established best practice for mutual funds incorporated in the Cayman Islands to have a board of directors which includes at least some persons, if not a majority, who are independent of the investment manager and administrator. In this case the Fund has no independent directors at all. Two out of three members of the board are employees of Harcourt and the third, Mrs Margaret Thompson, cannot be regarded as independent because she is an employee of Vontobel Bank Cayman Ltd which is a wholly owned subsidiary of the same group as Harcourt. Why Harcourt failed to comply with industry standards in this respect was not explained. The task of communicating with the shareholders and making a recommendation about the merits of the petition therefore fell upon Mrs Thompson on the basis that she was relatively independent in that she was not employed by Harcourt and the allegations of breach of duty were not made against her directly.

10. On 4th January 2010 Mrs Thompson duly sent the petition and other documents to all shareholders and known creditors, together with a covering letter in which she refuted the first two grounds asserted in the petition, but accepted that there has been a "loss of substratum". She advised that the Board of Directors would not oppose the petition on behalf of the Fund and recommended that the other shareholders should not oppose it. In the event, no shareholders gave notice of intention to oppose (or support) the petition and it came on for hearing unopposed. Counsel for Bear Stearns informed me that his client had agreed to withdraw the first two grounds (set out in paragraphs 45-65 of the petition) and argued that it was "just and equitable" for a winding up order to be made solely on the ground that the Fund has suffered a "loss of substratum" and ceased to be viable as a mutual fund. I made an order allowing the petition to be amended by deleting paragraphs 45-65. On this basis the Fund's directors did not oppose the making of a winding up order.

11. A winding up order is a discretionary remedy. By issuing a winding up petition the shareholder or creditor is invoking class rights, with the result that all those in the class are entitled to be heard, for which purpose winding up petitions are normally required to be advertised. A winding up order is "binding upon all the world". It takes effect for the benefit of and is binding upon all shareholders and creditors (including contingent creditors and claimants), whether or not they have had actual notice of the petition. It follows that it is not open to a petitioner and the company (acting by its board of directors) to ask the Court to make a winding up order "by consent". Notwithstanding the agreement between the Fund and Bear Stearns, I must still satisfy myself that this is a proper case in which to make a winding up order on the basis of the facts pleaded in the petition, as now amended.

THE JUST AND EQUITABLE GROUND

12. The issue is whether a finding of "loss of substratum" is, by itself, sufficient to justify the Court in making a winding up order on the just and equitable ground under section 94(e) of the Companies Law (2009 Revision).

13. The expressions "loss of substratum" or "failure of substratum" are derived from English case law dating back to a decision of the Court of Appeal in Re Suburban Hotel Co (1867) L.R. 2 Ch. App. 737 at 750. Whilst it may be helpful for the Court to categorise circumstances in which it will be considered just and equitable for a company to be compulsorily wound up, I question whether it is sensible to adopt terminology invented in the context of England's nineteenth century economy. A company was said to have "lost its substratum" if the purpose for which it was formed can no longer be carried out (per Kekewich J. in Re Bristol Joint Stock Bank (1890) 44 Ch.D a703 at 712); or if the company has practically ceased to carry on business because it has become impractical to do so (per James LJ in Re Diamond Fuel Co (1879) 13 Ch.D 400, at 408); or if the company was formed to pursue a specific business opportunity which is no longer available to it (Re Haven Gold Mining Co. (1882) 20 Ch.D 151). To translate these statements into a modern context, it can be said that it is just and equitable to make a winding up order in respect of an open ended corporate mutual fund if the circumstances are such that it has become impractical, if not actually impossible, to carry on its investment business in accordance with the reasonable expectations of its participating shareholders, based upon representations contained in its offering document. If such a company, organised as an open ended mutual fund, has ceased to be viable for whatever reason, the Court will draw the inference that it is just and equitable for a winding up order to be made.

14. This principle has been applied most recently by this Court in Re Philadelphia Alternative Asset Fund Limited (Cause 440/2005). This case concerned a solvent company which had ceased to be viable as an open ended mutual fund because its management had fraudulently overstated its NAV and a US District Court had appointed a receiver on the application of the Commodity Futures Trading Commission. Henderson J. said "In cases where the substratum of a company is gone, winding up will usually be ordered despite the opposition of even a majority of members". A winding up order was made.

15. The Supreme Court of Bermuda has recently adopted exactly the same approach in applying a similar "just and equitable" provision contained in the Bermuda Companies Act, 1981 which has essentially the same legislative history as the equivalent Cayman Islands provision. In Re Stewardship Credit Arbitrage Fund Ltd (2008: No.2006) the court was asked to make a provisional winding up order in respect of an open ended mutual fund which, as it happens, was also a victim of the Petters fraud. It is actually one of the companies in which the Fund invested. Bell J. said " ..the critical complaint to my mind is ... that the substratum of the Company has gone. From the time of the 9th June directors' meeting, the Company has effectively ceased to carry on business, and in practical terms, I have no doubt that the prospect of its carrying on its business in any real way in future has long since disappeared". A provisional winding up order was made.

16. Wherever it is proved that a company established as an open ended mutual fund is no longer viable as such, for whatever reason, the Court will ordinarily conclude that it is just and equitable to make a winding up order. This situation may come about for any number of reasons and not necessarily as a result of any breach of duty, negligence or even bad judgment on the part of the fund's investment managers or administrators. In the present case, the Fund's inability to meet redemption requests and the sudden collapse of its NAV occurred in September and October 2008 as a result of the combined effects of the Petters fraud and an unprecedented credit crunch. There is no suggestion that the Fund's difficulties were caused by any fault on the part of Harcourt. The allegations made against Harcourt (and now withdrawn) related to their attempts to liquidate the Fund following suspension of NAV, not the manner in which they had invested and managed the Fund's assets prior to the events of September 2008. There are sound policy reasons for making a winding up order in respect of non-viable mutual funds, in spite of the fact that this situation has arisen without fault on the part of its management.

17. Typically, mutual funds are established in the Cayman Islands by foreign financial services companies which then act as investment manager or adviser pursuant to a contract, the terms of which will be summarised in the offering document. The skill set required of a successful investment manager is wholly different from that required of professional liquidators. Investment management agreements are invariably made on the assumption that the fund is a going concern and that the investment manager will be responsible for making investment decisions and managing investments, with the result that its terms may be inappropriate to the situation in which the fund is being liquidated. Typically, the investment managers are remunerated on the basis of a percentage of NAV, often coupled with performance fees calculated as a percentage of realised gains. This basis of remuneration will become inappropriate if the fund ceases to be viable and the investment manager ceases to perform at least some of the functions contemplated by the investment management agreement and instead attempts to adopt a liquidation role. Investment management agreements rarely, if ever, contemplate the scenario in which the service provider's role changes from that of investment manager into that of liquidator.

18. An investor's decision to subscribe for shares will be based upon the reputation and past performance of the investment manager. So long as a fund's assets are being invested and managed in accordance with investment criteria and guidelines set out in the offering documents, shareholders cannot and do not expect to have any say in the investment decisions. The position changes if the fund ceases to be viable with the result that the calculation of NAV is suspended and the principal or only function left for management is to realise the assets for the benefit of creditors and shareholders. This exercise may involve an investigation and pursuit of claims against the investment manager and other professional services providers which can only be undertaken by profession independent liquidators. Even if a fund is solvent on a balance sheet test and there is no apparent cause of complaint against any of its service providers, its investors should still not be deprived of the advantages of having the task performed by professional independent liquidators. Nor should they be deprived of the protections provided by the Companies Winding Up Rules, simply because the investment manager (who may not have been at fault) chooses to undertake the task itself.

CONCLUSION

19. For these reasons I am satisfied that it is just and equitable to make a winding up order in respect of the Fund simply on the basis that it is no longer viable as an open ended mutual fund and notwithstanding that the allegations of breach of duty made against its investment manager have been withdrawn.

20. I am satisfied that Messrs Wight and Sybersma, partners in the Cayman Islands firm of Deloitte, are qualified insolvency practitioners who meet the requirements of the Insolvency Practitioners' Regulations in relation to the Fund. I therefore make an order that they be appointed joint official liquidators.

21. Since there never was any allegation of incompetence, negligence or bad judgment against Harcourt in respect of their management of the Fund's assets prior to the events of September 2008 and the allegations made in respect of their attempts to liquidate the Fund have been withdrawn, I authorise the official liquidators to engage the services of Harcourt as advisers if they consider it appropriate to do so.

22. Otherwise, I make a winding up order in the usual terms.

LORD RICHARDS:

Introduction

1. This is an appeal against an order made to wind up AquaPoint LP ("Aquapoint") on the grounds that it was just and equitable to do so. The appeal raises issues as to the circumstances in which the exercise of legal rights may be subject to equitable constraints.

2. Aquapoint is an exempted limited partnership ("ELP") formed in the Cayman Islands under the Exempted Limited Partnership Act ("the ELP Act"). The ELP Act requires an ELP to consist of one or more general partners and one or more limited partners. The general partner has full responsibility for the management and conduct of the ELP's business and is liable for the ELP's debts in the event of a shortfall in its assets. A limited partner must not take part in the management of the ELP and is not liable for its debts and obligations except as may be provided by the partnership agreement.

3. Aquapoint has one general partner and three limited partners. The general partner is GenScript Corporation ("Genscript"), incorporated under the laws of Delaware. Genscript is and has at all material times been controlled by Dr Fangliang (Frank) Zhang. The petitioner, Dr Xiaohu (Frank) Fan, is one of the limited partners, with a 65.96% interest in Aquapoint. The other limited partners are Ms Ye (Sally) Wang, with a 32.98% interest (now held in a family trust), and Genscript, with a 1.06% interest.

4. Aquapoint was established in 2017 to hold approximately 15% of the shares in Legend Biotech Corporation ("Legend Cayman"), a company incorporated in the Cayman Islands and formed by Genscript. It was established in preparation for an initial public offering ("IPO") and listing of the shares of Legend Cayman on the NASDAQ stock exchange in New York. The IPO and listing occurred in 2020. Dr Fan's interest as a limited partner in Aquapoint equates to nearly 20 million shares in Legend Cayman, which is approximately 10% of its share capital ("the 10% shareholding").

5. The essence of Dr Fan's case is that, in order to induce him to become a limited partner in Aquapoint, Genscript (acting by Dr Zhang and Ms Wang) gave him assurances that he would be able to withdraw the 10% shareholding from Aquapoint six months after the IPO, but that, in breach of those assurances, Genscript prevented him from doing so by exercising its power as general partner under the partnership agreement to refuse its consent to the withdrawal. The trial judge found that the assurances had been given so as to induce Dr Fan to become a limited partner in Aquapoint. Those findings were not challenged on appeal.

6. The essence of Aquapoint's case is that, by refusing its consent to Dr Fan's request, Genscript was simply exercising its legal power under the partnership agreement and that the prior assurances given to Dr Fan provided no basis on which the court could conclude that it was just and equitable to wind up Aquapoint.

7. At first instance, in a judgment dated 10 June 2022 Doyle J accepted Dr Fan's case and ordered Aquapoint to be wound up. For the reasons given in a judgment dated 4 October 2023 (Civil Appeal No 14 of 2022), the Court of Appeal (Goldring P, Field and Birt JJA) dismissed Aquapoint's appeal. Aquapoint appeals to the Board.

Facts

8. Genscript was founded in 2002 by Dr Zhang and others, including Ms Wang. The Genscript group operates in the biological and medical research sector. Its principal operations are in Nanjing and Zhenjiang in the People's Republic of China ("the PRC").

9. Dr Fan is a research scientist who carried out important work on cell therapy, immunology and cell biology as an employee of the Genscript group.

10. In 2014, Genscript launched a new project to develop novel cell therapies for the treatment of cancer and other purposes. Dr Fan accepted appointment as the project's chief scientific officer and, in that capacity, he was closely involved in the development of various therapies. In March 2016, he was with others responsible for the invention of a ground-breaking therapy for the treatment of multiple myeloma patients. It is common ground that he made a significant contribution to the success of the business.

11. In November 2014, Genscript formed Nanjing Legend Biotechnology Co Ltd ("Legend Nanjing") in the PRC as the vehicle for the new project and with a view to an IPO and listing of its shares.

12. As Doyle J recorded in his judgment at para 4, "Dr Zhang astutely recognised that Dr Fan could play a key role in significantly adding to the value of the business and wished to encourage him to remain within the business with the incentive of financial rewards". On 1 January 2016, Legend Nanjing, acting by Dr Zhang, and Dr Fan entered into an agreement ("the 2016 Agreement") under which Legend Nanjing agreed to grant Dr Fan a 10% shareholding in Legend Nanjing on terms that, prior to Legend Nanjing's IPO, he would not transfer the shares or create any security interest over them without Legend Nanjing's approval.

13. Later in 2016, Genscript established Legend Cayman as the intended listed vehicle for the Legend business. Genscript, acting by Dr Zhang and Ms Wang, proposed to Dr Fan that the 2016 Agreement should be terminated and that Dr Fan should become a limited partner in an ELP which would hold approximately 15% of the shares in Legend Cayman. Discussions and communications to this end began in July 2016.

14. Critical to the issues in this appeal are the assurances given to Dr Fan during these discussions. The assurances and their context were summarised by Field JA in his judgment (with which Sir John Goldring P and Birt JA agreed) at para 12:

> "When Dr Fan was approached with Dr Zhang's new strategy, his chief concern was that he should still be entitled after the IPO to be registered as the owner of 10% of the shares in the listing entity, as he had been under the 2016 Agreement in respect of 10% of the shares in Legend Nanjing. He made this very clear on several occasions to Ms Wang and Dr Zhang who both assured him that the 2016 Agreement would be 'rolled over' into the arrangement involving a Cayman ELP. Dr Fan relied on these assurances when signing the 2017 Agreement: he would not have signed the constituent agreements if the assurances had not been given. His interest in the partnership under the 2017 Agreement was the equivalent of 10% of the shares in Legend Cayman which was the same percentage he was promised in respect of the shares in Legend Nanjing. In the light of these matters the judge held that Dr Fan had a legitimate expectation and reasonable understanding that 6 months after the Legend Cayman IPO he would be entitled to have access to 10% of the shares in Legend Cayman."

15. The discussions were successfully concluded in May 2017. Aquapoint had been formed pursuant to an initial partnership agreement made on 16 February 2017 between Genscript as the general partner and a nominee company as the initial limited partner. On 25 May 2017, Dr Fan entered into a subscription agreement, pursuant to which he subscribed for a partnership interest in Aquapoint (representing 65.96% of the partnership interests) ("the Subscription Agreement"). Also on 25 May 2017, Genscript as general partner and Ms Wang and Dr Fan as newly admitted limited partners entered into an amended and restated limited partnership agreement ("the LPA"), and the initial limited partner withdrew from the partnership. On 9 June 2017, Dr Fan entered into a written acknowledgement of the termination of the 2016 Agreement. These agreements and acknowledgement are together referred to as "the 2017 Agreement" in this judgment and in the judgments of the courts below.

16. The assurances previously given to Dr Fan were repeated in early June 2017. For example, in WeChat exchanges with Dr Fan, Ms Wang said "The best news for you is that your stake in Nanjing Legend will be turned into shares in Cayman Legend" and "This agreement is not to change any material personal interests of yours. It's only intended to make the original agreement legitimate, and to create scope for future development".

17. The sole asset of Aquapoint was, in 2017, and remained, at the date of the Court of Appeal's judgment, its holding of 30,320,000 ordinary shares in Legend Biotech, representing 15.6% of its issued share capital in 2017.

18. In October 2017, Dr Fan paid RMB 2.5 million, the sum fixed by the 2016 Agreement, in respect of his underlying interest in 10% of the shares of Legend Cayman, of which RMB 2 million was reimbursed to him over a four-year period.

19. The shares of Legend Cayman were listed on the NASDAQ exchange on 5 June 2020. The listing documents stated that the existing shareholders of Legend Cayman, which of course included Aquapoint, agreed not to dispose of their shares in the six months after the listing.

20. The lock-up period following the listing expired in December 2020. What then happened is summarised by Field JA in para 15 of his judgment:

> "Following the end of the 6 month lock in period, Dr Fan informed Ms Wang and Dr Zhang that he wanted access to 10% of the Legend Cayman shares held by [Aquapoint]. He first suggested that ALP be dissolved to achieve this and was invited to serve a written request that his Legend Cayman shares be sold subject to the [general partner] exercising its discretion accordingly. He then proposed that 2 million Legend Cayman ADS [American Depositary Receipt] shares (equivalent to 20 million ordinary shares) be sold as an interim measure whilst the differences between him and Dr Zhang and Ms Wang were sorted out. At a meeting on 26 February 2021, Dr Zhang refused Dr Fan's sales plan, mentioning that maybe Dr Fan would be able to sell about 30,000 Legend Cayman ADS shares raising about US$ 1 million, which would have meant that it would have taken over 300 years for Dr Fan's total shares to be sold. Dr Zhang's declared reason for this response was that the company needed to raise funds and Dr Fan's sales plan would 'crash the stock price'. Dr Fan then asked Dr Zhang on 5 March 2021 for an offer to allow the sale of a reasonable amount of > his shares to which Dr Zhang responded the same day, stating that the Legend Cayman management team and board were only prepared to sell 200,000 ADS shares producing around $US4.5 million and this was a final offer. This offer Dr Fan accepted, but no steps were taken by [Genscript] to implement it. Instead, Dr Zhang let Dr Fan know that he had been instructed not to sell the shares. Following a chasing letter from Dr Fan's attorneys, Travers Thorp Alberga ('TTA'), [Aquapoint's] then attorneys, Dentons, stated in a letter dated 21 May 2021 that Dr Fan had not adopted the correct methodology for attempting to transfer his interest in the partnership and added that he could not be allowed to sell 10% of the Legend Cayman shares on account of the impact this would have on the share price. Five days later, by a letter dated 26 May 2021, Dentons, on behalf of [Aquapoint], offered to release 5% of the Legend Cayman shares held under Dr Fan's interest in the partnership followed by 3.5% every year thereafter but Dr Fan rejected this offer."

21. On 9 June 2021, Dr Fan presented his petition to wind up Aquapoint.

The 2017 Agreement

22. The legal relations between the partners in Aquapoint are governed by the 2017 Agreement (principally, the LPA) and by the ELP Act.

23. By clause 2 of the LPA, the parties acknowledged that Aquapoint was formed as an ELP and that "[e]xcept as otherwise expressly provided for herein, the rights and obligations of the Partners shall be as provided for in the [ELP Act]". The limitations on the liability and authority of the limited partners are set out in clause 3, while clause 4.1 gives to Genscript as the general partner "full power and authority to conduct, administer, manage, control and operate the Partnership Business".

24. Clause 7.1 provides for a capital account to be established in the partnership accounts for each partner's capital interest. Each capital account was to be initially equal to the relevant partner's capital contribution. The contributions agreed under the terms of the LPA were RMB 2.5 million for Dr Fan, RMB 1.25 million for Ms Wang and RMB 40,000 for Genscript, in each case to be paid in cash on or before 29 December 2017.

25. Clause 7.7 (headed "No Right of Withdrawal") is of central importance in this appeal. It provides:

> "No Limited Partner will be permitted to withdraw from the Partnership, or to withdraw any part of its Capital Account, save with the prior consent of the General Partner, which consent may be given or withheld for any reason (or no reason at all) in the sole and absolute discretion of the General Partner."

26. Clause 9 provides for the General Partner to distribute any partnership assets which it does not, in its discretion, consider to be necessary to the operation of the partnership, at the time or times determined by the General Partner. Any distribution is to be made to the partners pro rata to their respective interests as determined by reference to their capital contribution.

27. Clause 12.11 is an entire agreement clause which provides, among other things, that the LPA "cancels and supersedes any prior understandings and agreements between the parties with respect to such subject matter." It goes on to provide that:

> "There are no representations, warranties, terms, conditions, undertakings or collateral agreements, express, implied or statutory, between the parties with respect to the subject matter of this Agreement other than those expressly set forth in this Agreement and/or the other documents required to be delivered pursuant to such agreements."

28. By the Subscription Agreement, Dr Fan agreed to pay RMB 2.5 million to Aquapoint as a capital contribution and agreed to be bound by all the terms and provisions of the LPA.

29. Clause 5 of the Subscription Agreement provides:

> "To induce the Partnership to accept this subscription, the Subscriber hereby makes the following representations, warranties and covenants to the General Partner, the Partnership and counsel to the Partnership: […]
> (e) in formulating a decision to invest in the Partnership, the Subscriber has not relied or acted on the basis of any representation or other information purported to be given on behalf of the Partnership or the General Partner except as set forth in the Partnership Agreement (it being understood that no person has been authorised by the Partnership or the General > Partner to furnish any such representation or other information)."

30. Clause 7 of the Subscription Agreement provides:

> "The Subscriber hereby represents and warrants to the General Partner and the Partnership as follows: […]
>
> (b) the Subscriber has reviewed and understands the Partnership Agreement and this Subscription Agreement […]
>
> (c) the Subscriber acknowledges and agrees that, except as set forth in the Partnership Agreement, this Subscription Agreement or an additional written document (executed by a director or officer of the General Partner) which clearly and explicitly indicates that the Subscriber is entitled to rely thereon, the Subscriber has neither received, nor is entitled to rely upon, any representations or warranties from the Partnership, the General Partner, or any partner, member, director, officer, employee or agent thereof […]
> (d) the Subscriber is aware that except as provided in the Partnership Agreement, the Subscriber will have no right to withdraw from the Partnership or to receive distributions in liquidation of the Partnership Interest […]."

31. By clause 7(g), Dr Fan also represents and warrants that he had sought independent legal and other advice to the extent that he deemed necessary or appropriate. He did not in fact seek legal advice because, as Doyle J found, he trusted Dr Zhang and Ms Wang.

The ELP Act

32. The ELP Act has been amended and republished in revised form a number of times since its enactment. The 2021 revision applies to the present proceedings. An ELP may be formed for any lawful purpose to be undertaken in or from within the Cayman Islands or elsewhere, but it may not undertake business with the public in the Islands save as necessary for its business outside the Islands (section 4(1)).

33. An ELP does not have separate legal personality but is a form of partnership. To constitute an ELP, it must be registered with the Registrar of Companies. As earlier noted (see para 2 above), an ELP must include at least one general partner and at least one limited partner. A general partner is liable for all the debts and liabilities of an ELP to the extent of any deficit of assets and is responsible for the conduct and management of the business of the ELP, while a limited partner is normally liable only to the extent provided in the partnership agreement (section 4(2)). A limited partner is not permitted to take part in the conduct of the business and loses its limited liability status if it does so (sections 14(1) and 20(1)).

34. Section 3 of the ELP Act provides:

> "The rules of equity and of common law applicable to partnerships as modified by the Partnership Act (2013 Revision) but excluding sections 31, 45 to 54 and 56 to 57 shall apply to an exempted limited partnership, except where they are inconsistent with the express provisions of this Act."

35. Section 19 provides:

> (2) Subject to any express provisions of the partnership agreement to the contrary, a limited partner of an exempted limited partnership in that capacity does not owe any fiduciary duty in exercising any of its rights or authorities or otherwise in performing any of its obligations under the partnership agreement to the exempted limited partnership or any other partner".

36. Section 36 makes provision for the winding-up of an ELP, to which the provisions in the Companies Act and the Companies Winding Up Rules apply with modifications necessary for the different status of an ELP and subject to any special rules that may be made by the insolvency rules committee. A limited partner is treated as if it were a shareholder and a general partner is treated as if it were a director.

37. Of particular relevance to this appeal is section 36(3)(g) which provides:

> "(3) …the provisions of Part 5 of the Companies Act …shall apply to the winding up of an exempted limited partnership and for this purpose – […]
> (g) on application by a partner, creditor or liquidator, the court may make orders and give directions for the winding up and dissolution of an exempted limited partnership as may be just and equitable."

38. Part 5 of the Companies Act contains the provisions for the winding up of companies. Section 92(e) provides that a company may be wound up by the court if "(e) the Court is of the opinion that it is just and equitable that the company should be wound up".

The judgments below

39. The facts on which Dr Fan relied for his case that it was just and equitable to wind up Aquapoint were essentially those summarised above. He had been assured by Dr Zhang and Ms Wang on behalf of Genscript that he would be entitled to receive a 10% shareholding in Legend Cayman, notwithstanding the termination of the 2016 Agreement and the formation of Aquapoint. He had relied on these assurances in entering into the 2017 Agreement, but Genscript had then used its legal power under the LPA to prevent him from withdrawing from Aquapoint and receiving the 10% shareholding in Legend Cayman. His case was that it was those facts, seen in their context, which made it just and equitable to wind up Aquapoint. Having heard oral evidence from Dr Fan, Dr Zhang and Ms Wang, Doyle J found that the assurances alleged by Dr Fan had been given and that he relied on them in entering into the 2017 Agreement and becoming a limited partner in Aquapoint. There was no appeal against those findings.

40. As identified by the Court of Appeal, there were four grounds on which Doyle J held that it was just and equitable to wind up Aquapoint.

41. The first ground was that, as a consequence of the assurances which Dr Fan received from Dr Zhang and Ms Wang which induced him to agree to the termination of the 2016 Agreement and to enter into the 2017 Agreement and become a limited partner in Aquapoint, "the relationship between Dr Fan and Dr Zhang was sufficiently akin to partnership of the sort contemplated by Lord Wilberforce in [Ebrahimi v Westbourne Galleries Ltd [1973] AC 360 ("Westbourne Galleries")] for the assurances to be of a character arising between one individual and another that made it inequitable for [Genscript] to insist on a claimed entitlement to refuse to agree to Dr Fan's request to have 10% of the Legend Cayman shares transferred to him" (para 63 of Field JA's judgment). The Court of Appeal upheld this ground. Reliance by Genscript on the entire agreement clause in the LPA and the provisions of the Subscription Agreement whereby Dr Fan agreed that he was not relying on any representations to become a limited partner in Aquapoint was "inconsistent with the free-standing duty to act in good faith which I find to be engaged in respect to the assurances, the honouring of which is a matter that I find affected the conscience of [Genscript]" (para 66 of Field JA's judgment).

42. The second ground, which the Court of Appeal did not uphold, was that the relationship between the partners was one of mutual trust and confidence which, as a result of Genscript's refusal to consent to Dr Fan's withdrawal, had irretrievably broken down. Giving the judgment of the Board in Lau v Chu [2020] UKPC 24, [2020] 1 WLR 4656, Lord Briggs said at para 15 that "where the company is a corporate quasi-partnership, an irretrievable breakdown in trust and confidence between participating members may justify a just and equitable winding up" (emphasis added). Dr Fan was a limited partner in Aquapoint who was therefore prohibited from taking part in the conduct of its business. Relying on what Lord Briggs had said, Field JA said at para 71 "I find myself constrained to conclude that in respect of this second winding up ground, Dr Fan had to establish that he was a participant in running the business of [Aquapoint] which was a condition that on the evidence he was never going to be able to satisfy".

43. The third ground, which was upheld by the Court of Appeal, was that Dr Fan had justifiably lost trust and confidence in the conduct and management of Aquapoint's affairs as a result of Genscript's failure to honour the assurances given to Dr Fan.

44. The fourth ground, also upheld by the Court of Appeal, was that Genscript was in breach of its duty to act in good faith and to avoid conflicts of interest when it refused its consent to Dr Fan's withdrawal from Aquapoint. While agreeing with Doyle J's conclusion on this ground, Field JA pointed out at para 75 of his judgment that "this conclusion is dependent on the judge's finding that [Genscript] frustrated Dr Fan's legitimate expectation that [Genscript] would transfer into his ownership 10% of the Legend Cayman shares contrary to the good faith duty it owed in regard to the assurances" so that in substance and form the first and fourth grounds duplicated each other.

Jurisdiction to wind up an ELP on the just and equitable ground

45. While it is not in doubt that the court has jurisdiction to wind up an ELP on the ground that it is just and equitable to do so, there appears to have been some uncertainty as to the statutory provision under which this power arises. Doyle J noted at para 157 of his judgment that there had been a debate in cases at first instance as to whether the jurisdiction arose under section 35(e) of the Partnership Act, as applied by section 3 of the ELP Act, or under section 92(e) of the Companies Act, as applied by section 36(3) of the ELP Act. As it was common ground that the court had jurisdiction to wind up an ELP if it was just and equitable to do so, he considered that it was unnecessary to enter into the debate. The Court of Appeal considered it inappropriate to decide the issue in the absence of submissions on it.

46. The Board has likewise received no submissions on this point, which is of no significance to the parties given their common position that the court has power to wind up an ELP on the grounds that it is just and equitable to do so. It is perhaps less than satisfactory that a court should make orders while being uncertain of the source of its power to do so. While acknowledging that it has received no submissions on the point, the Board's present view is that the power arises simply under section 36(3)(g) of the ELP. An ELP is a special form of partnership created by the ELP Act. The primary source of legal provision for the nature and attributes of an ELP, and the court's jurisdiction in relation to an ELP, is the ELP Act. Section 36(3)(g) provides in terms that "on an application by a partner …, the court may make orders …for the winding up and dissolution of an exempted limited partnership as may be just and equitable". There would not seem to be any need to look further for the court's jurisdiction to wind up an ELP on the just and equitable ground.

47. As regards the principles to be applied in deciding whether it is just and equitable to order the winding up of an ELP, the submissions of both parties before the courts below, and before the Board, have been made on the basis that the principles developed in relation to the winding up of companies by UK and Commonwealth courts, including the Board, apply. In a "closing observation" at the end of his judgment, Field JA drew attention to the marked differences between an ordinary partnership governed by the Partnership Act, an ELP, and a company incorporated under the Companies Act. He said that he would have been interested to hear argument as to whether "just and equitable" in section 36(3)(g) of the ELP Act "was to be construed in an expansive and flexible way, taking full account of the special nature of an ELP and less account of the overseas jurisprudence".

48. Neither party took up this invitation before the Board and both proceeded, as they had below, to argue the case on the basis of the principles established in the authorities as regards the winding up of companies. Field JA was right to draw attention to the special characteristics of an ELP, which differentiate it from both an ordinary partnership and a registered company. Unlike partners in an ordinary partnership, limited partners in that capacity do not owe fiduciary duties (section 20(2)) and a general partner's duty to act in the interests of the ELP is subject to any express provisions of the partnership agreement to the contrary. The nature of a limited partner's interest has a good deal in common with that of a shareholder in a company, but nonetheless an ELP is not a separate legal person and the property and rights of an ELP are held on trust "as an asset of the exempted limited partnership in accordance with the terms of the partnership agreement", such that limited partners have a proprietary interest in the partnership assets.

49. Like the Court of Appeal, the Board will apply the principles applicable to the jurisdiction to wind up a company on the just and equitable ground. On the facts of this case, it does not appear to the Board to be wrong to do so. Given the status of an ELP as a type of partnership, as opposed to a registered company, it appears to the Board to be highly unlikely that the principles would be less generous to a petitioning partner in an ELP than to a petitioning shareholder of a company.

Winding up a company on the just and equitable ground: general principles

50. Companies registered under companies legislation are creatures of statute and so the power to bring them to an end by winding up and the circumstances in which this can be achieved are necessarily matters for statutory provision. In the United Kingdom, the power of the court to wind up a company on the grounds that it is just and equitable to do so has been included in legislation since the mid-19th century, starting with the Joint Stock Companies Winding Up Act 1848. It has likewise appeared, and continues to do so, in many other jurisdictions, including the Cayman Islands. There has likewise developed a uniformity of approach to the interpretation and application of this power.

51. The analysis of the just and equitable ground for winding up by Lord Wilberforce in his speech in Westbourne Galleries, a decision of the House of Lords, has proved to be of central and enduring importance. Lord Wilberforce's approach was endorsed by the House of Lords in O'Neill v Phillips [1999] 1 WLR 1092 and applied to petitions for relief in respect of unfairly prejudicial conduct in the affairs of a company under what is now section 994 of the Companies Act 2006.

52. It is appropriate to quote extensively from Lord Wilberforce's speech but before doing so, it is helpful to set out a passage from the judgment of Smith J in the Australian case of In re Wondoflex Textiles Pty Ltd [1951] VLR 458 at 467, which Lord Wilberforce quoted:

> "It is also true, I think, that, generally speaking, a petition for winding up, based upon the partnership analogy, cannot succeed if what is complained of is merely a valid exercise of powers conferred in terms by the articles: ... To hold otherwise would enable a member to be relieved from the consequences of a bargain knowingly entered into by him: . . . But this, I think, is subject to an important qualification. Acts which, in law, are a valid exercise of powers conferred by the articles may nevertheless be entirely outside what can fairly be regarded as having been in the contemplation of the parties when they became members of the company; and in such cases the fact that what has been done is not in excess of power will not > necessarily be an answer to a claim for winding up. Indeed, it may be said that one purpose of [the just and equitable provision] is to enable the court to relieve a party from his bargain in such cases."

53. In Westbourne Galleries, Lord Wilberforce said at pp 374H: "there has been a tendency to create categories or headings under which cases must be brought if the clause [ie the power to wind up a company on the just and equitable ground] is to apply. This is wrong. Illustrations may be used, but general words should remain general and not be reduced to the sum of particular instances".

54. Having reviewed earlier authorities, none of which was a decision of the House of Lords, Lord Wilberforce said at p 378 that those cases amount to "a considerable body of authority in favour of the use of the just and equitable provision in a wide variety of situations, including those of expulsion from office" (that being the principal ground on which the petitioner relied in Westbourne Galleries) and then said at pp 379-380 in a celebrated passage:

> "My Lords, in my opinion these authorities represent a sound and rational development of the law which should be endorsed. The foundation of it all lies in the words 'just and equitable' and, if there is any respect in which some of the cases may be open to criticism, it is that the courts may sometimes have been too timorous in giving them full force. The words are a recognition of the fact that a limited company is more than a mere legal entity, with a personality in law of its own: that there is room in company law for recognition of the fact that behind it, or amongst it, there are individuals, with rights, expectations and obligations inter se which are not necessarily submerged in the company structure. That structure is defined by the Companies Act and by the articles of association by which shareholders agree to be bound. In most companies and in most contexts, this definition is sufficient and exhaustive, equally so whether the company is large or small. The 'just and equitable' provision does not, as the respondents suggest, entitle one party to disregard the obligation he assumes by entering a company, nor the court to dispense him from it. It does, as equity always does, enable the court to subject the exercise of legal rights to equitable considerations; considerations, that is, of a personal character arising between one individual and another, which may make it unjust, or inequitable, to insist on legal rights, or to exercise them in a particular way.

> It would be impossible, and wholly undesirable, to define the circumstances in which these considerations may arise. Certainly the fact that a company is a small one, or a private company, is not enough. There are very many of these where the association is a purely commercial one, of which it can safely be said that the basis of association is adequately and exhaustively laid down in the articles. The superimposition of equitable considerations requires something more, which typically may include one, or probably more, of the following elements: (i) an association formed or continued on the basis of a personal relationship, involving mutual confidence—this element will often be found where a pre-existing partnership has been converted into a limited company; (ii) an agreement, or understanding, that all, or some (for there may be 'sleeping' members), of the shareholders shall participate in the conduct of the business; (iii) restriction upon the transfer of the members' interest in the company—so that if confidence is lost, or one member is removed from management, he cannot take out his stake and go elsewhere.
> It is these, and analogous, factors which may bring into play the just and equitable clause, and they do so directly, through the force of the words themselves. To refer, as so many of the cases do, to 'quasi-partnerships' or 'in substance partnerships' may be convenient but may also be confusing. It may be convenient because it is the law of partnership which has developed the conceptions of probity, good faith and mutual confidence, and the remedies where these are absent, which become relevant once such factors as I have mentioned are found to exist: the words 'just and equitable' sum these up in the law of partnership itself. And in many, but not necessarily all, cases there has been a pre-existing partnership the obligations of which it is reasonable to suppose continue to underlie the new company structure. But the expressions may be confusing if they obscure, or deny, the fact that the parties (possibly former partners) are now co-members in a company, who have accepted, in law, new obligations. A company, however small, however domestic, is a company not a partnership or even a quasi-partnership and it is through the just and equitable clause that obligations, common to partnership relations, may come in."

55. In O'Neill v Phillips, Lord Hoffmann giving the only reasoned speech drew a direct parallel between the concept of unfair prejudice in a company context and Lord Wilberforce's approach to the just and equitable ground for winding-up. The parallel was "in the principles upon which [the court] decides that the conduct is unjust, inequitable or unfair" (p 1100).

56. Lord Hoffmann said at p 1098 that Parliament had chosen fairness as the criterion for relief "to free the court from technical considerations of legal right and to confer a wide power to do what appeared just and equitable". At the same time, this was not an unfettered power but one which must be used having regard to the particular context and background, which had two features identified by Lord Hoffmann at pp 1098-1099:

> "First, a company is an association of persons for an economic purpose, usually entered into with legal advice and some degree of formality. The terms of the association are contained in the articles of association and sometimes in collateral agreements between the shareholders. Thus the manner in which the affairs of the company may be conducted is closely regulated by rules to which the shareholders have agreed. Secondly, company law has developed seamlessly from the law of partnership, which was treated by equity, like the Roman societas, as a contract of good faith. One of the traditional roles of equity, as a separate jurisdiction, was to restrain the exercise of strict legal rights in certain relationships in which it considered that this would be contrary to good faith. These principles have, with appropriate modification, been carried over into company law.
> The first of these two features leads to the conclusion that a member of a company will not ordinarily be entitled to complain of unfairness unless there has been some breach of the terms on which he agreed that the affairs of the company should be conducted. But the second leads to the conclusion that there will be cases in which equitable considerations make it unfair for those conducting the affairs of the company to rely upon their strict legal powers. Thus unfairness may consist in a breach of the rules or in using the rules in a manner which equity would regard as contrary to good faith."

57. There are a number of important points of direct relevance to the present appeal which emerge from the speeches of Lord Wilberforce and Lord Hoffmann:

(i) The choice of "just and equitable" as a ground for a winding-up order is a deliberate choice to introduce equitable principles into what is an essentially statutory scheme.

(ii) It was natural for Parliament to introduce these principles, given that company law was a development from the law of partnership under which dissolution would be ordered where it was just and equitable to do so.

(iii) The application of equitable principles is not subject to a scheme of categories into which a particular case must fall. As Lord Scarman said in the context of the power to grant injunctions, "the width and flexibility of equity are not to be undermined by categorisation": Castanho v Brown & Root (UK) Ltd [1981] AC 557 at 573, quoted in Wolverhampton City Council v London Gypsies and Travellers [2024] AC 983 at para 21. Lord Wilberforce could not have been clearer on this: "It would be impossible, and wholly undesirable, to define the circumstances in which these considerations may arise" (p 379E).

(iv) In particular, the relevant circumstances are not restricted to cases where the parties have previously been in partnership or where the arrangement between the parties is in effect a partnership in corporate form (a so-called "quasi-partnership"). Consistently with what he said in the passage quoted in sub-para (iii) above, Lord Wilberforce was careful to say in the same paragraph, when identifying three particular characteristics which might bring equitable considerations into play, that they were typical, not exclusive.

(v) The role of equity is more general. It is, as it always is, to enable the court "to subject the exercise of legal rights to equitable considerations; considerations, that is, of a personal character arising between one individual and another, which may make it unjust, or inequitable, to insist on legal rights, or to exercise them in a particular way".

(vi) At the same time, the commercial context and the fact that the parties have become shareholders in a company, governed by the companies legislation and by the articles of association by which they agree to be bound, means that in the great majority of cases the legislation, articles and any other agreements binding the shareholders will be a sufficient and exhaustive statement of their rights and expectations. As Lord Hoffmann said in O'Neill v Phillips at pp 1098-1099: "a member of a company will not ordinarily be entitled to complain of unfairness unless there has been some breach of the terms on which he agreed that the affairs of the company should be conducted".

The present appeal

58. As earlier stated, Field JA identified four distinct grounds on which Doyle J had found that it was just and equitable to wind up Aquapoint. In truth, however, they boil down to one ground: in the light of the assurances given to Dr Fan to induce him to give up his rights as regards shares in Legend Nanjing and to become a limited partner in Aquapoint, Genscript was not entitled to exercise its power under the LPA to refuse consent to Dr Fan's request for the shares in Legend Cayman attributable to his interest in Aquapoint.

59. The attempt to separate this single ground into four separate grounds reflects the tendency of practitioners and courts to try to slot cases into categories, despite Lord Wilberforce's warning not to do so. Different catchphrases are used for this purpose – "quasi-partnership", "legitimate expectations", "a loss of mutual trust and confidence". Correctly understood and applied, these phrases may have some value but they must not disguise that, in cases like the present, the court's task is to conclude whether, on the facts and circumstances of the particular case (which do not involve breaches of the law or the articles of association or other contracts, when different considerations apply), there exist "considerations…of a personal character arising between one individual and another, which may make it unjust, or inequitable, to insist on legal rights, or to exercise them in a particular way" (Westbourne Galleries at p 379 per Lord Wilberforce).

60. The broad submission of Aquapoint is that where parties have expressly regulated their relationship in relation to the matter about which complaint is made, it is the contract which governs the relationship and any complaint must be adjudicated in accordance with the law of contract. It is not suggested by Dr Fan that there was any invalidity or flaw in the 2017 Agreement or specifically in clause 7.7 of the LPA. Assuming the contract to be valid and enforceable, it is not the proper role of the just and equitable winding up jurisdiction to ameliorate or change the effect of the contract. The decisions of the courts below to the contrary are wrong as a matter of principle and are unsupported by the authorities. Aquapoint notes that countless parties across all jurisdictions hold investments or business operations through a company or partnership in which the participants' relationships are governed by carefully drafted articles of association, shareholders' agreements and partnership agreements. It submits that the reasoning of the courts below would undermine the certainty essential to the operation of such arrangements in a commercial context by enabling a party to seek to rely on some other matter as giving rise to alleged unfairness and as justifying a winding up order, even though no remedy was available under the law of contract. In particular, it submitted that it would undermine the attraction of establishing and investing in ELPs, contrary to the interests of the Cayman Islands' economy.

61. As the judgment of Lord Wilberforce in Westbourne Galleries at p 379C and of Lord Hoffmann in O'Neill v Phillips at pp 1098-1099 make clear, this broad submission is correct in the great majority of cases. However, contrary to the dire predictions advanced on behalf of Aquapoint, the decisions of the courts below do not pose a widespread threat to certainty in the establishment and operation of commercial concerns. A similar submission by the respondents in Westbourne Galleries did not deter Lord Wilberforce and the other members of the House of Lords: see [1973] AC 360 at 369D. In particular, whether or not the facts of this case justify the winding up of Aquapoint, those facts are very unusual and similar facts are highly unlikely to arise in the case of the vast majority of ELPs.

62. As Lord Hoffmann said in O'Neill v Phillips and as Lord Wilberforce explained in Westbourne Galleries, Aquapoint's broad submission is not invariably correct. The articles of association in the latter case permitted the shareholders by a majority vote to remove a director. That was a valid provision, and it was not suggested that the majority shareholders had acted in breach of their rights under the articles in removing Mr Ebrahimi as a director or that any remedy lay against them or the company under the law of contract. Nonetheless, the particular circumstances of the personal relationship between the shareholders meant that the exercise of that undoubted legal right was subject to equitable restraints.

63. Mr Smith KC on behalf of Aquapoint sought to distinguish the relevant article in Westbourne Galleries from clause 7.7 of the LPA on the grounds that the latter expressly provided that the prior consent of Genscript was required to a withdrawal from the partnership which could be withheld for any reason (or no reason) in Genscript's sole and absolute discretion, whereas in Westbourne Galleries the articles simply provided that a director could be removed from office by an ordinary resolution of the shareholders. He submitted that the articles of association in Westbourne Galleries did not deal with the unspoken understanding that Mr Ebrahimi would remain a director involved in the management of the company, whereas the LPA in the present case was inconsistent with any understanding that Dr Fan would be entitled to withdraw a 10% shareholding in Legend Cayman from Aquapoint.

64. The Board does not accept this suggested distinction. The right of a shareholder to cast a vote on a resolution, including a resolution to remove a director, is a personal right which is not generally subject to any restriction. The exercise of a shareholder's right to vote is, as a matter of law, in the sole and absolute discretion of the shareholder and it may be exercised for any reason or for no reason. There is no need to spell this out in the articles. By contrast, clause 7.7 conferred a power on Genscript which it was required by section 19 of the ELP Act to exercise in good faith and, subject to any express provisions of the LPA, in the interests of Aquapoint. Section 19 permits a relaxation of a general partner's fiduciary obligations but only as expressly provided in the partnership agreement. The relaxation as regards Genscript's power to give or withhold consent to a withdrawal of a partner was therefore required to be expressly stated in the LPA. The effect of clause 7.7 was not, as Mr Smith submitted, to distinguish it from a shareholder's right to vote to remove a director but to put the power under clause 7.7, to some extent, on the same footing as a shareholder's right to vote by freeing it from a restriction otherwise imposed by section 19.

65. It follows that the Board does not accept Mr Smith's associated submission that where a contractual provision "covers the field", there is no room for the imposition of equitable considerations. If covering the field meant that, in the light of all the relevant circumstances, there was no room for any equitable considerations, the submission would be unexceptionable. But Mr Smith had a narrower meaning in mind, one which confined the inquiry to the construction of the contractual provisions. As the Board has already noted, the terms of the contractual provisions will be a highly relevant factor, but they cannot alone demonstrate that there is no room for equitable considerations, as Westbourne Galleries shows.

66. Aquapoint submitted that the approach taken in Westbourne Galleries was not applicable to the present case because, on a true analysis, it stands as authority for the proposition that, in the case of a quasi-partnership company, where the understanding or expectations that give rise to the petitioner's complaint are not dealt with in the company's constitutional documents, the exercise by a party of a right under the constitution may be subject to equitable restraint to give effect to the undocumented understanding or expectation. However, where the parties have negotiated a tailor-made contract governing their relations in the company, the just and equitable winding up jurisdiction does not permit the court to disregard the parties' agreement.

67. This submission seeks to draw two distinctions between the present case and the principles stated by Lord Wilberforce. First, it is said that the principles apply only in the case of a "quasi-partnership company". This point is addressed below.

68. Secondly, the parties in Westbourne Galleries had adopted standard form Table A articles without any apparent negotiation, whereas the LPA is a tailor-made agreement which was negotiated over several months by the parties. Mr Smith stressed that not only does clause 7.7 of the LPA specifically deal with the withdrawal of a limited partner but clause 12.11 of the LPA and clauses 5 and 7 of the Subscription Agreement ("the entire agreement clauses") clearly provide that the LPA and associated documents constitute the entire agreement between parties with respect to the subject matter of the LPA, that they cancel and supersede any prior understandings and agreements and that the parties have not relied on any representations, warranties or undertakings, express or implied, outside the terms of the agreements. The Board accepts that this is a relevant factor when considering whether equitable principles come into play, but it cannot be a decisive factor. On the facts of a particular case, it may be correct to conclude that the negotiation of a specific agreement did not exclude equitable considerations.

69. Aquapoint relied on a number of authorities which illustrate the importance of specifically negotiated and detailed agreements between the parties in deciding whether there was any room for the existence (or continued existence) of equitable considerations applicable to the exercise of legal powers, whether arising under those agreements or otherwise.

70. In particular, Mr Smith relied on In re Virginia Solution SPC Ltd (CICA (Civil) Appeal No 4 of 2022) (unreported) 28 July 2023 ("Re Virginia Solution"), a decision of the Court of Appeal of the Cayman Islands (Sir John Goldring P, Martin and Moses JJA). Virginia Solution SPC Ltd ("Virginia Solution") was a Cayman Islands company with two shareholders, Augusta Healthcare Inc ("Augusta") and Valley Health System ("Valley"), both of which were described in the judgment of Martin JA as "regional community health systems operating in the State of Virginia in the United States". They, together with three other healthcare providers based in Virginia, established Virginia Solution in 2004 to provide insurance cover for the shareholders. The principles governing the operation of Virginia Solution were discussed and developed by the five shareholders over the next few years. In 2009, the parties agreed a participation agreement, a dividend policy and revised articles of association ("the 2009 documents"). From 2014, the only shareholders were Augusta and Valley and thereafter a series of amendments to the participation agreement were made. By the end of 2016, the retained profits of Virginia Solution amounted to over US$24 million. Augusta and Valley disagreed as to the amount of dividends that should be paid in 2017. Attempts to resolve these differences failed and in January 2020 Valley presented a petition to wind up Virginia Solution on the just and equitable ground on the basis that Augusta had refused to agree to the payment of dividends in accordance with the dividend policy.

71. In refusing to agree the payment of dividends on the basis of the dividend policy, Augusta was not acting in breach of any legal obligation. The issue was therefore whether, on the facts, there existed equitable considerations affecting the exercise of its legal rights. The trial judge found that at inception the relationship between the shareholders was a "quasi-partnership" in the sense that the exercise of legal rights was subject to equitable considerations. The Court of Appeal held that she was entitled to make that finding, although as Martin JA observed at para 45 the circumstances of the company and its shareholders did not come close to the paradigm case for the intervention of equitable principles. However, the Court of Appeal held that the position changed in 2008-2009 when the founding members decided to record the basis of their participation in the 2009 documents. Martin JA said at para 46:

> "The context of those documents was the impending arrival of a new member; and the inevitable inference is that the existing members recognised that the informal arrangements which had previously governed their participation could not safely continue, even if the new member or subsequent members agreed to subscribe to the underlying ethos adopted by the founding members."

72. Martin JA identified the participation agreement as the key document. It was expressed to prevail in the case of conflict with the articles, and it contained an arbitration clause and an entire agreement clause. It provided that the declaration of dividends was to be the province of the board of directors. He said at para 48 that "it defined comprehensively the obligations of the members and the company and provided a remedy for any failure to meet those obligations …there was no scope for the superimposition of equitable considerations".

73. There are numerous other cases in which the existence of particular contractual arrangements have been held to be inconsistent with the possibility of equitable considerations either arising at all or continuing in place: see, for example, Third v North East Ice & Cold Storage Co Ltd [1998] BCC 242, In re Coroin Ltd [2012] EWHC 2343 (Ch), [2013] 2 BCLC 583, In re Migration Solutions Holdings Ltd [2016] EWHC 523 (Ch) and Cool Seas (Seafoods) Ltd v Interfish Ltd [2018] EWHC 2038 (Ch).

74. The Board regards it as important to acknowledge and repeat that, in a corporate context, equitable considerations as regards the exercise of legal rights will not generally apply, but nonetheless whether they do apply and the relevance of contractual arrangements between the parties are to be decided on the facts and circumstances of the case.

75. The critical fact in the present case is that the very arrangements on which Aquapoint relies to say that there is no room for equitable considerations – the 2017 Agreement – were entered into by the parties on the basis of the assurances given by Dr Zhang and Ms Wang that Dr Fan's unqualified entitlement to receive a 10% shareholding in the Legend vehicle (Legend Cayman in place of Legend Nanjing) would not be affected by the terms of the 2017 Agreement. That was the agreed basis on which the parties entered into the 2017 Agreement. It is wholly inconsistent with the facts, as found by the judge, to suggest that, by virtue of the terms of the 2017 Agreement including the entire agreement clauses, Dr Fan and the other parties were agreeing that Dr Fan's entitlement to a 10% shareholding was cancelled and that Genscript was entitled to refuse consent to his withdrawal from Aquapoint without regard to the assurances which he had been given. It may well be that, as a matter of contract law, the entire agreement clauses prevented Dr Fan from placing reliance on the assurances – the Board is not concerned to decide that question but will assume that it is correct – but that does not oust the jurisdiction of the court to make a winding up order on the just and equitable ground if the circumstances of the case are such as to bring equitable considerations into play. Contractual provisions of this sort are highly relevant to the issue whether those considerations do come into play, but they are not decisive.

76. It is relevant to mention that no new partners were admitted to Aquapoint after the 2017 Agreement was made and, although it made provision for the admission of new partners, there is no evidence that the admission of new partners was contemplated, in contrast to the position in Re Virginia Solution. The admission of new partners without knowledge of the assurances given by Dr Zhang and Ms Wang would clearly be a relevant factor, although not always decisive: see, for example, In re Edwardian Group Ltd [2018]

EWHC 1715, [2019] 1 BCLC 171 at para 157, and at paras 133-134 (commenting on Fisher v Cadman [2005] EWHC 377 (Ch), [2006] 1 BCLC 499).

77. Turning to the "quasi-partnership" issue raised by Mr Smith as a basis for his submission that the approach in Westbourne Galleries does not apply to the present case, this raises a central issue as to the circumstances in which the exercise of legal rights may be subject to equitable considerations for the purposes of the winding up jurisdiction.

78. Mr Smith submitted that Westbourne Galleries requires the court to find that a quasi-partnership exists among the participants, which in turn requires the court to find that the three indicia (or something close to them) identified by Lord Wilberforce at p 379F-G (quoted in para 54 above) are present. Of those indicia, Mr Smith submitted that only the third (restrictions on the transfer of members' interests) was present. That, he correctly submitted, could not be sufficient on its own to bring equitable considerations into play, because very large numbers of private companies have such restrictions with no basis for suggesting that they constitute "quasi-partnerships".

79. The fundamental flaw, in the Board's view, with Mr Smith's submission is his treatment of a finding of a "quasi-partnership" as essential to the application of equitable considerations to the exercise of legal rights. The Board has noted above in para 57 that Lord Wilberforce was careful not to restrict the application of equitable considerations to "quasi-partnerships".

80. It is in the Board's view a misreading of Lord Wilberforce's speech to treat the existence of a "quasi-partnership" as essential to the application of equitable considerations to the exercise of legal rights. On the contrary, it is clear from his speech that he gave the indicia of a quasi-partnership as examples, albeit common ones, of the circumstances in which equitable considerations will be applied.

81. The fundamental principle that Lord Wilberforce was applying was that the just and equitable provision enables the court "as equity always does" to subject the exercise of legal rights to considerations "of a personal character arising between one individual and another". This requires a close examination of the relationship between the individuals which led to or provides the context for their association as shareholders (or as partners in an ELP).

82. On the facts of the present case, the Board considers that Doyle J was fully entitled to conclude that the relationship between Dr Fan, Dr Zhang and Ms Wang was a personal relationship of a type that brings equitable considerations into play, and that the Court of Appeal was right to uphold his decision. Dr Fan was a highly respected research scientist who had worked for some years at a senior level in the Genscript group, itself controlled by Dr Zhang. From that sprang the Legend project in which Dr Fan was to (and did) play a key role on the basis of an agreement with Genscript that he would be entitled to a 10% shareholding in the listed Legend company. When Dr Zhang wanted to use Legend Cayman in place of Legend Nanjing as the corporate vehicle for the listing of Legend shares, he and Ms Wang gave the assurances to Dr Fan.

83. It is understandable that parties, in formulating their cases in petitions for a winding up order on the just and equitable ground, have tended to focus their attention on the features which may go to make a "quasi-partnership". It is in such cases that the application of equitable considerations will most commonly arise. But "quasi-partnership" is itself a term of somewhat uncertain scope, and it is certainly not a term of art. In particular, the vice in focusing solely on "quasi-partnerships" is that it leads wrongly to the view that equitable considerations can only apply in those cases where it was agreed or understood that the petitioner would participate in the conduct of the business and that a winding up order is appropriate only where the petitioner has been excluded from participation in the business. Courts have made it clear over the years since Westbourne Galleries (see, for example, Fisher v Cadman at para 84) that this view is erroneous but the point has not always been heeded.

84. In the present case, it is unnecessary to decide whether the relationship between the general and limited partners of Aquapoint had the characteristics typical of a "quasi-partnership", but it appears to the Board that it did not have those characteristics. It was simply a passive vehicle for holding shares in Legend Cayman and there was, for example, no agreement or understanding that any partner other than Genscript would participate in the conduct of the business, such as it was. A restriction on the transfer of partners' interests could not by itself suffice. But, as emphasised above, a finding of a "quasi-partnership" is an example, not a definition, of the circumstances in which equitable considerations may come into play.

Availability of alternative remedies

85. It is well established that the court may, and usually will, refuse to make a winding up order on a shareholder's petition where one or more alternative remedies are available to the petitioner and the petitioner is acting unreasonably in not pursuing them.

86. Aquapoint submit that there are two alternative remedies available to Dr Fan.

87. First, it is said that Dr Fan could issue proceedings for breach of contract. This is a surprising submission, in view of Aquapoint's fundamental position that there has been no breach of contract. Aquapoint may well be, indeed probably is, right about that. It follows that such proceedings are not a reasonable alternative remedy.

88. Second, it is said that Dr Fan could bring a derivative action on behalf of Aquapoint against Genscript for breach of its duty of good faith under section 19(1) of the ELP Act. A derivative action would at best bring a remedy for Aquapoint (although it is not clear what that remedy would be), not for Dr Fan, and it could not therefore be an adequate remedy for Dr Fan personally. It is true, as confirmed by the Board's decision in Tianrui (International) Holding Co Ltd v China Shanshui Cement Group Ltd [2024] UKPC 36, [2025] AC 709, that if Aquapoint were a company and Dr Fan were a shareholder in it, he could bring a personal claim against Aquapoint. The same may well be true in relation to an ELP (although the proceedings would have to be brought against the general partner: see section 33(1) of the ELP Act). But Dr Fan would need to establish that Genscript had not acted in good faith within the meaning of section 19(1), which is directed to the fiduciary duty owed by a general partner to the ELP, that is, the partners as a whole, rather than to any individual partner in respect of assurances given to that partner personally. It is not clear that it would be established, but it is not necessary to a successful petition for winding up on the just and equitable ground.

89. The Board is accordingly satisfied that there were no alternative remedies reasonably available to Dr Fan.

Conclusion

90. For the reasons given above, the Board will humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal should be dismissed.

Final order appointing voluntary liquidators summarily-abuse of process by respondent between initial inter partes hearing of petition and adjourned hearing-requirements of substantive justice justifying summary determination of part-heard petition-Exempted Limited Partnership Act (2021 Revision), section 36 (13)-Grand Court Rules (2023 Revision), Preamble, paragraphs 1, 4

REASONS FOR DECISION

Introductory

1. Under the terms of the Limited Partnership Agreement relating to One Thousand and One Voices Africa Fund I, L.P. (the "LPA"), the Respondent as General Partner (the "GP") became the Liquidating Agent when the Limited Partnership (the "LP") entered into voluntary liquidation on 27 November 2023. The overwhelming majority of the limited partners requested the GP to appoint independent voluntary liquidators. It declined. Accordingly, the Petition herein dated 25 January 2024 was presented supported by an aggregate of 97% of the economic stakeholders in the LP.

2. It is or ought to be trite law that the GP's role as manager of the LP is broadly analogous to that of the managing shareholder in an investment fund constituted as a limited company. Once a voluntary liquidation commences on a solvent basis, the liquidation process must be conducted having regard to the interests of the limited partners as economic stakeholders. Their reasonable wishes ought ordinarily to be accommodated.

3. It was easy to understand the GP wishing to avoid the Court replacing the GP with independent voluntary liquidators based on positive findings of misconduct on its part. It was impossible to understand why the GP could legitimately insist on remaining in office over the wishes of 97% of the stakeholders. Had seriously arguable grounds for opposing the Petition on its merits existed, the GP would surely not have occupied the hearing initially designated for the Petition itself with an intellectually teasing, but ultimately meritless, jurisdictional challenge.

4. Be that as it may, perhaps anticipating that the Court might well be inclined to summarily reject the jurisdictional challenge and the merits of the GP's grounds of opposition, at the end of the 11 April 2024 hearing, the GP's Leading Counsel skilfully interwove elements of his client's merits arguments, into his oral jurisdictional submissions. This hors d'oeuvre did little to whet my appetite for the main course of the merits submissions. However, I reserved judgment to consider the more intricate jurisdictional question and heard limited argument on the Petitioner's oral application for interim injunctive relief, since it had hoped that a final order would have been made at the end of that hearing. I declined to grant such interim relief at that stage.

5. Having reserved judgment to consider the jurisdiction question, the Petitioner renewed its application for a freezing injunction over the LP's assets on the papers. Despite the GP's protestations that no risk of dissipation existed, I considered that the balance of convenience lay clearly in favour of granting the injunctive relief sought, effectively on an ex parte basis, with liberty to the GP to apply to vary or set aside the 15 April 2024 Order (the "Freezing Order"). It was discomfiting that the GP seemed more determined to deploy a litigation strategy, which put off the 'evil day' when the Court would decide the Petition on its merits, than it was to seek to allay the concerns of the economic stakeholders. Moreover, I had recently been given cause to regret declining to grant urgent ex parte relief in reliance upon a respondent's assurances that there was no justifiable risk of dissipation: Fortunate Drift Limited -v-Canterbury Securities, Ltd., FSD 227/2018 (IKJ), Judgment dated 14 September 2023 (unreported).

6. I delivered my jurisdictional ruling on 24 April 2024 (the "Jurisdictional Ruling"). I set out (at paragraphs 29-34) my strong provisional views that, without resolving the allegations of misconduct against the GP, the case for appointing independent voluntary liquidators seemed compelling due to a demonstrable loss of confidence in the GP on the part of 97% of the relevant stakeholders. I suggested a possible compromise (at paragraph 33), but ultimately granted leave to the GP to apply to seek to persuade the Court (either on the papers or orally) that arguable grounds for opposing the Petition still existed.

7. Needless to say that Jurisdictional Ruling was not an invitation to the GP to, in effect, manufacture entirely new grounds for opposing the Petition. Nonetheless, I received the following communication from the GP's attorneys on 1 May 2024 (while I was overseas on annual leave):

> "We write further to His Lordship's judgment of 24 April and in particular paragraph 36 of the same. We had previously indicated that we believed that our client would seek an oral hearing to demonstrate that the substantive order sought by the Petitioner should not be granted. We hereby confirm that the General Partner does indeed request that such an oral hearing take place and we will liaise with Walkers and the Court as to its listing.
> Separately, we note that the General Partner has taken steps pursuant to the LPA to remove the Petitioner and issued proceedings in New York seeking declarative relief on a number of issues. This raises the issue of the standing of the Petitioner which will need to be addressed at the substantive oral hearing."

8. I did not initially properly consider the implications of this communication and invited counsel to submit dates to avoid for a hearing. The following day, the Petitioner's counsel forwarded a copy of a complaint filed by the GP against the Petitioner in the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York (the "Complaint") and invited the Court to summarily grant the primary relief it sought on the Petition. It was readily apparent that the GP's abuse of the opportunity afforded to it to advance an improbable opposition to the relief sought by the Petitioner had created irrefutable grounds for summarily granting that relief.

9. Accordingly, on 2 May 2024 I made the following summary ruling:

> "SUMMARY RULING
>
> 1. In this case, the Petitioner supported by the overwhelming majority of economic stakeholders in an exempted limited partnership in voluntary liquidation, seeks to replace the GP as the Liquidating Agent. The GP, seemingly unable to face the commercial reality of the ordinary legal consequences which flow from the loss of confidence which has obviously occurred, raised a technical jurisdictional challenge to the Petition.
> 2. In rejecting this challenge in a Ruling dated 24 April 2024, I observed:
> '34. In summary, at this juncture, the likelihood that this Court can find a rational basis for declining to grant the relief sought by the Petitioner seems quite fanciful in all the circumstances of the present case.'

3. The Petitioner, which had hoped to obtain a final order on the first return date of the Petition, sought interim injunctive relief pending the hearing of the Petition on the merits. On 15 April 2024 I granted that relief on a de facto ex parte basis because, in an unrelated matter, I had recently wrongly assumed that a party contesting an injunction application would not undermine the efficacy of any order that might not be granted. On balance, I was not prepared to give the GP the benefit of the doubt, having regard to my provisional views of the merits of the Petition set out in the Ruling on Jurisdiction and my concerns that the very fact that the Petition was being opposed by the GP was indicative of a detachment from commercial and legal reality.

4. The 15 April 2024 Injunction Order was clearly designed to preserve the status quo pending the final hearing of the Petition. It explicitly mandated the preservation of assets; it implicitly mandated that no other steps be taken to prejudice the Limited Partners' interests pending the determination of the Petition on its merits. On 1 May 2024, the GP's attorneys requested a hearing of the Petition and indicated that the GP had recently:

(a) purportedly removed the Petitioner from the partnership;

(b) now wished to contest the Petitioner's standing on these grounds.

5. The GP has also filed a Complaint in the US District Court (SDNY) seeking to challenge the legality of the Petitioner's attempts in these proceedings to 'remove' the GP. These actions are a flagrant collateral attack on this Court's jurisdictional Ruling and contrary to spirit of the Injunction Order. As the Petitioner's counsel points out, it would alternatively have status as a creditor. In my judgment the GP's conduct provides irrefutable grounds for the Court preventing any further abuse of its processes and summarily granting the Order the Petitioner seeks as of today's date.

6. Fuller reasons can be provided in due course if required.

KAWALEY J, 2 May 2024." (the "Summary Ruling")

10. An Order was sealed later that day appointing Alexander Lawson and Christopher Kennedy of Alvarez & Marsal Cayman Islands Limited as the persons responsible for winding-up the affairs of the LP.

11. On 3 May 2024, the GP's attorneys indicated that they wished to seek leave to appeal and to apply for a stay pending appeal on an urgent basis. I accordingly decided that it was appropriate to give fuller reasons for my decision to make what was obviously a final Order, which could be appealed as of right, without waiting for counsel's request.

12. These are the fuller reasons for my Summary Ruling of 2 May 2024 to make a final Order on the Petitioner's application for the appointment of alternative independent voluntary liquidators in place of the GP, pursuant to section 36 (13) of the Exempted Limited Partnership Act (2021 Revision) (the "Act").

The jurisdictional requirements under section 36 (13) of the Act

13. Section 36 of the Act provides as follows:

> "(13) Following the commencement of the winding up of an exempted limited partnership its affairs shall be wound up by the general partner or other person appointed pursuant to the partnership agreement unless the court otherwise orders on the application of any partner, creditor or liquidator of the exempted limited partnership pursuant to subsection (3)(g)."

14. Section 36 (3) (g) provides:

> "(g) on application by a partner, creditor or liquidator, the court may make orders and give directions for the winding up and dissolution of an exempted limited partnership as may be just and equitable."

15. In the Jurisdictional Ruling, I noted that:

> "7. In Malaysia Capital Management Berhad-v-ECM Straits Fund I LP et al, FSD 230 of 2022 (RPJ), Judgment dated 20 December 2022 (unreported), Parker J granted the application of a limited partner to appoint liquidators in place of the general partner which had been struck-off the register and was unable to act. The application under section 36 (13) as read with section 36 (3) (g) was unopposed, but the Court clearly had the benefit of careful argument including reference to the general legislative purpose of section 36 based on extracts from Hansard. Justice Parker (at paragraph 36) accepted the following submission as to the legislative purpose of section 36 (13):

> '(a) there is a clear need for a mechanism for a voluntary liquidation to be brought under the supervision of the Court in cases where it is discovered that there is a need for independent, qualified Court-appointed liquidators to take control (such as in cases of insolvency, malfeasance, or where it is otherwise more effective or efficient);[…]"

16. Parker J's cogent analysis obviously applies, beyond the narrow confines of applications to place a voluntary liquidation under this Court's supervision, to any applications arising out of circumstances where alternative liquidators need to be appointed. I rejected the GP's contention that section 36 (13) only applied to fill gaps in the contractually agreed liquidation mechanism.

17. Against that background, under the rubric of setting out my provisional views on how the relevant statutory jurisdiction should be exercised, I stated:

> "31. Section 36(13) of the Act confers an unfettered discretion on the Court. There are no statutory conditions to satisfy as in the case of applications for a Supervision Order under section131 (b) of the Companies Act, as in Re Asia Private Credit Fund [2020 (1) CILR 134]. The need to evaluate whether the jurisdictional requirements for appointing Official Liquidators have been met do not arise in relation to an application to give effect to the majority stakeholders' wishes as to whom the voluntary liquidators of the ELP should be. The very fact that the GP does not apparently accept the fundamental principle that in a liquidation the wishes of the majority stakeholders prevail (assuming the opposition to the Petition is maintained) appears to demonstrate the need for a fresh appointment."

18. In the course of the hearing, Mr Allison KC submitted that the term "just and equitable" in section 36 (3) (g) of the Act connoted a broad and generous statutory discretion. I agreed. This Court's established practice is to follow its previous decisions unless they are shown to be wrong. The GP's Supplemental Skeleton Argument expressly dealt with the Petitioner's alternative case that if the pleaded misconduct was disputed, this Court could grant the relief sought on a wider basis. The main thrust of those submissions was the proposition that this Court did not have a general supervisory supervision over the LP, thus displacing the general company law principle that the economic stakeholders' wishes as to who should liquidate an investment vehicle are generally given considerable deference.

19. The GP's submissions, and Mr Marshall's admittedly only preliminary oral argument, failed to identify any seriously arguable basis on which the Court could properly prefer the wishes of 3% of the stakeholders, and the incumbent Liquidating Agent against whom unsubstantiated charges of misconduct had been levied, to the views of the 97%. Demonstrating that the Court was not compelled to give effect to the wishes of the majority was not the same as identifying an arguable basis for the Court declining to do so.

20. Accordingly, I was satisfied when I made the Summary Ruling that this Court enjoyed a broad supervisory jurisdiction over the LP after its voluntary liquidation commenced, which could properly be exercised having regard for the best interests of the majority of the limited partners, being the relevant economic stakeholders. Absent countervailing legal policy considerations, the starting assumption in most commercial legal contexts is that it is for the stakeholders, not the Court, to determine where their best commercial interests lie.

21. The winding-up of investment funds constituted by limited companies provides a useful contextual analogy, the force of which Mr Marshall KC vainly sought to minimise at the initial hearing of the Petition. The typical fund company consists of one or more management shareholders and one or more participating shareholders who have no right to participate in the management of the fund company. That longstanding Caymanian corporate approach may well have inspired the substantially similar exempted limited partnership structure whereby limited partners invest and have no power to manage whilst general partners manage. The management shareholder is usually given the right to place the fund into a solvent voluntary liquidation, but it is well recognised that once the normal business of the fund is at an end, the management shareholder's managerial function fades away and the wishes of the real economic stakeholders ordinarily hold sway.

22. In Re Asia Private Credit Fund [2020 (1) CILR 134] Field JA held (at paragraph 99):

> "…the relationship between those holding the management shares in a fund and those holding the participating shares radically changes when the fund is contemplating the cessation of business and a voluntary winding up. The exclusive power conferred on the manager to resolve to wind up the company is conferred not for their benefit but for the benefit of the participating shareholders who, under the articles, have the predominant financial interest in the proposed winding up. Accordingly, the starting assumption should be that where the majority of the participating shareholders nominates a suitable voluntary liquidator, their wishes should be acceded to by the holder of the management or founder shares…"

23. This principle is not a narrow company law principle but is simply one expression of the wider principle of commercial law, that those who have invested their property in a venture should ordinarily be free to determine where their best interests lie. It will generally apply with equal force in the field of exempted limited partnerships as it does in the company law field. It might well be possible for this general principle to be displaced by express provisions in a limited partnership agreement conferring on the general partner absolute power in the voluntary liquidation phase, but such an improbable commercial bargain was not struck in the LPA in the present case.

24. This general principle may perhaps best be viewed as being derived from the notion of the sanctity of property rights. A similar principle is routinely articulated by courts in the context of approving solvent or insolvent schemes of arrangement. As long as the statutory requirements are met, with a majority in number representing three quarters in value of the relevant stakeholder class approving the proposed arrangement, this Court will follow the same approach taken by other common law courts. As Marcus Smith J put it in Re Telford Homes Limited [2019] EWHC 2944 (Ch) (at paragraph 4):

> "Essentially, a scheme will be sanctioned where the provisions of the applicable statutory regime have been complied with….and the arrangement is such that an intelligent and honest person, a member of the class concerned, acting win respect of his or her interests, might reasonably approve. The court in such circumstances, will accord due respect to the commercial sense of those involved in the scheme and will not seek to second guess unduly the approach of such persons."

25. Where the overwhelming majority of the limited partners of an exempted limited partnership seek the appointment of a voluntary liquidator because they have lost confidence in the incumbent contractually agreed liquidator, this Court should likewise ordinarily give "due respect to the commercial sense of those involved".

26. Mr Marshall KC rightly argued that this could not properly be the invariable inflexible position. One obvious generic situation in which the views of the majority could properly be disregarded is if they are themselves the target of credible allegations of wrongdoing and are seeking to abuse their ownership powers to evade investigation. The Petitioner's Skeleton Argument provided another helpful analogy in this regard from the company law sphere, Fakhry v Pagden [2021] BCC 46 (David Richards LJ, as he then was, at paragraphs 94-95).

The need for the Summary Ruling

27. In light of the governing legal principles summarised above, the Court was entitled at the first return date of the Petition to be somewhat mystified as to why the GP felt it could possibly be properly open to the Court to refuse to appoint independent voluntary liquidators as requested by 97% of the relevant stakeholders. It was understandable that the GP should wish to oppose the Order sought being granted based on disputed allegations of wrongdoing, but the Petitioner readily accepted that it was willing to forego a time-consuming and expensive investigation. Apart from the improbable (and subsequently rejected) contention that the Court had no jurisdiction to replace the GP as Liquidating Agent under section 36 (13) of the Act as read with the LPA, no coherent principled case seemed to be advanced.

28. It was not disputed that there had been an unusually frequent changing of the auditor guard, although criticisms of the suitability of the incumbent firm were contested. However, the combination of allegations of financial mismanagement and auditors resigning was in my experience a familiar red flag. It was the sort of factor which, together with others, is frequently relied upon to justify appointing provisional liquidators in place of the impugned incumbent management. Nor was it disputed that the SEC was investigating; it was merely contended that no adverse findings had been recorded. This was a second, similar, red flag.

29. Another strand of the GP's defence was that its Mr Jordaan and the Petitioner's Mr Coors had fallen out for reasons unrelated to the complaints set out in the Petition. The GP asserted that Mr Coors was a very wealthy man and had effectively used his status to sway smaller investors into supporting his personal campaign against the GP. The striking feature of this line of this argument was that it tacitly admitted that there was a breakdown in trust and confidence between the key players. It seemed inherently improbable, in fact incredible, to imply that the true position was that there was no objectively valid basis for any concerns about the GP's fitness to manage the liquidation whatsoever. Indeed, it was easy to summarily conclude that the concerns about the recent turnover of auditors and the mere fact that the SEC had initiated an investigation in 2021, which had not very rapidly vindicated the GP, provided an objectively valid basis for concerns on the part of a non-partisan investor.

30. Moreover, the degree of loss of confidence which would justify giving deference to the wishes of the majority for independent professional voluntary liquidators was not as high as would be required to justify replacing independent professional incumbents. The GP was not an independent professional liquidator at all. It had been managing the LP and had now admittedly fallen out with one of the largest investors. The mere fact of this undisputed falling out provided compelling grounds for the relief the Petitioner sought. Even if Mr Coors had had a "hissy fit" over something inconsequential that Mr Jordaan had done and levied exaggerated complaints of misconduct against the GP's principal, it was reasonable for Mr Coors to harbour genuine doubts that the recipient of his ire could be trusted to fairly wind-up the LP's affairs.

31. Although the analogy between an employer and an employee is only relevant in a figurative sense, in my judgment Mr Coors (as the principal of one of the LP's largest investors) was at the winding-up stage entitled to effectively say to the GP, like the demanding 'boss' in 'The Apprentice' television series: "You're fired!"

32. Another strand to Mr Jordaan's evidence in support of the GP's opposition to the Petition was the plausible notion that he had unique contacts with the underlying investment vehicles in various parts of Africa which were important to an effective liquidation process. This seemed inherently credible. In addition, it was impossible to avoid being impressed by the business concept which married wealth creation with social development in an admirable way. However, the appointment of independent liquidators did not mean that Mr Jordaan's continuing involvement in the liquidation process would necessarily be brought to a complete end. It is standard operating practice for professional liquidators to assess how best to extract and/or preserve value from a liquidation process and engagement with former managers frequently occurs. I sought to encourage consideration of such collaboration in the Jurisdictional Ruling (at paragraph 33).

33. The very fact that the GP wished to remain in office over the wishes of the overwhelming majority of the investors was a powerful indicator that he did not apprehend the fundamental characteristics and requirements of a liquidator's representative role. It thus seemed fanciful to anticipate that the Court could ultimately be persuaded to decline to appoint the professional liquidators that 97% of the investors sought to have appointed.

34. By the date of the Jurisdictional Ruling, the following factors strongly supported appointing independent voluntary liquidators:

(a) the Petitioner complained about the LP's financial management based in part on the fact that there had been five different auditors since 2019;

(b) the GP was said to be subject to an ongoing SEC investigation into allegedly fraudulent conduct;

(c) the Petitioner complained that an asset appeared to have been sold to a party connected to the GP between the date of the filing and the hearing of the Petition; and

(d) having rejected the GP's jurisdictional challenge, it was difficult to identify any arguable grounds for the Court to leave the GP in charge of the LP's voluntary liquidation over the objections of 97% of the relevant economic stakeholders who had on any view lost confidence in the incumbent Liquidating Agent.

35. The Freezing Order was designed most narrowly to preserve the LP's assets pending the final determination of the Petition. More broadly, realistically read in conjunction with my subsequent provisional conclusions on 24 April 2024 that the chances of the GP not being replaced seemed "fanciful", the Freezing Order was designed to preserve the status quo until the Petition was finally determined. Two reasonable responses were open to the GP following the delivery of the Jurisdictional Ruling:

(a) appealing the Jurisdictional Ruling and seeking a stay or adjournment of the Petition pending appeal; or

(b) accepting the Jurisdictional Ruling and submitting to the Court's jurisdiction on the merits of the Petition. This option necessarily required the GP to persuade the Court that the Petitioner's concerns about its alleged mismanagement were entirely baseless and it could properly be trusted to properly manage the liquidation process.

36. Bizarrely, the GP elected to submit to the jurisdiction of the Court but, rather than seeking to demonstrate its liquidation credentials, elected instead to demonstrate beyond sensible argument that it was manifestly unfit for such office. The GP achieved this surprising 'feat' by confirming to the Court on 1 May 2024 that by way of response to the Jurisdictional Ruling:

(a) it wished to contest the Petition on its merits;

(b) it had recently removed the Petitioner as a Limited Partner and proposed to challenge its standing to prosecute the Petition on these grounds; and

(c) it had also filed the Complaint in New York. Admittedly the Complaint was filed before the GP informed the Court it wished to contest the merits of the Petition.

37. The Petitioner's attorneys, on 1 May 2024, responded to the GP's attorneys' 1 May 2024 email with a robust criticism of these actions, which were characterised as "outrageous", and concluded as follows:

> "In the circumstances, our client respectfully requests that His Lordship put an end to the General Partner's reckless behaviour immediately. We respectfully submit that the situation is urgent and the General Partner is now clearly out of control by taking steps in its own self-interest no matter what the damage to limited partners. We attach a draft Order that we would invite His Lordship to make 'on the papers' that would result in the immediate appointment of the nominated representatives of Alvarez & Marsal to the exclusion of the General Partner. We are available to attend at an urgent hearing if His Lordship is not minded to make the draft Order 'on the papers', or for us to be heard in respect of the terms of the draft Order." [Emphasis added]

38. Brief exchanges the next day did not materially change the overall picture. The following course of conduct amounted to an obvious and serious abuse of the process of the Court:

(a) the GP initially opposed the Petition on the grounds the Court had no jurisdiction to remove it from office, and alternatively sought to persuade the Court to give directions for a full contested hearing with oral evidence and cross-examination (Skeleton Argument dated 5 April 2024, 50 + pages);

(b) the GP next opposed the Petition, in response to the Petitioner's modified case, on the grounds that the Court had no jurisdiction to appoint alternative voluntary liquidators (Supplementary Skeleton Argument dated 10 April 2024, 17 pages);

(c) after the Court had resolved the jurisdiction issue against the GP and indicated that it was difficult to identify any meritorious grounds for refusing the relief sought by the Petition, the GP:

(1) purported to remove the Petitioner as a Limited Partner, and

(2) informed the Court that it proposed to contest the standing of the Petitioner to further prosecute the Petition.

39. Without further analysis, it was impossible to believe that a voluntary liquidator, which is the respondent to an application to replace it with independent liquidators because of concerns about the incumbent's probity, could validly deprive the petitioning limited partner of its status as such. More fundamentally, it is a misuse of the processes of the Court for a litigant to manipulate the legal and factual landscape to its advantage in the midst of pending proceedings. Discovering fresh evidence, which either previously existed or is based on the post-litigation conduct of one's opponent is not improper. Creating new grounds for opposing a pending proceeding by taking steps designed to deprive the claimant of standing will generally be an abuse of process.

40. The GP's purported deprivation of the Petitioner's standing to petition, after the Court had already recorded strong provisional views as to the substantive merits of the Petition and invited the GP to consider whether it wished to further oppose the Petition, was manifestly abusive. The proper advancement of the proceedings required the GP to either:

(a) challenge the Jurisdictional Ruling by way of appeal; or

(b) having decided to fully submit to this Court's jurisdiction, to either: (1) advance arguable grounds for opposing the Petition on its merits; or (2) contest the relief to be granted and/or not oppose the Petition any further.

41. The Petitioner's constitutional fair hearing rights guaranteed not only access to the Court, but a fair hearing in a reasonable time. The GP's own fair hearing rights cannot be exercised in a way which undermines a fair trial overall. Manufacturing a new standing ground sought to both deprive the Petitioner of access to this Court and, to the extent that the attempt to do so was bound to fail, would potentially delay the Petitioner's access to substantive justice in a reasonable time by delaying the final adjudication of the Petition. Moreover, these tactical stratagems were being deployed in circumstances where the Court had found a risk of dissipation of assets existed when making the Freezing Order. Had the GP been the respondent to a winding-up petition, the Court could simply have appointed provisional liquidators in response to obvious concerns that the Freezing Order provided insufficient protection for the LP's assets.

42. The purported removal of the Petitioner as a limited partner was accompanied by the commencement of proceedings in New York, which were inconsistent with the GP's submission to the jurisdiction of this Court. It sought declarations that, inter alia, only the New York Court could validly appoint another liquidator. The Complaint, inter alia, alleged:

> "…notwithstanding the parties' clear contractual agreement that any action or proceeding relating in any way to the LPA shall be brought and enforced in this Court or the courts of the State of New York, Defendant Africa Investments filed a petition in the Cayman Islands to surreptitiously circumvent the clear venue provision and, in doing so, strategically avoid the jurisdiction of the American judicial system that the parties agreed was the exclusive judicial forum. As a result of these actions, and other action to the detriment of the Fund, on April 30, 2024, Defendant Africa Investments was removed as a Limited Partner pursuant to the removal provisions of the LPA. Id. at § 11.2. Accordingly, Plaintiffs seek a declaratory judgment as to the rights and obligations of the parties under the LPA related to the dispute between the parties…"

43. In the Complaint, filed on 30 April 2024, just over a week after the Jurisdictional Ruling, the GP positively asserts that it has removed the Petitioner as a limited partner because it presented the Petition before this Court. It is impossible to see how it could be contended in good faith that the Petition was in breach of an exclusive jurisdiction clause in the LPA. That point did not form part of the GP's jurisdictional challenge before this Court; if it was articulated at all, the point was not pursued in oral argument. This was unsurprising because it flew in the face of the express terms of the Act. Further, this contention was entirely inconsistent with the Jurisdictional Ruling's findings that this Court had a general supervisory jurisdiction over voluntary liquidations of exempted limited partnerships under the Act.

44. The Complaint clearly launched a collateral attack on this Court's 15 April 2024 Order and the Jurisdictional Ruling as it sought to establish that the New York Court had sole jurisdiction to grant the relief this Court had already determined this Court had jurisdiction to grant. This Court's decision was reached following: (1) an inter partes hearing in which the GP participated and had not sought leave to appeal; and (2) a hearing in which the GP did not invite the Court to determine the exclusive jurisdiction clause point. This was a further abuse of process, seemingly designed to provide another basis for postponing the final determination of the Petition, which the Court had already indicated it considered there appeared to be no valid defence to.

45. How did these developments impact on the need to evaluate whether the Court should proceed to list the Petition for further hearing or to summarily grant the primary relief the Petitioner sought? In short, they demonstrated that the GP had effectively abandoned any serious attempt to persuade the Court that the views of 97% of the LP's investors that the GP was unsuitable to continue as Liquidating Agent should be ignored. No reasonable voluntary liquidator, respectful of the commercial interests it was primarily required to uphold and of the rule of law, would behave in such an improper and unreasonable manner.

46. In explaining my provisional views as to why the wishes of the Petitioner and its supporters were likely to be acceded to, I noted:

> "32. Unfortunately, the opposition to the present Petition has an all too familiar ring. The best way for a manager who has lost the confidence of the investors to demonstrate their probity is to step aside, demonstrating confidence that their impugned management of the fund will be vindicated by independent scrutiny. Instead, the importance of their continuing at the helm is apparently given priority over the wishes of the investors, and the recalcitrant manager claims to know better than the investors where their best commercial interests lie. Regrettably, whatever unique expertise the scorned manager truly possesses, the distinct impression is created that the determination to cling to office is motivated by self-interest at best or the desire to forestall independent investigation into suspect dealings at worst."

47. The GP's response to these provisional views was not to seek to contest the Petition on its merits by demonstrating that the Court's concerns were misplaced. Instead, it merely fortified the Court's existing concerns about its desperation to cling to power by any means, fair or foul, to a crescendo which called for decisive and summary judicial action. The Preamble to the Grand Court Rules (2023 Revision) confers a positive obligation on this Court to have regard to the overarching goals of ensuring the efficacy of the relevant substantive law and the normal advancement of proceedings in an economical, expeditious and proportionate manner having regard to the need to avoid wasting the Court's finite resources (paragraph 1). Supplementary case management powers include deciding what issues require full examination and which are appropriate for summary determination, together with taking the initiative to make orders of the Court's own motion (paragraph 4). This panoply of procedural powers were deployed in making the Summary Ruling.

48. In brief, the GP by its abuse of this Court's processes surrendered the right to any further opportunity to oppose the obviously meritorious Petition. Postponing the decision to grant the relief sought by the Petitioner would have undermined the substantive legal imperatives to safeguard the majority investors' investment, one of the main purposes of the statutory jurisdiction which I exercised, while causing unjustifiable delay and a wastage of costs.

Conclusion

49. For these reasons, on 2 May 2024 I granted an Order appointing Alexander Lawson and Christopher Kennedy of Alvarez & Marsal Cayman Islands Limited as the persons responsible for winding-up the affairs of the LP, under section 36 (13) of the Act.

LORD HAMBLEN:

Introduction

1. The Cayman Islands Exempted Limited Partnership Act (2021 Revision) (the "Act") provides for the establishment of exempted limited partnerships (an "ELP"). A limited partner in an ELP enjoys limited liability but is precluded from participating in the conduct of the business of the ELP, which is carried out exclusively by a general partner.

2. This appeal concerns the circumstances in which a limited partner can bring a derivative action on behalf of the ELP for injury or damage done to the ELP. This is governed by section 33(3) of the Act which provides that such an action may be brought if the general partner has "without cause, failed or refused to institute proceedings".

3. This is the first case in which this issue has been considered. In its decision the Court of Appeal of the Cayman Islands (Sir Richard Field, Sir Michael Birt and Sir Jack Beatson JJA) provided general guidance as to the approach to be adopted to derivative actions brought pursuant to section 33(3) of the Act and concluded that the general partner in this case did refuse or fail to institute proceedings "without cause" and that as a matter of discretion it was appropriate to allow the respondents' derivative claims to be brought. The appellants contend that the Court of Appeal was wrong so to conclude. The respondents cross-appeal is in respect of one aspect of the general guidance provided, namely at what point in time the section 33(3) test falls to be assessed.

Factual background

4. The Port Fund LP (the "Fund") is a Cayman Islands ELP which invested in port-related assets around the world. It was established in 2007 by KGL Investment Company KSCC ("KGLI Kuwait") which acted as the Fund's sponsor and placement agent and was also one of the limited partners in the Fund. The Fund has one general partner and eleven limited partners including KGLI Kuwait and the two respondents, Kuwait Ports Authority ("KPA") and The Public Institution for Social Security ("PIFSS"). The limited partners invested a total of US$188,152,000, approximately 65% of which was invested by the respondents.

5. The general partner of the Fund is Port Link GP Ltd, a Cayman Islands exempted limited company (the "General Partner"). It was appointed as the sole general partner from 21 March 2007 onwards pursuant to identical limited partnership agreements between itself and the limited partners.

6. The first appellant ("Mr Williams") is the ultimate beneficial owner of the General Partner and has very close connections with the second appellant, Wellspring Capital Group Inc ("Wellspring"), and the third appellant, KGL Investment Company Asia ("KGLI Asia"). In summary:

(1) Mr Williams was a vice president of KGLI Kuwait from September 2007 until 2008 and its investment director from 2009 until 2011. Mr Williams was also a member of the Investment Committee of the Fund from 2009 until 2013.

(2) Mr Williams is the sole shareholder and director of Port Link Holdings USA Inc ("Port Link Holdings"), which since July 2018 has owned the entirety of the issued share capital of the General Partner.

(3) On 23 January 2020 Mr Williams was appointed as the authorised representative of the General Partner in relation to proceedings against it by KPA seeking information regarding the condition of the Fund pursuant to section 22 of the Act ("the section 22 proceedings"). The resolution conferred full authority on Mr Williams to take all necessary actions in relation to those proceedings.

(4) Mr Williams is also the chief executive, chief financial officer, president, vice president, treasurer and secretary of Wellspring. Wellspring is owned by the Mark E Williams Living Trust, the trustees of which are Mr Williams, his wife and his brother.

(5) Mr Williams has been the chief executive officer of KGLI Asia since 1 January 2012. KGLI Asia is owned by KGLI Kuwait. KGLI Asia is said by the appellants to have provided administrative support to the Fund between December 2017 and August 2020 pursuant to an administrative services agreement dated 1 December 2017. KGLI Asia has been in voluntary liquidation since 20 December 2020.

7. The respondents began raising concerns with the General Partner concerning the management of the Fund from October 2016. On 29 January 2020, KPA commenced the section 22 proceedings against the General Partner seeking disclosure of certain documents to which it claimed to be entitled.

8. Also on 29 January 2020, after Mr Williams was appointed as the authorised representative of the General Partner, certain professional directors from FFP (Directors) Ltd (the "FFP Directors") were appointed as directors of the General Partner by Abdulghfoor Alwadhi ("Mr Alwadhi") and Mr Williams. They initially acted alongside Mr Alwadhi, who was a director of the General Partner from 2010 until he resigned on 28 March 2021. Mr Alwadhi was the sole appointed director from 24 May 2018 until 29 January 2020, which was when much of the wrongdoing alleged by the respondents took place. The FFP Directors have no connection to such wrongdoing and describe themselves as "independent directors". They remained in office until they resigned on 15 February 2023.

9. KPA's application in the section 22 proceedings was opposed by the General Partner at a time when the FFP Directors were in post, but KPA obtained an order requiring the General Partner to disclose various documents in August 2020. The General Partner sought to appeal that order but that appeal was compromised and the General Partner agreed to provide various documents to the respondents pursuant to a consent order made in November 2020.

The proceedings

10. On 14 October 2020, the current proceedings were commenced in the Grand Court of the Cayman Islands (the "Grand Court") by the respondents against the General Partner only.

11. On 12 February 2021, the respondents' statement of claim was amended and re-filed joining the appellants as the second to fourth defendants respectively. The respondents advance both direct and derivative claims on behalf of the Fund against Mr Williams and Wellspring, and derivative claims only against KGLI Asia. The respondents allege that the assets of the Fund, which are held on statutory trust by the General Partner, have been misappropriated as part of an unlawful means conspiracy and/or due to dishonest and/or negligent breaches of trust and fiduciary duty, in which each of the appellants have wrongfully participated, in some cases having knowingly received some or all of the proceeds.

12. So far as relevant, the claims made by the respondents may be summarised as follows (see para 152 of the Court of Appeal judgment):

(1) The respondents allege that the General Partner has been guilty of wrongdoing which has caused the Fund loss said to be well in excess of US $100m.

(2) The claims against the General Partner allege that, in breach of its fiduciary, contractual and other duties, it acted contrary to the interests of the Fund and the limited partners by making substantial payments, using the Fund's monies, that were not for the benefit of the Fund and/or the limited partners. Amongst these is the alleged sham settlement of proceedings brought against it in the Dubai International Finance Centre Court (the "DIFCC proceedings") as a result of which

US $59,990,461.30 (the "Wellspring Payment") was paid to Wellspring. It is alleged that the General Partner conspired with, amongst others, Mr Williams and Wellspring to cause loss to the Fund and/or the limited partners by unlawful means in relation to the DIFCC proceedings and the Wellspring Payment.

(3) The claims against Mr Williams are that he orchestrated the DIFCC proceedings and the Wellspring Payment and was accordingly party to the above conspiracy. It is further alleged that he dishonestly assisted in the General Partner's breach of trust/fiduciary duty, knowingly procured the General Partner to breach its contractual duties and was in breach of fiduciary duties he owed to the Fund and/or the General Partner.

(4) The claims against Wellspring are for knowing receipt of the Wellspring Payment, conspiracy in relation to the Wellspring Payment and the DIFCC Proceedings and for repayment of the Wellspring Payment.

(5) The claim against KGLI Asia is for knowing receipt in respect of a number of payments said to have been made to it in breach of trust and/or fiduciary duty by the General Partner.

13. The appellants deny the claims against them, counterclaim against the respondents, alleging that the proceedings are an abuse of process commenced for an improper collateral purpose, and crossclaim against the General Partner in respect of alleged underpayments and rights to indemnification. No application has been made to strike out the respondents' claims on their merits or for reverse summary judgment. The claims must therefore be treated as having a real prospect of success.

14. The FFP Directors stated in sworn evidence that, for the purpose of determining whether there was cause for the derivative claims to be pursued by the Fund as required by section 33(3) of the Act, they conducted an intensive, forensic investigation into the actions of the General Partner and the former management team of the Fund. The stated results of the FFP Directors' investigations are set out in various memoranda dated from 28 May 2021 and in the third affidavit of Richard Lewis (one of the FFP Directors) dated 4 June 2021. These set out that, in the General Partner's view (acting by the FFP Directors), there was currently no cause to bring the derivative claims against the General Partner or the appellants, and that even if such claims did have merit, the General Partner would need to undertake a cost/benefit analysis of whether it was in the best interests of the Fund to pursue them and, if so, whether the Fund was in a position to pursue them or could raise funding to do so.

15. On 7 June 2021, the General Partner and the appellants applied to the Grand Court to strike out the derivative claims against them, on the grounds that such claims failed to satisfy the statutory test under section 33(3) of the Act. Those applications were heard by Parker J between 13-19 October 2021. On 25 November 2021, the Grand Court handed down its judgment granting part of the General Partner's summons on discrete points that did not result in any claims against it being struck out and dismissing the appellants' application.

16. The Grand Court's order was appealed by both the General Partner and the appellants. That appeal was heard by the Court of Appeal on 25 and 26 May 2022 and its judgment was handed down on 20 January 2023. It dismissed the strike out appeal save in relation to the derivative claims made against the General Partner.

17. On or around 15 February 2023, the FFP Directors resigned as the General Partner was apparently unable to pay their professional fees. The respondents thereafter applied (i) to be joined as defendants to the appellants' crossclaim against the General Partner and (ii) for receivers to be appointed in respect of the General Partner.

18. On 2 May 2023, the General Partner was placed into voluntary liquidation by resolution of its sole shareholder, Port Link Holdings, that is ultimately beneficially owned by Mr Williams.

19. By an order dated 1 June 2023, Parker J ordered the appointment of receivers in respect of the General Partner for the express purpose of conducting all litigation on behalf of the General Partner and the Fund (the "Receivers").

20. By an order dated 2 June 2023, Parker J ordered that the respondents be joined as defendants to the appellants' crossclaim against the General Partner in the proceedings. An appeal from this order was dismissed by the Court of Appeal on 15 August 2024.

21. The joint voluntary liquidators of the General Partner applied, in accordance with their statutory obligation to do so, to convert the voluntary liquidation of the General Partner into an official liquidation. This application was dismissed by Parker J on 18 September 2023 and the Receivers were permitted to continue managing the litigation commenced by and against the General Partner and the Fund. The Receivers therefore have conduct on behalf of the General Partner and the Fund of all litigation to which the General Partner or Fund are parties (save for the respondents' derivative claims). The Receivers have decided that the General Partner is not to appeal the Court of Appeal’s decision.

The legal framework

The Act

22. Section 3 provides that the rules of equity and of common law applicable to partnerships as modified by the Partnership Act (2013 Revision) but excluding certain sections shall apply to ELPs, except where they are inconsistent with the express provisions of the Act.

23. Under section 4, ELPs are to consist of general partners and limited partners. General partners are liable for the debts and obligations of the ELP whilst limited partners generally have no such liability.

24. Section 14 provides that all contracts, letters, deeds, instruments or other documents are to be entered into by the general partner on behalf of the ELP and that the limited partners are not to take part in the conduct of the ELP's business.

25. Under section 16, any rights or property of the ELP, including choses in action, are held by the general partner upon trust as an asset of the ELP. The Act thereby creates a statutory trust.

26. Section 19 provides that the general partner is to act at all times in good faith. Subject to any express provisions to the contrary in the partnership agreement, the general partner is to act in the interests of the ELP and limited partners owe no fiduciary duties to the ELP or the other limited partners.

27. Proceedings involving an ELP are governed by section 33 which provides:

> "(1) Subject to subsection (3), legal proceedings by or against an exempted limited partnership may be instituted by or against any one or more of the general partners only, and a limited partner shall not be a party to or named in the proceedings.
> (2) If the court considers it just and equitable any person or a general partner shall have the right to join in or otherwise institute proceedings against any one or more of the limited partners who may be liable under section 20(1) or to enforce the return of the contribution, if any, required by section 34(1).

> (3) A limited partner may bring an action on behalf of an exempted limited partnership if any one or more of the general partners with authority to do so have, without cause, failed or refused to institute proceedings.
> (4) If any action taken pursuant to subsection (3) is successful, in whole or in part, as a result of a judgment, compromise or settlement of any action, the court may award any limited partner bringing any action reasonable expenses, including attorney's fees, from any recovery in any action or from an exempted limited partnership."

Relevant case law

28. Although there is no prior case law concerning section 33 of the Act, the Court of Appeal recognised that some assistance may be derived from common law and equitable principles developed in relation to the bringing of derivative claims in the context of trusts and limited partnerships, particularly given the statutory trust imposed by section 16 of the Act (paras 101 and 140(ix)).

29. The relevant principles in relation to trusts are summarised in Lewin on Trusts (20th Edition) at paras 47-006 and 47-008:

> "47-006. However, as an alternative to proceedings brought in the name of trustees, a beneficiary may, sometimes, bring an action in his name on behalf of the trust against a third party. The fact that the action is brought in the name of a beneficiary rather than the name of the trustees does not alter its character. The action is a derivative action in which the beneficiary stands in the place of the trustees and sues in right of the trust, and does not enforce duties owed to him rather than to the trustees; a beneficiary can be in no better position than trustees carrying out their duties in a proper manner…
> 47-008. A beneficiary can bring a derivative action only in special circumstances, for example circumstances which tend to disable the trustees from suing (as where their acts and conduct with reference to the trust fund are impeached), or circumstances rendering it difficult or inconvenient for the trustees to sue, as where there is a conflict between their interest and duty. Special circumstances are not confined to circumstances of these kinds. The guiding principle is that there > must be exceptional circumstances, which embrace a failure, excusable or inexcusable, by the trustees in the performance of a duty to the beneficiaries to protect the trust estate, or to protect the interest of the beneficiaries in the trust estate. The special circumstances relied on must have something to do with the willingness or ability of the trustee or alleged trustees to bring the action."

30. The fact that the special circumstances must have "something to do with the willingness or ability of the trustee or alleged trustees to bring the action" provides a clear link to the focus in section 33(3) on the justification for the failure or refusal of the general partner to institute proceedings.

31. Recent leading cases on the requirement for special circumstances include Hayim v Citibank NA [1987] AC 730 and Roberts v Gill & Co [2010] UKSC 22; [2011] 1 AC 240. In the latter case Lord Collins of Mapesbury provided the following summary of the law at para 46:

> "The cases go back to the 18th century, and many of them were reviewed in Hayim v Citibank NA [1987] AC 730. The special circumstances which were identified in the earliest authorities as justifying a beneficiary's action were fraud on the part of the trustee, or collusion between the trustee and the third party, or the insolvency of the trustee, but it has always been clear that these are merely examples of special circumstances, and that the underlying question is whether the circumstances are sufficiently special to make it just for the beneficiary to have the remedy…."

Lord Walker of Gestingthorpe (at para 110) stated that "what has to be special about the circumstances – is that the derivative action is needed to avoid injustice…."

32. The determination of whether there are circumstances which are special therefore involves a consideration of what the interests of justice require – see In re Field, decd [1971] 1 WLR 555 at 561 per Goff J, cited with approval by Lord Collins in Roberts v Gill at 258D-F: see also Nurcombe v Nurcombe [1985] 1 WLR 370 at 378D-H per Browne-Wilkinson LJ.

33. In Certain Limited Partners in Henderson PFI Secondary Fund II LLP (a firm) v Henderson PFI Secondary Fund II LP (a firm) [2012] EWHC 3259 (Comm); [2013] QB 934 ("Henderson") Cooke J held that that the special circumstances test also applied to the bringing of a derivative claim by a limited partner on behalf of an English limited partnership. As with an ELP, a limited partnership established under the Limited Partnerships Act 1907 is not a separate legal entity and limited partners have no role in the management of the partnership business, which is exclusively carried out by the general partner. There is, however, no provision equivalent to section 33 of the Act.

34. The Board agrees with the Court of Appeal that the special circumstances test and case law are relevant to the interpretation and application of section 33. If there are special circumstances which mean that a derivative action is needed to avoid injustice then the failure or refusal of the general partner to institute proceedings may well be without cause. Conversely, if there are no such circumstances then the failure or refusal to do so may well be justifiable and therefore with cause.

35. Graham Chapman KC for the appellants submitted that the case law relating to the bringing of derivative claims on behalf of a company is also of assistance and in particular the fraud on the minority exception to the rule in Foss v Harbottle (1843) 2 Hare 461, 67 ER 189 that the proper plaintiff for a wrong done to a company is the company itself. There are, however, a number of important distinctions between ELPs and companies which mean that little assistance can be derived from such case law. In particular:

(1) An ELP has no separate legal personality.

(2) A company's articles of association constitute a contract between the company and its members, but no contractual relationship exists between an ELP and its constituent partners. The rights and obligations of the partners in an ELP are governed by a contract between the partners and a statutory trust.

(3) The directors of a company owe fiduciary duties to the company alone and not to the company's shareholders, whilst the general partner of an ELP owes fiduciary duties to all the ELP's limited partners.

(4) The directors of a company are treated as trustees in respect of the company's assets which are under their control, holding them for the company rather than for its shareholders. In contrast, the general partner of an ELP holds the ELP's assets on trust for all the limited partners.

(5) When a wrong is done to a company, it is the company, not its shareholders, that suffers loss. When a wrong is done to an ELP, its constituent partners suffer loss directly: the ELP itself does not suffer any loss that is separate or distinct from the partners' loss.

(6) A majority of shareholders in a company generally have a range of rights and powers, including the power to remove or replace directors and to pass a special resolution requiring a company to bring legal proceedings. A majority of limited partners in an ELP do not have an equivalent power; faced with a general partner who refuses to bring proceedings on behalf of an ELP without cause, their only recourse is to bring a derivative claim.

(7) The fraud on the minority exception concerns control over the bringing of proceedings by the majority shareholders. No such issue arises as between limited partners. As this case illustrates, the majority of limited partners may be seeking to bring the derivative claim.

The Court of Appeal judgment

36. At para 140 of its judgment the Court of Appeal gave general guidance in respect of derivative proceedings under section 33(3) of the Act. This guidance will be considered further below, but it includes the following summary of the nature of the court's task in deciding whether the requirements of section 33(3) have been complied with:

> "(viii) The essential task for the court at such a hearing is to determine whether the limited partner has brought himself within the terms of section 33(3), namely that the general partner has failed or refused to bring the relevant proceedings without cause.
> (ix) In determining this issue, the court is likely to be assisted by consideration of whether special circumstances (as developed in cases concerning trusts, limited partnerships and other entities) exist, but the court's task remains one of applying the statutory test set out in section 33(3).
> (x) Whilst reference to a 'good arguable case' may be a helpful indicator of the level of comfort which the court should have when deciding whether the requirements of section 33(3) are met, the court's task is essentially an evaluative one having regard to the facts as they appear to the court at that stage of the proceedings from the material before the court and the need to avoid injustice balanced with the need to respect the fact that a derivative action is an exception to the general principle in the [Act] that management (including decisions as to litigation) of an ELP is for the general partner, not the limited partners. …

> the court should consider, inter alia, the strength of the evidence that the general partner has failed or refused to institute proceedings without cause, the strength of the underlying claim which is sought to be brought and the likelihood and nature of any injustice if the derivative claim is not permitted.
> (xi) The court should reach its decision as to standing by reference to the facts as they appear at the date of the hearing of the strike out or preliminary issue.
> (xii) Even where the requirements of section 33(3) are met, the court has a discretion as to whether to permit a derivative claim to continue. One of the factors which is likely to be relevant in exercising that discretion is whether the plaintiff has an alternative remedy."

37. In relation to the interpretation of section 33(3), the Court of Appeal held that the expression "without cause" must carry the implication of "good" cause, noting that the legislature cannot have intended that a decision for any cause, no matter how inhibited or conflicted the decision maker might be, would be sufficient to prevent the bringing of a derivative action under section 33(3) (para 95). The Court of Appeal further held that the relevant inhibition or conflict of interest is that of the general partner itself, as opposed to that of its directors from time to time (para 168).

38. On the facts, the Court of Appeal held that the section 33(3) test was satisfied as the General Partner was under a relevant inhibition when it determined (acting by the FFP Directors) that there was cause not to bring the derivative claims against the appellants. The Court of Appeal observed that, on the respondents' case, the General Partner was deeply involved in the alleged wrongdoing, as was Mr Williams, and that the General Partner had to decide whether to institute proceedings against the appellants, in circumstances where (para 158):

> (1) The essential wrongdoing giving rise to the claims against the appellants was that of the General Partner itself in making various payments and where the General Partner was part of the unlawful means conspiracy to injure the Fund involving Mr Williams and Wellspring.
> (2) The contemplated proceedings would have to be brought against Mr Williams, the ultimate beneficial owner of the General Partner and against two companies with which he is deeply and closely involved, namely Wellspring and KGLI Asia.

(3) The General Partner would also have to consider whether (as general partner) it should sue itself (in its own right) as a co-conspirator in the alleged unlawful means conspiracy.

39. The Court of Appeal found (para 159) that this amounted to an "obvious and serious conflict of interest" by reason of which the General Partner was under an inhibition which would amount to special circumstances in the context of a trust or limited partnership and which also meant that the failure by the General Partner to bring proceedings was without cause. In so finding the Court of Appeal was upholding the Grand Court's conclusion to the same effect.

40. As to discretion, it was submitted that because the respondents have direct claims against the first and second appellants they have an alternative remedy against them and so there is no need to bring a derivative claim. The Court of Appeal concluded, however, that it was appropriate to allow the claim to continue in circumstances where there was uncertainty around whether the respondents had direct claims against the first and second appellants and whether the court could order restoration of the trust fund on the success of such direct claims in the absence of a derivative claim on behalf of the Fund (para 170). Both the direct and derivative claims against the first and second appellants were therefore permitted to continue.

The appeal

41. The appellants contend that the Court of Appeal erred in the interpretation of section 33(3) and/or the exercise of its discretion by:

(1) Finding that the General Partner was subject to a relevant inhibition precluding it from making a valid determination as to whether to bring the derivative claims.

(2) Failing to give due regard to the commercial judgment of the General Partner (acting by the FFP Directors) that the derivative claims should not be pursued.

(3) Allowing the respondents to continue the derivative claims in circumstances where the General Partner had validly determined with "cause" that the derivative claims should not be pursued.

(4) Establishing a test which allows a limited partner to bring or continue a derivative claim simply by impugning the conduct of the general partner so as to > give rise (on the basis of the Court of Appeal's findings) to a perceived potential conflict of interest that inevitably renders any decision not to bring such claims as one "without cause".

(1) Did the Court of Appeal err in finding that the General Partner was subject to a relevant inhibition precluding it from making a valid determination as to whether to bring the derivative claims?

42. The appellants accept that a failure to bring proceedings may be without cause where the decision making is subject to a relevant inhibition.

43. The appellants also accept that an actual conflict of interest would be a relevant inhibition (see para 90 of their written case).

44. A conflict of interest is a clear example of special circumstances justifying the bringing of a derivative claim. This is one of the examples given in Lewin at para 47-008. It was also the basis upon which Cooke J held that special circumstances existed in Henderson. In that case a derivative claim was allowed to be brought by the limited partners for alleged wrongdoing by the management company appointed by the general partner, which was a sister company of the general partner. Cooke J held that this sister company relationship gave rise to an "irreconcilable conflict of interest" and that the partnership's prospects of obtaining redress against the management company were "virtually eliminated" (para 57).

45. Mr Chapman submitted that there was no relevant conflict of interest in this case as the Court of Appeal had merely held that there was a potential conflict of interest rather than an actual conflict of interest and there was no finding, as in Henderson, as to the impact of that conflict on the prospects of obtaining redress.

46. In the Board's view, it is clear that the Court of Appeal correctly held that there was an actual conflict of interest and indeed an equivalent conflict of interest to that found to be established in Henderson. As the Court of Appeal stated (emphasis added):

> "158. We respectfully agree with the decision of Cooke J in Henderson. In our judgment there is a similar conflict of interest in the present case. On the plaintiffs' case, D1 as the general partner was deeply involved in all the alleged wrongdoing as was Mr Williams. …

> 159. On the face of it, by reason of the obvious and serious conflict of interest, D1 is under an inhibition which would amount to special circumstances in the context of a trust or limited partnership and this inhibition also means that the failure by D1 to bring proceedings against D2 – D4 is without cause for the purposes of section 33(3).
>
> 163. … [the General Partner] is subject to the conflicts of interest we have summarised above…
>
> 167. … There is no doubt in our view that [the General Partner] was and is suffering from an inhibition … ."

47. It is correct that the Court of Appeal refers (at para 163) to the fact that the General Partner "cannot be seen to be in a position to take a fair and independent decision about the potential litigation", but that (and other like comments) is a description of the consequence of the conflict of interest rather than of its nature.

48. If the General Partner's decision whether or not to institute proceedings is subject to the conflict of interest which the Court of Appeal identified then the decision is inhibited thereby – it is not necessary or appropriate to go on to consider how it in fact affected the decision.

49. Further, in concluding that there was an actual conflict of interest the Court of Appeal was upholding the like finding made by the Grand Court:

> "104. The [General Partner] is a defendant to litigation where it is accused of serious wrongdoing: wilful default, liability under the Fraudulent Dispositions Act, and conspiracy with the other defendants are alleged.
> 105. A large number of the claims against [the appellants] are premised on a breach of duty by the [General Partner]. For example the allegation of knowing receipt is based upon a breach of duty by the [General Partner]. In the circumstances > the [General Partner] cannot be expected to be the arbiter of whether to bring a claim against another defendant that is premised on its own breach of duty. It is in my view incapable of exercising an impartial decision-making function."

50. The Board agrees with the reasoning and conclusion of the Court of Appeal and the Grand Court.

(2) Did the Court of Appeal err in failing to give due regard to the commercial judgment of the General Partner (acting by the FFP Directors) that the derivative claims should not be pursued?

51. The appellants contend that the General Partner's decision not to bring the claims which are now brought derivatively was the product of a careful and thorough investigation and, ultimately, the considered exercise of commercial judgment by the General Partner acting by its independent FFP Directors. They reasonably concluded that the claims were not of sufficient merit to justify the bringing of proceedings. They appropriately also took into account how such claims might be funded and that the bringing of such proceedings might give rise to claims against the Fund, as it has done. This commercial decision is one with which the court should not interfere.

52. For a number of reasons, the fact that a commercial decision was taken by the FFP Directors does not avoid the conflict of interest which the Court of Appeal found there to be or the resulting inhibition on decision making.

53. First, as both the Grand Court and the Court of Appeal held, it is the position of the General Partner, not its directors, which must be considered. This is made clear by section 33 in general, which focuses on the "general partner", and by section 33(3) in particular, which refers to the "general partner" having failed or refused to bring proceedings without cause.

54. If, as the Court of Appeal held, the General Partner was subject to a disqualifying conflict of interest in making the decision whether or not to bring proceedings then that is not affected by the identity or independence of its directors. The conflict and the inhibition remain regardless of the identity of the directors from time to time.

55. Nor is this conclusion affected by the possibility adverted to by the Court of Appeal (at para 163) that different considerations might arise if liquidators were appointed by the court. It is not necessary to decide whether or not this is correct but, as the Court of Appeal observed, liquidators are not in the same position as directors as they are subject to the supervision of the court.

56. Secondly, even if it is appropriate to have regard to the position of the FFP Directors, they too were subject to a disqualifying conflict of interest and, moreover, one which they seemingly did not recognise. That conflict arises because the FFP Directors owed a duty to act in the best interests of the General Partner. Where there is a conflict between the interests of the General Partner and the Fund then that duty puts the FFP Directors in a conflicted position. The fact that the General Partner has a duty to act in the best interests of the Fund does not avoid that conflict; indeed, it highlights it.

57. As the Grand Court held, the FFP Directors were "seriously inhibited from making impartial decisions" regarding the bringing of proceedings because "they owe their duties primarily to the [General Partner] and it is obviously not in the [General Partner's] interests to be sued" (para 110). The Court of Appeal similarly recognised the conflict "between acting in the best interests of [the Fund] (which might include taking action against [the General Partner] as a co-conspirator) and acting in the best interests of [the General Partner] (which might be said to include the avoidance of being sued)" (para 163).

58. Thirdly, in any event the Grand Court further found that there was a "prima facie case that [the FFP Directors] are unable to assess the claims properly in an independent and objective way, notwithstanding Mr Lewis' extensive evidence" (para 110) and a "prima facie case that [the FFP Directors] have been guided (until recently) in their investigations by information provided by those who were under investigation themselves, and by their legal advisers, who were also conflicted" (para 111). This led the Grand Court to reach the following conclusion on the evidence:

> "121. Based on the available evidence, I have formed the view that there is a relevant inhibition which prevents the FFP Directors' decision making process being fair, because the decisions not to pursue the claims are insufficiently distinct from the wrongdoing upon which the claims are founded. …"

59. Mr Chapman submitted that this conclusion was undermined by the fact that the Grand Court had wrongly evaluated the evidence on the basis that it was only necessary to show a "prima facie" case. However, notwithstanding the different approach which the Court of Appeal held to be appropriate, it endorsed the Grand Court's conclusion, stating as follows:

> "168. Given our decision to uphold the judge's conclusion that it is the position of [the first defendant] as the general partner which must be considered in relation to any inhibition rather than the position of the directors from time to time, it is not necessary for us to address his finding about the position of the > FFP Directors. Suffice it to say that, if we had found it necessary to do so, we would have considered that the judge was entitled to reach the conclusions which he did in this respect."

60. That endorsement of the Grand Court's conclusion necessarily includes the findings upon which that conclusion was based, as summarised above. Those findings are not open to challenge on this appeal.

(3) Did the Court of Appeal err in allowing the respondents to continue the derivative claims in circumstances where the General Partner had validly determined with "cause" that the derivative claims should not be pursued?

61. The basis upon which the appellants contend that the Court of Appeal so erred is that the FFP Directors had determined that the claims should not be pursued. All the reasons set out above as to why that decision was and remained conflicted and so was not made with "cause" equally apply to the exercise of any discretion to allow a derivative claim. This issue does, however, raise the question of whether there is such a discretion and, if so, its juridical basis. This question was raised by the Board at the hearing and, since the parties had not come to court prepared to deal with the issue, they were invited to address it by making written submissions.

62. Having had the benefit of those submissions, the Board concludes that there is no proper basis for the two stage approach adopted by the Court of Appeal whereby the court considers first if the section 33(3) test of whether there has been a refusal or failure to institute proceedings without cause is satisfied, and secondly whether as a matter of discretion the derivative claim should be permitted. Given that this two stage approach was common ground before the Court of Appeal, its appropriateness was not an issue which it addressed.

63. Section 33 does not refer to the court having any discretion, nor does it lay down any requirement for the court to grant permission or leave for the derivative proceedings to be brought. The sole statutory criterion is whether the requirements of section 33(3) are met. Although the subsection states that the limited partner "may" bring derivative proceedings where the test is satisfied, this relates to what the limited partner may do, not what the court may allow the limited partner to do. It is inconsistent with that statutory scheme to import a separate requirement that the bringing of derivative proceedings is additionally subject to the exercise of the court's discretion.

64. As explained above, however, the special circumstances test is relevant to the interpretation and application of section 33(3) and that involves a consideration of what the interests of justice require. This allows the court to take into account factors which might otherwise be regarded as relevant to the exercise of a discretion ("discretionary considerations") as part of its evaluative determination of whether the requirements of section 33(3) are met. This would include, for example, whether there is an alternative remedy available, or whether the derivative claim is being brought for an ulterior motive, or views expressed by other limited partners.

65. Indeed, this is implicitly recognised in the Court of Appeal's description of how the court should approach the determination of whether the requirements of section 33(3) are met in para 140(x) of its judgment. It there refers to the court's task being an "evaluative one" which involves balancing "the need to avoid injustice" with "the need to respect the fact that a derivative action is an exception to the general principle" that decisions as to litigation are for the general partner. It also refers to the need to consider "the likelihood and nature of any injustice if the derivative claim is not permitted". Such an approach allows the court to have regard to discretionary considerations.

66. The Court of Appeal was therefore correct to have regard to discretionary considerations in reaching its conclusion, albeit that this should have been as part of its determination that the requirements of section 33(3) were met rather than as a separate step in a two stage approach. For the reasons stated in para 61 above, there was no error in its treatment of such factors.

(4) Did the Court of Appeal err by establishing a test which allows a limited partner to bring or continue a derivative claim simply by impugning the conduct of the general partner so as to give rise (on the basis of the Court of Appeal's findings) to a perceived potential conflict of interest that inevitably renders any decision not to bring such claims as one "without cause"?

67. As already stated, the Court of Appeal did not hold that there was "a perceived potential conflict of interest" but rather an actual conflict of interest and one which was, moreover, "obvious and serious".

68. Mr Chapman nevertheless submitted that the Court of Appeal's interpretation of section 33(3) set the bar too low and would be likely to lead to an undesirable proliferation of derivative claims in relation to ELPs.

69. As the Court of Appeal observed (para 173), such arguments do not bear on the proper interpretation of section 33(3) and are more matters for the legislature.

70. In any event, the Board would not accept that the bar has been set low. The Court of Appeal's decision is only likely to apply to a conflict of interest on the part of the general partner in the case of a claim against persons closely associated with the general partner, or a claim in which the general partner is implicated, and which is seriously arguable.

71. Mr Chapman further submitted that the effect of the Court of Appeal's decision is that once a general partner is conflicted it is always likely to be conflicted and that the only way to avoid such a conflict is going to be the replacement of the general partner. Further, in the present case, due to the terms of the partnership agreement, that would lead to dissolution of the ELP.

72. Conflicts of interest may, however, take many different forms and be of varying levels of seriousness. In many cases, it may be possible to remove and resolve the conflict without there being any need to replace the general partner. This case may be different because of the "obvious and serious" nature of the conflict of interest, if there is substance in the allegations in the respondents' claims. As to the potential difficulties arising from the terms of the partnership agreement, this is not inherent in the operation of the Act; it is the consequence of the partnership terms agreed.

The cross-appeal

73. The respondents' position is that the Court of Appeal was correct as to the meaning, effect and application of section 33(3), save that, by their cross-appeal, the respondents submit that the Court of Appeal erred when it held that the point at which the section 33(3) test is to be assessed is the date of the strike out hearing, rather than, as the Judge held, at the time the derivative claim was commenced (the "Timing Issue").

74. On the Timing Issue the Court of Appeal held that the Judge's approach would require the court to ignore anything that had happened between the institution of proceedings and the hearing, which could lead to highly unsatisfactory results. It gave the example of the appointment of a new general partner which removed any question of inhibition or conflict of interest. It concluded that "the legislature cannot have intended that the court should allow a derivative claim to proceed in circumstances where, as at the date of the hearing of the strike out or preliminary issue, the requirements of section 33(3) are not met …" (para 125).

75. The respondents criticise that decision and rely in particular on the fact that the words "failed or refused" in section 33(3) are in the past tense, which suggests that the relevant failure or refusal must have taken place before the date of institution of the derivative claim.

76. In the Board's view the Court of Appeal reached the correct conclusion for a number of reasons.

77. First, although section 33(3) uses the past tense when it refers to whether the general partners "have, without cause, failed or refused to institute proceedings", that can refer to a failure or refusal to do so which began before the derivative action was commenced and continues up until the time of the court's determination. Similarly, although section 33(3) states that a limited partner may "bring" an action, which would most obviously refer to the commencement of the action, it can also refer to commencing and maintaining an action.

78. Secondly, this interpretation of section 33(3) is supported by pragmatic considerations and the fact that the nature of the evaluative decision which the court is called upon to make under section 33(3) is one which requires regard to be had to all relevant circumstances at the time of the decision. In particular, any consideration of what the interests of justice require can only properly be made on the basis of what justice currently requires, as opposed to what it may in the past have required.

79. As the Court of Appeal held, it would be highly unsatisfactory if the court could not have regard to how circumstances may have changed since the initiation of the proceedings, including, for example, the removal of the inhibition or conflict that was the basis for contending that the refusal or failure to institute proceedings was without cause.

80. Other examples given by the appellants of potentially important developments post-dating the initiation of proceedings include: (i) the insolvency of the derivative defendants; (ii) the defendants being denied insurance coverage for the claimed loss; (iii) determinative documents arising on discovery; (iv) adverse interlocutory findings during the course of proceedings; and (v) the costs of proceedings exceeding the value of the claim.

81. The respondents recognised the force of this point and acknowledged that it should be possible for the court to take into account later developments. They contended that the court could do so in the exercise of its discretion. On their approach there are two stages. The first stage is whether the requirements of section 33(3) are met, which is to be determined on the basis of the facts as at the time of the initiation of the proceedings. The second stage is the exercise of the court's discretion to allow the proceedings to be brought, which is to be determined on the basis of all facts as known at the time of the hearing before the court. However, for the reasons set out above, there is no two stage process; there is a single evaluative decision to be made which will include consideration of discretionary considerations. Unless that decision is made on the basis of the facts as they appear to the court at the hearing, it will not be possible to take into account changing circumstances, notwithstanding the respondents' acknowledgment of the need to do so.

82. Thirdly, the authorities on special circumstances show that that is an issue which goes to the cause of action being asserted and is required to be pleaded and proved. So, for example, in Roberts v Gill Lord Walker stated that "special circumstances are part of his cause of action" which must be pleaded (para 103, p 272F) and that special circumstances are one of the "building blocks" and "essential facts … which must be pleaded and proved (if not admitted) in order to establish the cause of action" (para 108, p 274B-C).

83. This is borne out by the majority decision in Roberts v Gill that the amendment to add a derivative claim involved a new cause of action being brought after the expiry of the relevant limitation period. In that case the claimant commenced proceedings against two firms of solicitors who had advised the former personal representatives of his grandmother's estate. This claim was brought in his personal capacity as a beneficiary of the estate. After the limitation period had expired, he applied to amend to bring a derivative claim on behalf of the estate. The application was dismissed by the deputy judge on the grounds that no special circumstances existed. Although the Court of Appeal held that special circumstances did exist, it dismissed the appeal on the grounds that the amendment required the addition of a new party, the administrator of the estate, and that this was not permissible under CPR r 19.5(3)(b) (now CPR r 19.6(3)(b)) as such addition was not necessary in order to pursue the personal claim originally made. The House of Lords allowed the appeal against the Court of Appeal's decision as to the existence of special circumstances, but the majority (Lord Rodger of Earlsferry, Lord Walker and Lord Collins) also held that the Court of Appeal was correct to hold that the application did not meet the requirements of rule 19.5. Integral to that decision was their conclusion that the bringing of a derivative claim involved a new cause of action, as the capacity in which the party is suing is part of the cause of action. As Lord Collins stated at para 41:

> "The [derivative] claim is a claim involving a new cause of action since the capacity in which [the claimant] makes the claim is an essential part of the claim".

84. This decision implies that, at common law, the special circumstances justifying a derivative claim must, if disputed, be proved in order for the claim to succeed. If that is so, then it follows that, at common law, the special circumstances must continue to exist at the date of determination. Reading "bring" as meaning "commence and maintain" therefore has the consequence that the statutory regime is similar in this respect to the common law relating to derivative claims. That this is likely to have been intended is supported by the general preservation of common law rules except where inconsistent with express provisions (section 3 of the Act), and the link between the special circumstance mentioned in section 33(3) and the common law, to which attention has already been drawn (see paras 30−34 above).

The guidance

85. As referred to above, in its judgment the Court of Appeal gave general guidance as to how applications under section 33 should be approached and determined. The parties did not take issue with this guidance, save in relation to the Timing Issue. For the reasons explained above, the Board considers that the Court of Appeal erred in stating that the court has a discretion as to whether to permit a derivative action to continue even where the requirements of section 33(3) are met. There is a single evaluative decision to be made as to whether the statutory requirements are met, but that decision allows for account to be taken of discretionary considerations. For the same reason, it is not strictly correct to refer to the court permitting or allowing derivative proceedings to be brought. There is no permission or leave requirement. Subject to those clarifications, the Board endorses the guidance given by the Court of Appeal, in the amended form set out below:

(1) There is no requirement for leave to bring derivative proceedings under section 33(3). A limited partner may simply institute such proceedings.

(2) A limited partner must however plead the facts and matters relied upon as showing that it can bring itself within the requirements of the subsection.

(3) If a defendant wishes to raise an issue as to whether the requirements of the subsection are met, it should do so by means of a strike out application or seek the trial of a preliminary issue.

(4) Whichever of these routes is chosen does not affect the test which has to be applied in deciding whether section 33(3) is complied with.

(5) The decision of the court on such an application or preliminary issue is determinative (subject to appeal). If the court holds that the derivative claim may be continued, the limited partner may pursue the claim. It is not an issue which is deferred until or revisited at trial (save possibly in the context of costs at the end of the trial).

(6) The court should not conduct a mini trial as to whether the requirements of section 33(3) are satisfied. The court has to reach its decision on the basis of the material before it, which will be more limited than it will be following discovery and trial.

(7) At the hearing, the onus is on the limited partner to satisfy the court that the requirements of section 33(3) are met. Reference to ‘onus’ is not to be mistaken as a reference to a 'burden' in the sense of having to show something on the balance of probabilities.

(8) The essential task for the court at such a hearing is to determine whether the limited partner has brought itself within the terms of section 33(3), namely that the general partner has failed or refused to bring the relevant proceedings without cause.

(9) In determining this issue, the court is likely to be assisted by consideration of whether special circumstances (as developed in cases concerning trusts, limited partnerships and other entities) exist, but the court's task remains one of applying the statutory test set out in section 33(3).

(10) Whilst reference to a good arguable case may be a helpful indicator of the level of comfort which the court should have when deciding whether the requirements of section 33(3) are met, the court's task is essentially an evaluative one having regard to the facts as they appear to the court at that stage of the proceedings from the material before the court. Regard should be had to the need to avoid injustice balanced with the need to respect the fact that a derivative action is an exception to the general principle in the Act that management (including decisions as to litigation) of an ELP is for the general partner, not the limited partners. The court should consider, inter alia, the strength of the evidence that the general partner has failed or refused to institute proceedings without cause, the strength of the underlying claim which is sought to be brought and the likelihood and nature of any injustice if the derivative claim does not proceed. This will allow for account to be taken of discretionary considerations, such as whether the plaintiff has an alternative remedy.

(11) The court should reach its decision by reference to the facts as they appear at the date of the hearing of the strike out or preliminary issue.

Conclusion

86. For the reasons set out above the Board will humbly advise His Majesty that the appeal and the cross-appeal should be dismissed.

ITEM NO. 142

JA-28

[2020 (2) CILR Note 6]

GULF INVESTMENT CORPORATION, GENERAL RETIREMENT AND SOCIAL INSURANCE AUTHORITY and KUWAIT PORTS AUTHORITY v. THE PORT FUND L.P. and PORT LINK GP LIMITED

GRAND CT. (Parker, J.) June 16th, 2020

Partnership — exempted limited partnership — information regarding condition of partnership

The plaintiffs were the limited partners in the first defendant ("the fund"), a Cayman Islands limited partnership. The second defendant was the general partner. The plaintiffs sought disclosure of true and full information regarding the business and financial condition of the fund under s.22 of the Exempted Limited Partnership Law (2018 Revision). Section 22 provided: "Subject to any express or implied term of the partnership agreement, each limited partner may demand and shall receive from a general partner true and full information regarding the state of the business and financial condition of the exempted limited partnership."

The plaintiffs submitted that, although they had good cause for concern about the management of the fund which had led them to seek extensive documents and information, it was not necessary for them to prove any wrongdoing on the part of the fund or the general partner, or even a reasonable suspicion of wrongdoing. The court was not therefore required or invited to reach any findings of fact on these questions. There was no requirement under s.22 of the Law for a limited partner to even identify the reasons why it sought information.

The defendants submitted that the fund's limited partnership agreement ("LPA") set out the parties' agreement as to the rights to the provision of information. It set out carefully delineated rights to information and corresponding duties to provide information with appropriate safeguards and restrictions in relation to confidentiality. Section 22 of the Law set out a general principle that a limited partner was entitled to information about the state of business and financial condition of a partnership, but the general principle was subject to what the partnership parties actually agreed in the LPA. The limited partners' rights to receive information were not unlimited and unfettered and it was not unreasonable to undertake that they would only use the information for the purpose of informing themselves about the affairs of the fund.

Held: On a plain and natural reading of s.22, it provided the plaintiffs with an entitlement to demand and receive true and full information regarding the business and financial affairs of the partnership (Dorsey Ventures Ltd. v. XiO GP Ltd., 2019 (1) CILR 249, followed). This made logical common sense as they were partners in the business and its financial affairs were managed on their behalf. They had, in effect, paid for all of the activity undertaken on their behalf pursuant to which they required true and full information. Section 22 was a very wide unqualified provision and included all books and records maintained by the general partner pursuant to the statutory obligation imposed on it by s.21. However it was wider than s.21, as it required information to be provided, not just documents, and the information needed to be "true and full," not "true and fair" as under s.21 which dealt only with books and records of account. Section 22 occupied the field. The court accepted the plaintiffs' submissions that there was no requirement for a limited partner to provide reasons for its demand. The plaintiffs' claim would only fail if there was a proper basis for contending that any of the categories of information demanded fell outside the operation of s.22 of the Law. That would only be in cases where it was clear that the information sought did not relate to the business and financial affairs of the partnership. The plaintiffs accepted that they could not require or use information to harm the fund. The fund was in exit mode. They sought the information to, among other things, consider claims against third parties which would realize assets for the fund. Unless the provisions of the LPA modified or cut down the wide and otherwise unqualified obligation in s.22 of the Law, it should be applied. Clause 7.1 obliged the general partner to keep appropriate records and books of account and afforded each partner the right to access and to receive copies under such reasonable conditions and restrictions as the general partner might prescribe. Therefore, the general partner could impose conditions and restrictions for access and the provision of copies as a matter of the practicalities of complying with the obligation. The reasonable conditions and restrictions extended only to practicalities. Clause 7.1 did not provide the general partner with a separate and distinct right to require the kind of condition that was sought in the present case by way of an undertaking as to use. Such a right would need to be expressed in clear and unambiguous terms. There was no provision in the LPA as to the use of information provided except cl. 7.3 which imposed duties of confidentiality on the plaintiffs. There was no basis for requiring the plaintiffs to agree to any further or other restrictions or conditions on use of information to be provided.

Exempted limited partnership-ss 16, 19, 21 and 22 Exempted limited Partnership Law (2018 Revision)-true and full information concerning the state of business and financial condition of the Fund-motives and intentions of limited partners seeking information-construction of Limited Partnership Agreement-section 3 (1) (j) Confidential Information Disclosure Law (2016 Revision)-legal privilege -working papers

Introduction

1. The Plaintiffs (GIC, GRSIA, and KPA) respectively are limited partners in the First Defendant, the Port Fund L.P. (the Port Fund or the Fund), a Cayman Islands Limited partnership.

2. GIC is a Kuwait-based supranational corporation owned by the governments of the six member states of the Gulf Cooperation Council (Bahrain, Kuwait, Oman, Qatar, Saudi Arabia, and the UAE). GRSIA is a state owned enterprise responsible for administering the Qatari social security system. KPA is a state-owned enterprise responsible for administering Kuwait's commercial ports.

3. This was a contested application for disclosure of true and full information regarding the business and financial condition of the Port Fund under section 22 of the Exempted Limited Partnership Law (2018 Revision) (ELPL).

4. The Port Fund was set up in 2007 as a Cayman Islands exempted limited partnership for investments in port related assets around the world. The general partner in the Port Fund is the Second Defendant, Port Link GP Ltd. (the General Partner).

5. In January 2020 Christopher Rowland and Andrew Childe of FFP were appointed as directors of the General Partner[1] and they form the majority of the board of directors, with the third director being a Kuwaiti-based individual, Mr Alawadhi who has been on the board since 2010. The FFP directors have been guiding the response of the Fund to these proceedings. Ms Felicity Toube QC appeared for GIC and GRSIA. Mr David Allison QC appeared for KPA. Mr Tom Smith QC appeared for the Defendants.

6. Each of the Plaintiffs invested substantial monies into the Port Fund. KPA invested the largest amount which equalled at least 45% of the total commitments in the Fund. The total capital contributions into the Port Fund between 2007 and 2013 were US$188 million and together the Plaintiffs hold a majority ownership stake consisting of 61% of the total commitments.

7. KPA also has the support of the Kuwait Public Institution for Social Security (PIFSS) which brings the support of investors to approximately 80% of total commitments of the Fund. In fact if one disregards the limited partners said by the Plaintiffs to be connected to the Port Fund namely KGL Investment Company KSCC (KGLI) and Petrolink Holding Company KSCC (Petrolink)[2] the relief sought in this case is supported by limited partners whose investments amount to 95% of the total investments in the Fund.

8. Emerging Markets PE Management Ltd (formerly known as KGL Investment Cayman Ltd) acted as the Investment Manager of the Fund (the Investment Manager).

9. The term of the Fund has expired and it has been in wind down for over five years, exiting its investments. As such there are no ongoing investment activities.[3]

10. The Fund made a number of investments. The most significant return was received from an investment in Clark Global City, a major Greenfield airport infrastructure site in the Philippines. The Fund sold the project to third party. Pursuant to a Share Purchase Agreement dated 31 July 2017 and a Settlement Agreement dated 5 February 2019 (both agreements being governed by the laws of the Cayman Islands) a sum of US$496,429,777 was wired from the third party to the Fund's bank account in the name of the General Partner with the Noor Bank in Dubai on 14 November 2017. Noor Bank immediately froze this sum at the request of the Dubai authorities. The freezing of the funds is described in disclosure letters dated 27 February 2020 and 26 March 2020 provided by the Fund to the Plaintiffs.

[2] KGLI acted as the sponsor and placement agent of the Port Fund, was the controlling shareholder of the Investment Manager during the conduct of the investments of the Fund, Marsha Lazareva (ML) is the vice-chairman and CEO of KGLI and a former director of both the General Partner and the Investment Manager and Saeed Dashti (SD) was the chairman of the KGL group of companies and a director of the General Partner. ML was (at least at one time) also a director of Petrolink which is a subsidiary of KGLI.

Criminal proceedings in Kuwait

11. The court has been referred to evidence relating to ongoing criminal proceedings in Kuwait concerning ML and SD who held management positions at the General Partner and who dealt with the service providers managing the Fund's investments. On 11 November 2019 they were each convicted by a Kuwaiti court and sentenced to imprisonment for 15 years in connection with misappropriation of public funds. An appeal is apparently pending. They were also both convicted on 20 January 2020 in connection with embezzlement from KPA accounts with ML being sentenced to 7 years' imprisonment and SD to 10 years' imprisonment. Again, an appeal is apparently pending.

12. The court has also been referred to evidence of substantial payments made by the Fund to public relations and lobbying firms in the United States and elsewhere in support of the cases of ML and SD and to Baker Tilly which provided a report to assist the defence of the criminal proceedings. The FFP directors consider that there are questions which cause them concern about the Kuwaiti proceedings. These are raised by the Baker Tilly report and a Petition and Case Update provided to the UN working group on Arbitrary Detention, which they have reviewed.

13. The background to the freezing of the funds relating to Clark Global City is said to lie in the criminal investigations against SD and ML. It appears that the Kuwaiti government, acting by its Attorney General approached the Dubai government and sought the transfer a portion of the funds to KPA and PIFSS. The Fund submitted that the amount requested to be transferred was in excess of the entitlements of those investors. The matter was then escalated and was the subject of correspondence passing between the Prime Minister of Kuwait and the Ruler of Dubai to transfer lesser amounts to KPA and PIFSS. The FFP directors understand that it was made very clear to the Fund by the Dubai authorities that unless the Kuwait government's request was met to pay KPA and PIFSS, the Fund would not obtain the balance of the monies. The Fund submitted that it took the decision that it was in the best interests of investors to comply and obtained the release of the monies which the FFP directors consider resulted in KPA receiving more than its legal entitlement. The FFP directors consider that it may be necessary to pursue recourse against KPA in due course. In any event the full sum of US$496,429.777 was distributed by the Fund in February to April 2019.

The issues between the parties

14. The Plaintiffs have demanded from the Defendants 'true and full information regarding the state of the business and financial condition' of the Fund and have identified a number of specific categories of information that they require.

15. The reasons why KPA seeks the information are summarised at Al Sabah 2 at § 20 and are set out in Schedule 1 thereto which contains a helpful analysis of the requests made, the response given and any comments from KPA together with references to the Defendants' evidence and disclosure letter. In addition a draft order was submitted shortly prior to the hearing which identified the specific information demanded.

16. The Defendants take issue with a number of these requests on the basis that they are outside the scope of the originating summonses issued by GIC and KPA, are new and are not verified by affidavit evidence.

17. As I made clear at the hearing, the court is not going to embark on a line by line analysis of which requests should be met, if at all, and by when. Instead the court will determine the legal issues that have arisen between the parties in order that the points of principle can then inform the parties approach to the provision of the requested materials. If the parties cannot agree any particular items there will of course be liberty to seek further guidance from the court.

18. There are extensive allegations and counter allegations in the evidence submitted to the court[4] concerning the propriety of the conduct of various entities and individuals involved in dealings with assets belonging to the Fund and alleged irregularities. The court is not in a position to determine those matters and is not asked to do so.

19. The relevant dealings all preceded the appointment of the FFP directors who have relatively recently been appointed and have conducted some investigations into these matters. The relevance of this is that it forms the basis of the FFP directors' concern that without safeguards, the information that is demanded by the Plaintiffs might be misused for collateral purposes, including for use against service providers to the Fund and the requests might themselves be motivated by purposes other than to find out detailed information about the business and financial condition of the Fund.

20. It is accepted by Mr Smith QC that as limited partners in the Fund, the Plaintiffs are entitled to information about the Fund, but he says that the FFP directors are right to scrutinise the requests very carefully to be sure that they fall within the legal entitlements of the limited partners. They say they have requested what they say are reasonable safeguards and restrictions to be put in place in order that they and the Fund do not become embroiled in the contentious matters and criminal proceedings that have arisen in Kuwait and elsewhere, or in what is said to be a campaign waged against ML and SD and service providers to the Fund.

21. The Plaintiffs on the other hand are concerned that the financial affairs of the Fund have not been managed in an appropriate way by the General Partner and require information concerning the management of the investments made and the application of monies received by the Fund on the realisation of its investments. They argue that the concerns of the FFP directors are irrelevant to the Fund's obligation to provide the information demanded and that the safeguards and restrictions required by the General Partner are not necessary, reasonable or legitimate. They argue that any motive that the Plaintiffs may have is irrelevant to their right to demand true and full information which has been outstanding for a period of more than a year.

22. They base their right to this information on section 22 of the Exempted Limited Partnership Law (2018 Revision) (ELPL).

The legal framework

23. It is agreed that the Fund is subject to the provisions of the ELPL.

24. An exempted limited partnership consists of a general partner and one or more limited partners: section 4 (2). A limited partner is prohibited from taking part in the conduct of the business of the partnership: section 14(1). It is the general partner that enters into all the communications, contract, deeds and instruments on behalf of the limited partnership: section 14(2).

25. It is agreed that the general partner in this case carried out the obligations and duties necessary for the business of the Fund on behalf of the limited partners.

26. Any rights or property of every description (including all choses in action) and any right to make capital calls or receive the proceeds thereof that is conveyed to vested in or held on behalf of the general partner(s) or in the name of the exempted limited partnership is held by the general partner(s) on trust as an asset of the exempted limited partnership in accordance with the terms of the partnership agreement: section 16(1).

27. Any debt or obligation incurred by a general partner(s) in the conduct of the business of an exempted limited partnership is a debt or obligation of the exempted limited partnership: section 16 (2).

28. Section 21 of the ELPL deals with the maintenance of books of account for the partnership:

> "(1) A general partner shall keep or cause to be kept proper books of account including, where applicable, material underlying documentation including contracts and invoices, with respect to-
>
> a) all sums of money received and expended by the exempted limited partnership and matters in respect of which the receipt of expenditure takes place;
>
> b) all sales and purchases of goods by the exempted limited partnership; and
> c) the assets and liabilities of the exempted limited partnership.

(2) For the purposes of subsection (1), proper books of account shall not be deemed to be kept if there are not kept such books as are necessary to give a true and fair view of the business and financial condition of the exempted limited partnership and to explain its transactions.

29. Section 22 provides that:

"Subject to any express or implied term of the partnership agreement, each limited partner may demand and shall receive from a general partner true and full information regarding the state of the business and financial condition of the exempted limited partnership".

30. The contractual rights and obligations of the general partner and the limited partners are set out in the Fund's Limited Partnership Agreement dated 22 March 2007 (as amended and restated on 24 July 2008) (LPA).

31. Clause 3.3 of the LPA provides:

"Limited Partners shall have no right to, and shall not, take part in the management or control of the Partnership's business or act for or bind the Partnership provided that the Limited Partners shall have all of the rights, powers and privileges granted to the Limited Partners in this Agreement and, where not inconsistent with the terms of this Agreement, under the Partnership Law."

32. Clause 7.1 of the LPA provides:

"Appropriate records and books of account of the Partnership shall be kept by the Partnership at the principal place of business of the General Partner, and each Partner shall have access to the records and books of account and the right to receive copies thereof under such reasonable conditions and restrictions as the General Partner may prescribe".

33. Clause 7.2(a) provides that audited accounts shall be prepared, and mailed to each limited partner "As soon as reasonably practicable after the end of each Fiscal Year (but in any event no later than 90 calendar days thereafter)".

34. Clause 7.3 (Confidentiality) provides as follows:

"Each of the Partners shall, and shall direct those of its directors, officers, partners, members, employees, attorneys, accountants, consultants and advisers (the "Representatives") who have access to Confidential Information to, keep confidential and not disclose any Confidential Information without the express consent, in the case of Confidential Information acquired from the Partnership, of the Partnership... 'Confidential Information' shall mean any information, including the identity of any Partner, that a Partner may acquire from the Partnership, any Portfolio Company or Subsidiary thereof..."

The parties' submissions on the law

35. Ms Toube QC, supported by Mr Allison QC, submitted that whilst the Plaintiffs have good cause for concern about the management of the Fund which have led the Plaintiffs to seek extensive documents and information, it is not necessary for the Plaintiffs to prove any wrongdoing on the part of the Fund or the General Partner, or even that they have a reasonable suspicion of wrongdoing. It is for that reason that the court is not required or invited to reach any findings of fact on these questions, which can only be relevant background to explain the reason why the applications have been made.

36. Moreover, she submitted that there is no requirement under section 22 ELPL for a limited partner to even identify the reasons why it wishes to demand and receive true and full information.

37. The one reported Cayman Islands case on section 22 ELPL is the recent decision of Mangatal J in Dorsey Ventures 2019 (1) CILR 249.

38. The limited partner in Dorsey demanded information from the general partner which included a detailed breakdown of the nature of and justification for various transactions along with supporting documents such as bank statements contracts and invoices (see paragraph 13).[5]

39. The general partner in Dorsey argued that the Amended Limited Partnership Agreement (LPA) in that case expressly conferred on the limited partner the rights to receive audited accounts and unaudited quarterly accounts from the general partner (see paragraph 25) and so it was argued the parties had impliedly excluded any more general right to information which might otherwise exist under section 22 ELPL (see paragraph 27).

40. This argument was rejected by the Judge. At paragraph 36 of the Judgment, Mangatal J held that there was nothing in the wording of the LPA which was inconsistent with an overriding general right to information under section 22 ELPL.

41. In particular the fact that a clause (15.3) in the LPA required the provision of the accounts to the limited partners could not be said to modify the obligation under section 22:

> "The fact that the Amended LPA at clause 15.3 provides for and addresses the subject of the furnishing of accounts is not the same thing as the topic dealt with under section 22 of the ELP, which is the limited partner's right to demand and receive from a general partner true and full information regarding the state of the business and the financial condition of the exempted limited partnership. The right to demand and receive true and full information, in my view is wide, and encompasses more than accounts, audited or unaudited."- (Paragraph 37).

[5] It included a requirement to disclose supporting documentation for 224 line items of transactions.

42. Mangatal J also made reference to section 21 ELPL which contains the obligation of the general partner to keep material underlying documentation, including contracts and invoices with respect to all sums of money received and expended by the exempted limited partnership.

43. She observed at paragraph 38:

"Section 21 of the ELP provides for the keeping of detailed accounts and information and documentation. It seems obvious to me, that, in relation to the Amended LPA [the general partner] is bound expressly to keep books of account in accordance with the ELP. Unless the amended LPA said expressly that the limited partner is not entitled to true and full information, then the limited partner has the right under the governing law, the ELP, to such information".

44. She held that there was no basis for the implication of a term that the limited partners' right to demand information under section 22 should be excluded (see paragraphs 39-43).

45. She therefore ordered the general partner to provide the information sought, which included documents which did not already exist and had to be created to provide breakdowns into specified categories and schedules relating to certain costs and expenses in order to comply with section 22.

46. Ms Toube QC referred to the more limited rights of inspection of a partnership's books under English law where there is no equivalent to the section 22 provision. Ms Toube QC submitted that even in the more circumscribed English law regime, a partner's statutory right to inspect the partnership books is absolute and his motives are irrelevant: see Lindley and Banks on Partnership 20th edition paragraph 22.16 where it is said that the court has no discretion to refuse appropriate relief because the statutory right of inspection is an absolute one and the motives and indeed bona fides of the partners seeking to exercise it will be irrelevant.

47. Ms Toube QC also relied on Inversiones [2012] Bus LR 1136 where a dissatisfied investor sought to obtain various documents from the general partner of the limited partnership. The general partner and investment manager submitted:

".. the present application is a blatant attempt to trawl through [the general partner's] and [investment manager's] day-to-day operational documents with a view to enabling [the limited partner] and their appointed forensic accountants to prepare a claim against [the investment manager], and that the mounting of litigation is not a legitimate purpose for which to seek the inspection of documents or the provision of information".

48. This was rejected at paragraph 26 by Norris J:

"In my judgment the question of motive or purpose is irrelevant to the exercise of a statutory right of access to the partnership books. I accept the proposition (stated in Lindley & Banks on Partnership para 22.16) that because the statutory right of inspection is expressed in unqualified terms the motives and bona fides of the partner seeking to exercise it will be irrelevant".

49. At paragraph 27 Norris J observed by reference to Trego [1896] AC 7 that even if a limited partner were to seek to access the documents for an unlawful purpose, this did not entitle the partnership to restrict access to the information.

50. Ms Toube QC pointed out that the Cayman Islands position is even stronger because, by virtue of section 19(2) of the ELPL, unlike the position in England, it is stated that:

"Subject to any express provisions of the partnership agreement to the contrary, a limited partner of an exempted limited partnership in that capacity does not owe any fiduciary duty in exercising any of its rights or authorities or otherwise in performing any of its obligations under the partnership agreement to the exempted limited partnership or any other partner."

51. It follows from this decision, the Plaintiffs say, that as a matter of statutory interpretation there is an entitlement to demand and receive all of the books and records maintained by the general partner pursuant to the statutory obligation imposed on it under section 21, and there is no proper basis for the General Partner to contend that any of the categories of information and documentation fall outside the operation of section 22 ELPL, as interpreted in the Dorsey case. They submit that I should follow the Dorsey case unless it was shown to be plainly wrong.

52. Mr Tom Smith QC for the Defendants submitted that in the case of a limited partnership, it is the LPA which contains the agreement between the parties as to how the limited partnership is to be constituted and managed. Thus, in the case of rights to the provision of information, in the first instance it is the terms of the LPA which sets out what the parties agreed and their respective rights and obligations in this regard.

53. In the present case, clauses 7.1 to 7.3 of the LPA set out carefully delineated rights to information and corresponding duties to provide information with the inclusion of appropriate safeguards and restrictions in relation to confidentiality.

54. He submitted that the provisions of the LPA do not exclude the application of section 22 ELPL. Section 22 ELPL sets out the general principle that a limited partner is entitled to information about the state of business and financial condition of the partnership but this general principle is subject to what the partnership parties actually agree in the LPA. In the present case, clauses 7.1 and 7.3 contain the parties' agreement as to how that principle is to be satisfied in relation to the Fund.

55. He skilfully dealt with Dorsey on the basis that although Mangatal J appeared to consider that section 22 gave rise to an overriding general right to information beyond what was provided under the terms of the LPA, that decision (whilst it may have been right on the facts of that case) should be seen to be a decision where the LPA itself only provided for limited partners to have limited rights to information, that is to say, only to receive annual audited accounts plus a quarterly report including unaudited accounts. The LPA did not require production of books and records (see paragraph 33) which is unlike the present case where it does. The decision was 'probably right', Mr Smith QC submitted because section 22 ELPL may have a role to play where the terms of the LPA did not satisfy the requirement to provide true and full information.

56. He argued that in the present case clauses 7.1 to 7.3 taken together do provide a comprehensive scheme for the provision of information and 'occupy the field'. There is no room or basis for resort to be had to section 22 ELPL itself.

57. Moreover, he argued that clause 7.1 explicitly sets out the parties' agreement relating to the provision of records and books of account and is subject to "such reasonable conditions and restrictions as the general partner may prescribe". He says it would be odd if that explicit restriction could be evaded and ignored by limited partners simply seeking to have resort to the general terms of section 22 ELPL without regard to what had been agreed in the LPA.

58. He also relied on Inversiones for the proposition that the test as to what the limited partners were entitled to receive was a 'functional' one which depends on the facts of the case (see paragraph 23(K)).

59. The General Partner acting by the FFP directors is concerned that information provided to the Plaintiffs might be misused, including being used for purposes other than informing themselves about the affairs of the Fund. The Defendants argue that the confidentiality restriction at clause 7.3 of the LPA would be very difficult to police and enforce, particularly given the location of the parties and the conduct would take place abroad.

60. Mr Rowland and Mr Childe are experienced office holders and constitute the majority on the board of the General Partner. They have carefully considered the limited partners' demands against the wider background and context. Mr Smith QC therefore contended that the General Partner seeks to impose, in the exercise of its discretion afforded to it by the LPA, reasonable restrictions and conditions on the provision of information and documentation so that each of the Plaintiffs undertake to this court that without the consent of the General Partner or further order they will use the information and documentation provided only for the purpose of informing themselves about the affairs of the Fund and not for any other purpose.

61. Mr Smith QC submitted that in doing so the FFP directors seek to achieve a balance.

He says that the limited partners' rights to receive information are not unlimited and unfettered and it is not unreasonable to undertake that they will only use the information for the purposes of informing themselves about the affairs of the Fund.

62. Mr Smith QC argues that there will be no prejudice in the Plaintiffs having to provide such an undertaking.

63. In support of his construction of the relevant provisions of the LPA and his 'occupy the field' argument he relies upon the Interpretation of Contracts Sixth Edition by Sir Kim Lewison at page 378:

"Where a contract contains general provisions and specific provisions, the specific provisions will be given greater weight than the general provisions where the facts to which the contract is to be applied fall within the scope of the specific provisions".

64. He also referred to an extract from Hansard dated 10 April 2014 where the second reading of the Exempted Limited Partnership Bill 2014 was said to meet the key objective of:

"..The market led demand that the law does not unduly restrict the ability of partners to determine for themselves by agreement their rights and obligations as between themselves", among other objectives.

65. Finally, as far as clause 7.2 is concerned, the Fund's 2017 Accounts, which have been audited and finalised, are in the process of being provided and the 2018 and 2019 Accounts should be provided sequentially within the next month or two.

66. Ms Toube QC, supported by Mr Allison QC, resists the undertaking on the basis that there is no warrant for it. They argued that Mr Smith QC's analysis of how the provisions fit together is wrong and his construction of section 7.1 is also wrong.

67. They argue that the restrictions which are prescribed in clause 7.1 simply deal with the practical side of providing the information and give no right to allow the General Partner to impose conditions or restrictions on use and do not require an undertaking in that regard. Use should in effect be unfettered, save that the limited partner would not be able to use material provided in order to harm the partnership.

68. As to prejudice to the Plaintiffs of the undertaking sought by the Defendants, they argue that to have to seek the consent of the General Partner and then the court is an unnecessary hurdle and would cause further delay and disputes. They submit that the General Partner should not be permitted to 're-write' the contract whereby they agreed to provide information consistent with the statutory right conferred by section 22 ELPL. There is no balancing of interests to be done by the General Partner as between the limited partners and the third parties which it is seeking to protect because the Plaintiffs contend that the General Partner owes no duties to the third parties but only to the limited partners.

69. They submit that Mr Smith QC's reliance on Hansard is misplaced because the relevant Law was created years before the extract was relied upon and the reliance on Lewison bolsters the Plaintiffs' case rather than the Defendants.

70. Mr Smith QC had also contended for the General Partner that there were certain categories of documents and information falling within the application which are subject to confidentiality obligations under contracts entered into with third parties. An application has therefore been made pursuant to section 4 of the Confidential Information Disclosure Law (2016 Revision) (CIDL) for relief to enable the General Partner to provide these materials.

71. The Plaintiffs argue that this application is unnecessary. In the event that the court makes an order for the provision of the information requested, it is clear from the terms of section 3(1)(j) of CIDL that "disclosure of confidential information in accordance with or pursuant to a right or duty created by any law... shall not constitute a breach of the duty of confidence and shall not be actionable at the suit of any person."

72. They rely on the analysis of Kawaley J in re XYZ Ltd (unreported) 12 February 2019, in which he rejected any suggestion that there was a need to seek directions under section 4(2) of CIDL in circumstances where the parties are able to demonstrate that they complied with a court order to produce confidential information. They submit that the court should not concern itself with the CIDL application as any order in favour of the Plaintiffs pursuant to section 22 ELPL will address any concerns. Moreover, there is in any event a real issue as to whether section 4 of CIDL applies as it is restricted to circumstances in which a person is 'giving evidence in proceedings' which is not the situation in the present case.

73. To complete the scope of the submissions there are also issues relating to legal privilege raised by the General Partner to avoid the provision of certain categories of information and certain working papers are refused for certain other categories of information sought.

Analysis

74. The proper meaning, application and effect of section22 ELPL is important to the outcome of this application. If the court decides that section 22 ELPL is a free standing, unqualified, provision expressed in mandatory terms, then the only basis for resisting the requests would be if the General Partner could establish that the statutory obligation has been cut down or modified by the express terms of the LPA. On the other hand if the LPA 'occupies the field' in the way suggested by Mr Smith QC, then that will govern the provision of information on the basis of the interpretation of the LPA agreed by the parties and there is no room for resort to be had to section 22 ELPL.

75. In addition, the question of what, if any, restrictions (by way of the undertaking sought) should be imposed as a result of the FFP directors' concerns arise, as do the issues with confidentiality, legal privilege and working papers.

76. As I indicated at the hearing, although I heard submissions on the detailed requests made, I will give my decisions on the questions posed on this application as a matter of principle following which the parties should be in a position to agree the application of those principles to the numerous categories of documents in dispute and in due course agree an Order.

Decision on the legal issues

The ELPL

77. My interpretation of sections 16, 19, 21 and 22 of the ELPL and the way they apply in this case is as follows.

78. Section 16 makes clear that all rights and property of the Fund are held by the general partner on trust as an asset of the Fund in accordance with the terms of the LPA.

> Any rights or property of every description of the exempted limited partnership, including all choses in action and any right to make capital calls and receive the proceeds thereof that is conveyed to or vested in or held on behalf of any one or more of the general partners or which is conveyed into or vested in the name of the exempted limited partnership shall be held or deemed to be held by the general partner and if more than one then by the general partners jointly, upon trust as an asset of the exempted limited partnership in accordance with the terms of the partnership agreement. (section 16(1))
> Any debt or obligation incurred by a general partner in the conduct of the business of an exempted limited partnership shall be a debt or obligation of the exempted limited partnership. (section 16(2))

79. It is clear that section 19 (1) of the ELPL provides a one-way obligation for the General Partner to act in good faith at all times in the interests of the partnership subject to any express provision of the LPA to the contrary.

> "A general partner shall act at all times in good faith and, subject to any express provisions of the partnership agreement to the contrary, in the interests of the exempted limited partnership".

80. I say 'one- way' because there is express recognition in section 19 (2) that a limited partner does not owe any fiduciary duty in exercising any of its rights under the LPA to any other partner.

"Subject to any express provisions of the partnership agreement to the contrary, a limited partner of an exempted limited partnership in that capacity does not owe any fiduciary duty in exercising any of its rights or authorities or otherwise in performing any of its obligations under the partnership agreement to the exempted limited partnership or any other partner."

81. Section 21 (1), imposes an obligation on the General Partner to keep proper books of account and material underlying documentation, including contracts and invoices, concerning money received and expended, sales and purchases and assets and liabilities of the partnership. I follow Mangatal J's reasoning in Dorsey in this regard.

82. Section 21 (2) deems that proper books of account will not be kept if these are not sufficient to give a true and fair view of the business and financial condition of the partnership and to explain its transactions.

83. Section 22 is a different obligation from section 21. It is in its terms broader and requires provision of more than accounting information:

> "Subject to any express or implied term of the partnership agreement, each limited partner may demand and shall receive from a general partner true and full information regarding the state of the business and financial condition of the exempted limited partnership."

84. Again, I follow Mangatal J's reasoning in Dorsey on this. On a plain and natural reading of section 22 it provides the Plaintiffs with an entitlement to demand and receive true and full information regarding the business and financial affairs of the partnership.

85. This makes logical commercial sense as they are partners in the business and its financial affairs are managed on their behalf. They have in effect paid for all of the activity undertaken on their behalf pursuant to which they require true and full information.

86. It is a very wide unqualified provision and will include all of the books and records maintained by the General Partner pursuant to the statutory obligation imposed on it under section 21. However it is wider than section 21 as it requires information to be provided, not just documents, and the information needs to be 'true and full', not 'true and fair' as is the case under section 21, which only deals with books and records of account.

87. To adopt Mr Smith QC's phrase, section 22 'occupies the field', not clause 7.1 of the LPA which is limited, as is section 21, to keeping and providing proper books and records of account.

What do the Plaintiffs have to show and are their intentions relevant?

88. I accept the Plaintiffs' submissions that there is no requirement for a limited partner to provide its reasons for the demand. It is only if there is a proper basis for contending that any of the categories of information demanded fall outside the operation of section 22 ELPL that the Plaintiffs claim would fail. That would only be in cases where it is clear that the information sought did not relate to the business and financial affairs of the partnership, which is a very wide target to aim at.

89. Reliance on Hansard and Lewison does not assist the Defendants in this case. As to Hansard it is clear the provision which is now section 22 ELPL was introduced into Cayman law before the extract relied upon. It existed previously in the former section 12.

90. As to Lewison, I do not accept Mr Smith QC's submission because we are not dealing with a general confidentiality provision on use which is not to take precedence over a specific provision on use. On a proper construction of the LPA there is no restriction on use in relation to information provided relating to the books and records and accounting material, so the argument does not apply.

91. In any event the sentence, "Such Confidential Information may be used by a Partner only in connection with Partnership matters" in clause 7.3 is what the limited partners intend to do and does not restrict them in the way the Defendants contend.

92. I accept the Plaintiffs' submissions that any irregularities in the management of the Fund by the General Partner are also strictly irrelevant to the Plaintiffs' statutory rights to the information they demand. The backdrop of the suggested wrongdoing in Mr Al-Sabah's evidence is of no relevance to their entitlement. I note that the disputed evidence of Mr Childe at paragraphs 74 - 100 of his First Affidavit in FSD 235 of 2019 denies any suggestion that anything irregular or unlawful has occurred in the administration of the Fund, (although of course he is unable to any give first-hand evidence and relies on Mr Alwadhi[6]), but it is not necessary to consider that evidence for the purpose of this exercise.

93. Similarly the evidence given by Mr Childe at paragraphs 19, 20, 28 to 32 and 45 to 52 of the same affidavit which deals with various collateral or ulterior motives alleged against the Plaintiffs for bringing this application are of no relevance: see paragraph 26 Inversiones per Norris J.

94. The Plaintiffs accept they cannot require or use information to harm the Fund. The Fund is in exit mode. They seek the information in order to, among other things, consider exercising claims against third parties which would realise assets for the Fund.

[6] Objection is taken to this evidence by Mr Allison QC on the basis that it does not comply with GCR O.41, r.5 and Mr Childe has no first hand knowledge of what he says. It is not necessary to resolve this point.

The LPA

95. Unless the provisions of the LPA modify or cut down the wide and otherwise unqualified obligation in section 22 ELPL, it should be applied and the concerns of the FFP directors are irrelevant.

96. In this regard, I follow the reasoning of Norris J in Inversiones [at paragraphs 25 and 26].

97. As to Clause 7.1 of the LPA, this obliges the General Partner to keep appropriate records and books of account and affords each partner the right to have access and the right to receive copies under such reasonable conditions and restrictions as the General Partner may prescribe. This provision is consistent with section 21 of the ELPL.

98. It is distinct from and does not qualify section 22 ELPL, which is on its terms a wider statutory obligation to provide true and full information regarding the state of the business and financial condition of the partnership:

> "7.1 Appropriate records and books of account of the Partnership shall be kept by the Partnership at the principal place of business of the General Partner, and each Partner shall have access to the records and books of account and the right to receive copies thereof under such reasonable conditions and restrictions as the General Partner may prescribe". [my emphasis]

99. Giving those words their ordinary and natural meaning, it seems to me that the General Partner can impose conditions and restrictions for access and the provision of copies as a matter of the practicalities of complying with the obligation. That is, what the ordinary meaning of 'have access' and 'the right to receive copies' means. It does not mean use of the material accessed, copied and received. That is also consistent with giving effect to the word 'under' in conjunction with such reasonable conditions and restrictions as may be prescribed. This is all in the context, as can be seen from the opening words of clause 7.1, of the right of partners to gain access to and obtain copies of the books and records of account at the place of business of the General Partner. The reasonable conditions and restrictions extend only to practicalities.

100. It does not seem to me to provide the General Partner with a separate and distinct right to require the kind of condition that is sought in this case by way of an undertaking on use. Such a right would need to be expressed in clear and unambiguous terms.

101. In fact there is no provision as to the use of information provided in the LPA except as provided for in clause 7.3 which imposes duties of confidentiality on the Plaintiffs in respect of a very wide range of information:

"Each of the Partners shall, and shall direct those of its directors, officers, partners, members, employees, attorneys, accountants, consultants and advisers (the "Representatives") who have access to Confidential Information to, keep confidential and not disclose any Confidential Information without the express consent, in the case of Confidential Information acquired from the Partnership, of the Partnership, or, in the case of Confidential Information acquired from another Partner, such other Partner, unless (a) such disclosure shall be required by applicable law governmental rule or regulation, court order, administrative or arbitral proceeding or by any bank regulatory authority having jurisdiction over such Limited Partner, (b) such disclosure is reasonably required in connection with any litigation against or involving the Partnership or any Partner .

Such Confidential Information may be used by a Partner only in connection with Partnership matters*; provided, that this sentence shall not prohibit any Partner from making other passive investments without disclosing to third parties such Confidential Information.* 'Confidential Information' shall mean any information, including the identity of any Partner, that a Partner may acquire from the Partnership, any Portfolio Company or Subsidiary thereof or, as a consequence of being a Partner in the Partnership, from another Partner other than information that (i) is already available through publicly available sources of information (other than as a result of disclosure by such Partner) (ii) was available to a Partner on a non confidential basis prior to its disclosure to such Partner by the Partnership or (iii) becomes available to a Partner on a non confidential basis from third party ...." [my emphasis]

102. That represents the extent of the regime agreed by the parties in the LPA as to the use of information once provided. I do not consider that there is any basis for requiring the Plaintiffs to agree to any further or other restrictions or conditions on use of information to be provided.

Working papers and legal privilege

103. There is no condition in the ELPL or the LPA relating to working papers or material which is covered by legal privilege. As a matter of Cayman law, a general partner cannot assert privilege against a limited partner unless the legal advice itself concerns a dispute with a limited partner: Re Torchlight (unreported McMillan J 26 February 2016). Where a general partner seeks legal advice for the benefit of the partnership, rather than for its own benefit in litigation against the other partners, the general partner will not be entitled to assert privilege against the limited partner [paragraphs 40-42].

104. As to working papers, there is nothing in section 22 ELPL (or the LPA) that suggest that there is any limitation to be placed on the information that is required to be provided if it is to satisfy the 'true and full' requirement.

CIDL

105. No separate CIDL order under section 4 is required because the Order in the present case for the General Partner to provide the information demanded will provide sufficient protection under section 3(1)(j). I follow Kawaley J's reasoning in re XYZ in this regard.

106. The court was told by Mr Smith QC that the 2017 accounts as audited were provided shortly before the hearing and they contain a lot of information about matters which have been the subject of questions from the limited partners. The audited 2018 and 2019 accounts were to follow in the next few weeks. The sooner this can be achieved the better.

assets according to a statutory scheme[78]; the creditors in a sense give up their rights to enforce their claims for a share in the assets of the company as administered by the liquidator.

D. Dispositions of property[79]

1. Compulsory winding up

7-009 Although the company's ownership of its property is in no way affected by winding up, its powers of dealing with that property are severely restricted. Section 127 avoids any disposition of property of the company[80] made after the commencement of winding up, unless the court otherwise orders. Section 129, which was discussed earlier in the chapter, is critical to the operation of s.127. The commencement date will, most often, be the date of the presentation of the petition to wind up, but in some cases it can be earlier than that. For example, if a resolution to wind up was passed before the presentation of the petition then the commencement date will be, assuming that a winding-up order is eventually made, the date of the resolution,[81] thereby making the interim period during which dispositions may be set aside longer.

The section addresses cases where assets legally owned by a company in winding up are disposed of. The section is necessary to enable the company to recover them, by treating the disposition as void.[82] The provision covered the case where the company's property was held by a director or an agent and the director or agent disposes of the property to some third party.[83]

Section 127 is only a relatively brief provision but it has spawned a large number of cases. As with many issues of liquidation law, I am not able to deal with all of the cases and can only deal with some issues in passing. The book majors on the leading cases and the appellate decisions.

Section 127 is the liquidation equivalent of bankruptcy's s.284, but we must note the observation in the judgment in Re Flint[84] that the two sections are in different terms and so one cannot approach s.127 with the assumption that it is designed to achieve the same outcome as s.284 and vice versa. One cannot, necessarily, apply a case decided under one section to the other section.[85] However, some cases dealing with one section will be relevant to the other section.

7-010 While s.127 is most relevant when it comes to insolvent companies, it is not limited to insolvent companies. "Property" is defined widely in s.436[86] as including > "money, goods, things in action, land and every description of property wherever situated and also obligations and every description of interest, whether present or future or vested or contingent, arising out of, or incidental to, property".

It is said that s.127 is one of a group of provisions the purpose of which is to ensure that the assets are divided rateably among the creditors.[87] According to Lord Cairns, the particular object of one of the precursors of s.127 was to > "prevent during the period which must elapse before a petition is heard the improper alienation and dissipation of the property of a company in extremis".[88]

The section, as indicated by Lord Cairns' word, is probably better characterised merely as a provision which takes away from the company the right to dispose of its own property.[89] This retained property will be used to pay off creditors, but the distribution may not be rateable as liquidation expenses have to be paid and preferential creditors and others might be able to have priority to payment. Nevertheless, a subsidiary purpose of the section might be seen as ensuring that the scheme of distribution provided for under legislation is maintained.

7-011 Moving to the actual wording of the section, "void" in the context of s.127 does not mean "voidable" but means, according to the majority of the New South Wales Court of Appeal in National Acceptance Corp Pty Ltd v Benson[90] (when considering the then Australian counterpart of s.127, namely s.368 of the Companies Act 1981), void for all purposes related to or incidental to the administration of the winding up.[91] Although not referring to the New South Wales case, the view espoused in that case has been accepted as correct in England, in the case of Mond v Hammond and Suddards.[92] The disposition rendered void is void at the time it took place.[93] It has been held that the Crown was not affected by the operation of a precursor of s.127.[94] It has also been held that the avoidance of a disposition cannot retrospectively cause a sale of property to constitute conversion.[95] The avoidance also cannot make a person to whom property has been sold a constructive trustee for the proceeds of the sale.[96] A payment by the company within the period regulated by s.127 is not void if it was made with the purpose of providing the company with profits.[97] Also, if a receiver disposes of assets subject to the charge under which he or she is operating, s.127 does not apply to the disposal.[98] The provision does not in itself provide the liquidator with any cause of action against the directors of the company which has made the disposition.[99]

If a disposition of company property is void under s.127, who is entitled to the recovered property if a secured creditor has a charge over the company's assets? The South Australian case of Campbell v Michael Mount PPB[100] dealt with the situation where a company made a payment to a creditor after the petition to wind it up had been presented. Under Australian law as it stood at the time (it has since changed), the payment was void under the counterpart of s.127. When the court ordered the company to be wound up, the floating charge of a secured creditor crystallised and a receiver was appointed by the secured creditor. The creditor who received the payment paid the amount to the receiver and when sued by the liquidator for the payment the creditor argued that the payment to the receiver discharged the creditor's liability. At first instance, in the Supreme Court of South Australia, it was held that the right of action to recover the payment was property of the company subject to the charge of the secured creditor, and that the receiver had the power to give a valid discharge of the creditor's obligation to repay the money. The liquidator appealed successfully to the Full Court of the Supreme Court. A majority of the Court (Doyle CJ and Matheson J) took the view that once money had been paid by a company, it ceased to be the property of the company, and the company ceased to have any rights to the money.[101] Avoidance did not re-vest title to the money in the company.[102] When the money was recovered it was not property of the company to which the charge of a secured creditor attached; the claim in this case did not involve an assertion by the secured creditor that there had been a disposition of property by the company which infringed the creditor's security.[103] The majority held that the same principles that applied to the avoidance of preferences applied to dispositions made void under the equivalent of s.127.[104] As a consequence, any property recovered belongs to the liquidator for the unsecured creditors unless the property was regarded as specific and identifiable.[105] In the case at hand the court said that the payment made to the secured creditor was a payment to which the liquidator had a right.

However, in England the opposite approach was adopted by HH Judge Kolbert (sitting as a High Court judge) in Mond v Hammond Suddards.[106] In this case the company which was in liquidation, R Ltd, had created a floating charge in favour of B. A petition was brought against R Ltd by H and, prior to the making of a winding-up order, R Ltd paid the amount owed to H by way of two payments. The liquidator of R Ltd, when appointed, claimed the sum paid to H on the basis that the payments by the company to H were void under s.127. H came to a compromise with the liquidator and paid him £4,500. B appointed administrative receivers and they claimed the sum paid to the liquidator because the payments made to H were dispositions of company property, and the payment of the compromise amount represented company property to which they were entitled on the behalf of their appointor. As with Campbell v Michael Mount PPB, the central issue seemed to be: are the unsecured creditors or the debenture holder entitled to any funds recovered under s.127? HH Judge Kolbert pointed out that the payments made by the company to H were not set aside under s.127 and the liquidator did not get the money as part of a s.127 recovery, rather they came as part of a compromise.[107] The judge rejected the contention of H that the administrative receivers had no standing to bring an action to have a disposition declared void.[108] Unlike the South Australian Full Court, the learned judge distinguished the case before him from the case where a preference is recovered.[109] Judge Kolbert said that as the payments by the company to H were void the moneys always were that of the company and were accordingly subject to the charge. He ordered that the payment made to the liquidator be handed to the receivers.

7-012 Where a company disposes of property in the ordinary course of business, it ceases to be property subject to the charge and becomes the property of the disponee. Professor James O'Donovan has submitted, with some force, it is contended, that it is only where there is a disposition outside of the ordinary course of business and where the disponee is unable to claim to be a bona fide purchaser for value without notice that the chargeholder should be entitled to the property disposed of.[110] With respect, Mond v Hammond Suddards should be distinguished from Campbell v Michael Mount PPB on the facts on one of two bases. First, in the former case, H could not be regarded as a bona fide purchaser for value without notice as it presented the relevant winding-up petition. It is submitted that if H had not done so, and could not be said to have known about the winding-up petition, any sum recovered should not have been available to the secured creditor. Secondly, as Judge Kolbert himself pointed out,[111] in the case before him, there was no recovery pursuant to s.127; what occurred was a compromise and the administrative receivers were merely seeking to recover the fruit of the compromise. It may, of course, be said that the compromise only occurred because the liquidator sought to invoke s.127.

If a receiver disposes of company property that is subject to a charge, the action of the receiver would not be avoided under s.127 as there is not a disposition within the meaning of the provision.[112]

Of course, while s.127 states that a disposition is void, it is usually of no import unless proceedings are taken in the court to obtain a declaration that the disposition is in fact void. Is anyone other than the liquidator able to take these proceedings? According to the decision in Campbell v Michael Mount PPB,[113] the answer appears to be "no", although others are not stopped from relying on the avoidance effect of s.127.[114] But in Mond v Hammond Suddards, Judge Kolbert said that s.127 "imposes no limit on who is able to bring proceedings to have a disposition made after commencement of winding-up order declared void …".[115] However, there does not appear to be any other English authority which adopts such a wide view. In Power v Brown,[116] Gabriel Moss QC (sitting as a deputy judge of the High Court) said in that in an appropriate case s.284 (the bankruptcy equivalent of s.127) could be relied on by parties other than the bankruptcy trustee.[117] It might be said that if Judge Kolbert was not correct, then a disposition which was made within the relevant time might not be recovered if the liquidator was inactive. However, that fails to acknowledge that a secured creditor could apply under s.168(5) to ask a court to review the liquidator's failure to take action.

7-013 Before moving on to look at the constituent parts of s.127, it is to be noted that s.127(2) provides an exception to the application of the provision just discussed. This subsection was introduced by the Enterprise Act 2002. It covers the kind of case highlighted by Re J Smiths Haulage Ltd,[118] where an administrator was appointed subsequent to the presentation of a petition to wind up and disposed of company property without knowledge of the petition. It was said that such a disposition was not void under s.127 as the effect of the administrator's appointment was, according to para.40 of Sch.B1 of the Act, to suspend the petition and this was subject to s.127(2).

There are, essentially, three elements to s.127:

- there was a disposition of property;
- the disposition occurred after the commencement of the winding up; and
- the court has not made an order that the disposition is not void.

These elements together with other important issues relevant to s.127 are discussed below.

7-014 (a) Disposition of property It follows from what has been said of the purpose of this provision that the words "disposition of property" in s.127 are to be given a wide meaning.[119] Recently HH Judge Matthews (sitting as a High Court judge) in

Officeserve Technologies Ltd v Anthony-Mike[120] said that disposition of property covers the "destruction, or at least the reduction in value, of a property right belonging to the company, causing an immediate and equivalent accrual in value to another person …".[121] His Lordship in fact interpreted disposition of property quite broadly in his judgment, and he stated that he felt in some decisions the expression had been overly restricted in its perceived scope.[122] The expression has been held specifically to cover sale,[123] encumbrance,[124] transfer, and alienation[125] of a company's property, the surrender of a lease or the giving up of contractual rights,[126] release of contractual rights,[127] the cancellation of a charge on property,[128] as well as payments of money by the company,[129] though it does not extend to a disposition of property belonging to a third party[130] except to the extent that such a disposition affects an interest possessed therein by the company itself.[131] Nor does it extend to the passing of a resolution increasing the authorised share capital and the consequential allotment of shares,[132] the completion of a specifically enforceable contract[133] or the forfeiture of a joint venturer's interest in a joint venture to the other joint venturers.[134] HH Judge Matthews has said that it does not cover "mere efluxion of time of a wasting asset, such as a lease. Nor is it apt to cover deliberate consumption or waste by the company of its assets".[135] The South Australian Supreme Court has held that a payment into court is not a disposition, despite the fact that the company does not retain any legal interest in the money. will only exist where the company has a beneficial interest in the money at the time of payment out.[136]

The word "disposition" does not extend to the process by which a person with a beneficial interest in the property of a company, such as a bank with a fixed and floating charge over its assets, obtains that property, or the proceeds of the sale of that property[137]; therefore there is no disposition when the company only holds the legal interest in property but the beneficial ownership is vested elsewhere. Nor does it cover its process of realisation after crystallisation of the charge. In Re French's Wine Bar Ltd,[138] Vinelott J held that s.127 did not apply in relation to an unconditional contract entered into before and completed after the commencement of winding up. But s.127 does extend to dispositions which are effected pursuant to a court order.[139] Furthermore, a company's assumption of liabilities is not within s.127 as it is not a disposition of property.[140]

The disposition, to be covered by s.127, may be made by the company or a third party or made directly or indirectly, but any bona fide purchaser for value without notice of the winding-up proceedings would not be liable.[141]

7-015 In the Australian decision of Re Mal Bower's Macquarie Electrical Centre Pty Ltd (in liq),[142] Street CJ said that he thought that the word "disposition" originated from the Scottish law term, dispone, used to refer to transferring or alienating property.[143] Although in the recent case of Officeserve Technologies Ltd v Anthony-Mike[144] HH Judge Matthews had problems with this explanation. The judge said that it was > "not clear from his judgment [that of Street CJ] why he thought that. There was (for example) no tracing back of the statutory provision to a Scottish statute, or even a Scottish case. It is well known that Scottish and English law are very different. Even if company law is (more or less) the same on either side of the border, it is clear that Scottish insolvency law is not the same as English insolvency law. There is no obvious reason why the word 'disposition' in a technical English statute dealing with insolvency should be referred back to a technical term of Scottish law dealing with the conveyancing of Scottish land".[145]

"Disposition" connotes, according to Street CJ[146] both a disponor and a disponee. This was something that was affirmed by Lord Neuberger in the UK Supreme Court decision in Akers v Samba Financial Group.[147] For there to be a disposition within s.127, there must be some change which takes out of the company at least the 7-023 The Court of Appeal in Re Gray's Inn Construction Co Ltd[220] said that if no application is made by a bank for a validation order pursuant to s.127 following the presentation of a petition against one of the bank's corporate customers, then the bank could, itself, freeze the account of the company and require all subsequent dealings to be dealt with on a separate account.[221] According to Buckley LJ:

> "It [the bank] can require personal assurances from the directors of the company that no payments out of the new account will be made in discharge of pre-liquidation debts and that all payments out of the new account shall be in respect of liabilities incurred in the ordinary course of business subsequent to the presentation of the petition. It can institute checks upon the profitability of the company's trading as it thinks fit. All that happens between the customer and the banker is an adjustment of entries in the statement recording the account between them."[222]

However, a bank may not wish to take this course of action as it runs the risk of being liable to the liquidator in relation to any loss made by the company in trading during the interim period between the presentation of the petition and the making of a winding-up order.[223]

Of course, given the decision of the Court of Appeal in Bank of Ireland v Hollicourt (Contracts) Ltd, orders under s.127 may not be necessary in order to validate payments made by the bank in honouring cheques drawn on the company's account in favour of a third party.[224] This is because it has been said that the bank is acting merely as an agent or intermediary of its customer, namely the company, and in making the payment is adhering to the instructions of the customer. In Re Barn Crown Ltd HH Judge Rich QC said:

> "If the account is already in credit, no disposition of the property of the customer takes place in favour of the bank. The amount standing to the credit of a customer's account is increased in return for the surrender of the cheque which becomes a voucher for payment. It is the drawer of the cheque whose property is disposed of."[225]

7-024 However, it is well to note that Mummery LJ in Bank of Ireland v Hollicourt (Contracts) Ltd (in liq)[226] approved of the practice of securing a validation order, and so it would be wise for banks to continue that practice where possible.

7-025 (b) Duration of incapacity The duration of the incapacity extends from the commencement of the winding up to the termination of winding up, whether by stay[227] or otherwise. The liquidator is, of course, not affected by s.127 when he or she makes dispositions.[228] operation of s.127 depends upon an election by the liquidator,[229] or operates automatically on winding up. If the latter approach is correct, the subject property is recoverable in specie and may be traced on equitable principles.[230] It is submitted that the basis for the latter approach is stronger. It will be remembered that "void" means void for all purposes related to or incidental to the administration of the winding up and any disposition rendered void is void at the time it took place. It has only been in relation to preference provisions where "void" has been interpreted as meaning "voidable" that the election by the liquidator has been seen as the critical action.

(d) Validation of dispositions It has been said that the purpose of the provision is to preserve the pari passu principle of distribution in the period in which a winding-up petition is pending.[231] This has been criticised by some commentators,[232] with, it is respectfully submitted, some not insubstantial arguments. But while there is this criticism, the courts have not wavered in their focus on pari passu, as is discussed in Ch.13. In fact a recent Court of Appeal decision, Express Electrical Distributors Ltd v Beavis[233] that dealt with s.127 and validating orders, seems to support the existing jurisprudence and emphasises the centrality of pari passu. 7-027

Even if one takes the purpose of the section as just mentioned, the provision is far broader in scope than is necessary for achieving this purpose alone and will render void all post-petition dispositions, including not only dispositions which are harmful to the company but also those relating to genuine transactions, those transactions entered into in the ordinary course of the company's business,[234] payments into and out of the company's bank account and transactions which might be said to provide a significant benefit to the company through an increase in its net assets. So as to avoid the prejudicial consequences of s.127, it is essential that a validating order is obtained, for the prohibition imposed by s.127 is not absolute; the court has a discretionary[235] power, exercisable on application by a person having a discernible interest in the matter,[236] to declare that dispositions shall not be void.[237] In the seminal case on s.127,[238] Lord Cairns said, after pointing out that s.127 is designed to stop dissipation of the company's property, that where a company is trading if transactions in the ordinary course of business and entered into bona fide were not permitted then the persons interested in the assets of the company could be prejudiced.[239] Naturally the onus is on the applicant for an order that the disposition is not void to show why a validating order should be made.[240] The section itself gives no indication of how the powers, which are completely unfettered, are to be exercised, but there is a considerable body of judicial authority on the subject. There are cases that suggest courts will examine the bona fides of the parties and their intentions,[241] although, as is discussed shortly, recent case law tends to attenuate the view that bona fides and intentions and even knowledge are as important as the cases in the past have suggested.

It has been submitted in the past that it was generally understood that transactions occurring before the giving of notice of the petition would normally be validated.[242] It would appear that an order may have retrospective effect, but the courts will be mindful of the difficulties that that might have for a liquidator.[243]

An order will only be made where there was no serious risk to the creditors or where the court was satisfied that the company's position and hence the position of the creditors would be improved by the transaction being validated.[244] The courts may make an order where full value was not obtained pursuant to the transaction, although they will not do so if the transaction contravenes the policy behind the provision.[245]

If at all possible and practicable, it is preferable that an application be made to seek validation of a transaction prospectively as a court's discretion is less likely to be exercised favourably where validation is sought retrospectively, particularly where there is any period of unexplained delay. Nevertheless, it has been said that a court should be cautious to ensure that prospective applications do not pre-empt the work of a liquidator and should not ordinarily grant a validating order where the subsequent making of a winding-up order is inevitable.[246]

Section 127 does not state who can apply for a validation order. It is submitted that it can include the company, the liquidator or any interested party, usually the beneficiary of the dealing that is to be validated. Who is allowed to apply will depend on the circumstances.[247]

A disposition is only able to be validated where title has passed to the company

prior to the making of a winding-up order. So, if a contract is executory at the time of the winding-up order no validation order can be made.[248]

7-028 (i) Application before winding up The great disadvantage of s.127 is that it has the practical consequence of depriving the directors[249] and, indeed, all persons[250] other than the liquidator, of power to deal with company assets after a petition for a winding-up order had been presented. Since neither the company, nor any person dealing with it, could be sure that the petition would be dismissed or, if it succeeded, that a disposition of property made by the company would be validated by the courts, the effect has been to discourage transactions with the company for as long as this state of uncertainty existed. This in turn tends to make the company's position deteriorate even more rapidly. While unusual, a court is able to make a validating order prior to the making of a winding-up order. Although in Re Miles Aircraft Ltd,[251] the court refused to make a validation order prior to the time when a winding up order was made, subsequent cases have not followed that point of view. In Re A. I. Levy (Holdings) Ltd.[252] a landlord agreed not to forfeit a lease for non-payment of rent arrears by a tenant company and allowed the company to sell the lease for the benefit of creditors provided that the rent arrears were paid in full. A validating order was made before winding up so as to enable the company to assign the lease notwithstanding the fact that the landlord was paid ahead of other creditors. Buckley J was satisfied that there was jurisdiction to make such an order and considered that the test in such cases was whether the transaction in question was one which must benefit the unsecured creditors if in due course a winding-up order was made on the petition pending.[253] The present position that validation orders may be made prior to winding-up is laudable as it serves to protect people dealing with the company, many of whom are acting without any knowledge of the initiation of winding-up proceedings. Also, as far as the company is concerned, orders made before a winding-up order can be significant in the company's attempt to continue to trade and, if the company is eventually wound up, the completion of transactions may enhance the dividends to be received by creditors who are proving in the winding up. Naturally a person may be unwilling to deal with a company when he or she knows that a winding-up petition has been presented unless a prospective validation order has been made.

There are suggestions in some of the cases that it is likely that dispositions in the ordinary course of business, that are carried out in good faith,[254] will readily be permitted under this provision,[255] unless there is any ground to suggest that what prejudicial manner, an alternative request for a winding-up order may be included.[363] If this latter action is taken then s.127 will apply and this may well paralyse a solvent successful company and be detrimental to all concerned. A Practice Direction[364] has indicated that it is undesirable for a winding-up prayer to be included in a s.994 petition, but if such a prayer is included then the petitioner is required to state whether he or she consents to or opposes a validation order under s.127 in the standard form, as attached to the Practice Direction. If the petitioner is willing to consent then it is normal for the registrar to make a validation order without further action needing to be taken. In Re A Company (No.007523 of 1986)[365] and decided before the Practice Direction mentioned above, the petitioner opposed the making of a validation order. Mervyn Davies J said that significant weight should be given to the views of the directors as a petition should not be permitted to stultify the business of the company where such business would benefit all those interested in the value of the company's assets. Notwithstanding this, his Lordship refused the application for a validation order as there was evidence that the company was insolvent and the making of further dispositions would dissipate the assets of the company.

4. Voluntary winding up

7-041 Much of the inconvenience and difficulty caused by s.127 arises from the fact that the commencement of the winding up is artificially antedated to the moment of presentation of the petition for a winding-up order, an event which may have occurred a considerable time before the order was actually made. In voluntary liquidation, the commencement of winding up is simultaneous and identical with the act[366] which gives rise to it, and therefore there is no interim period during which the assets of the company can be disposed of, and doubtless this is why it was thought unnecessary to include in voluntary winding up a prohibition similar to that in s.127. The only time when s.127 is relevant to voluntary liquidation is where voluntary liquidation is succeeded by compulsory liquidation. In such a case the commencement of winding up is deemed to be the date of the resolution to wind up.

As a liquidator assumes control of the property of a company as soon as it passes a resolution to wind up, the danger of a dissipation of assets is not likely and so there is no express statutory provision proscribing the making of dispositions after the beginning of winding up. But if the principal object of s.127 is to preserve the assets of the company for the purpose of rateable division among its creditors, then it must be admitted that sometimes there is a need for a similar prohibition in the case of voluntary winding up of an insolvent company. Even after a liquidator has been appointed, it is possible, for example, that some person dehors the company who has acquired the right to deal with company property[367] may attempt to dispose of it in a manner which is inconsistent with the principle of rateable division. It is submitted, however, that despite the absence of an express provision like that in [367] e.g. a person with a power of attorney, as in Re Dittmer Gold Mines Ltd (No.3) [1954] St. R. Qd 275; or a garnishor who obtains payment of the company's debt from a garnisheed debtor of the company after commencement of winding up. But note the decision in Akers v Samba Financial Group [2017] UKSC 6; [2017] 1 B.C.L.C. 151 that indicates that a trustee could pass the legal title to a third party and this would not be a disposition within s.127.

s.127, such dispositions when made after the commencement of winding up will nevertheless be held invalid—either because of straightforward inconsistency with the principle itself,[368] or because winding up deprives the company of the beneficial interest in its property and puts it beyond the power of anyone to deal with its assets otherwise than in accordance with the manner prescribed by the Act.[369]

Any disposition by a director after the commencement of winding up is not binding on the company, unless the director is authorised,[370] as the directors' powers will cease on the appointment of the liquidator. If the company loses out because of any post-appointment disposition made by the directors, such as being unable to recover the money or property from a third party, then the directors can be proceeded against on the basis of misfeasance.[371]

7-042 One problem that can exist is where a petition is presented against the company and then there is a resolution passed to wind up voluntarily. In such a situation it must be borne in mind that any dispositions made after the presentation of the petition are at risk if a winding up is in fact made eventually.[372]

5. The human rights' dimension

7-043 In closing we must consider the fact that it may be argued that s.127 is incompatible with rights set out in the European Convention on Human Rights. It may be said that the provision infringes two rights of a company. First, the company's right to property under art.1. Secondly, there has been a determination of the company's civil rights without a fair hearing, and therefore a breach of art.6.[373] Also, the company is required to expend money to obtain a validation order if it wishes for a disposition to have effect.[374] Learned commentators have asserted that the counter argument is that the company's right to property is only temporary, and the action of s.127 does not determine the company's rights as it only operates until either a winding-up order is made or the petition is dismissed. In any event the company can apply for a validation order in relation to any disposition.[375] The "bottom line" is whether or not the impact of s.127 is disproportionate. If it is not then it is not going to be regarded as incompatible with the Human Rights Act. It is submitted that s.127 is not disproportionate and it should prevail as it is a critical provision as far as creditors are concerned, ensuring that property of the company is not dissipated while the petitioning creditor is waiting for the processes of the court to take their course.

which all of the proceeds would go to the assignee, the creditors getting a benefit in the form of the price which the assignee will have paid to obtain the claim.

The Australian High Court in Campbell's Cash and Carry Pty Ltd v Fostif Pty Ltd[546] accepted the fact some years ago that litigation funding is a reality of commercial life in Australia, and this has been recognised in the English courts, certainly since Arkin v Borchard,[547] and the use of it has risen increasingly.[548] Perhaps more importantly, the UK legislature has come to the same acceptance by introducing the legislation referred to above, even if rather belatedly. It is notable that Statements of Practice that are issued by the Insolvency Service countenance the need for office-holders to seek funding from third parties.

G. Duty to preserve assets

1. General

9-076 Pending realisation and distribution of the assets, the liquidator must do all in his or her power to protect and preserve the assets of the company,[549] and not jeopardise them, for example, by insuring property where it is prudent to do so and by defending any actions brought against the company, though not to the extent of becoming over-litigious and resisting proceedings against which the company has no real defence.[550] In addition, the liquidator must preserve the goodwill of the company's business, if necessary, by carrying on that business during the winding up.

If a company holds assets as a trustee, the liquidator is obliged to take reasonable steps to protect the assets.[551]

2. Carrying on business

9-077 Very often the goodwill of the business which the company is engaged in conducting is one of its more valuable assets, and since it would rapidly deteriorate if trading activities were brought to a sudden halt, the liquidator is empowered by para.5 of Sch.4 to carry on the business of the company in so far as this is necessary for the beneficial winding up of the business. The liquidator must have reasonable grounds for believing that carrying on the business is beneficial or else he or she may be held personally liable for any loss sustained.[552] The power confines a liquidator to acts relating to the business of the company as it existed when the company entered liquidation.[553]

In carrying on business the liquidator may find it necessary to exercise some of

H. Duty to realise assets

9-080 The whole object of winding up is, of course, to liquidate the assets so that the proceeds can be applied in satisfaction of the liabilities of the company and the surplus, if any, distributed among the shareholders. The duty of realising the assets of the company rests on the liquidator, who is authorised by para.6 of Sch.4 to sell or otherwise dispose of all or any part of the property of the company[576] and in doing so to execute in the name, on behalf, and under the seal of the company, any necessary deeds, receipts, and other documents.[577] The liquidator may be required by the purchaser to give assurances of title to property sold,[578] and, where there is a sale of the whole of the property en bloc, the liquidator is bound to put the purchaser into a position where the transfer of realty can be obtained and personalty is delivered and to assign all choses in action so as to divest the company completely of its title thereto.[579] Where, as frequently happens, property of the company is burdened by mortgages or charges or otherwise subject to securities, the liquidator is entitled to deduct a reasonable sum to meet the cost of realisation[580] before applying the proceeds in paying the principal debt and any outstanding interest to the secured creditor.[581]

Property may be sold in any manner whatsoever. Liquidators may sell by tender, by private contract or by public auction. It may be necessary for the liquidator to take advice on what would be the best way to sell items of property. It will nearly always be advisable for liquidators to take advice on what the value of the property to be sold is so that they ensure that property is not sold below value. Of course as a liquidator is not able to choose to withhold property from being sold and because buyers will often be aware that property is part of the estate of a company which is in liquidation, it must be expected that property may not be worth what it would be if sold by a going concern. The terms of sale are a matter for the discretion of the liquidator, but risks ought not to be taken and will seldom be justified in selling except for cash or on security.[582] Subject to this, the liquidator's fundamental duty is to realise the assets of the company in the most efficient way and to obtain the highest possible price for the assets, and, while the winding up should not be unnecessarily protracted,[583] it may sometimes be proper, in the interests of augmenting the assets, to sell on terms that payment be deferred,[584] or to lease the property and postpone selling it until conditions are more propitious.[585]

Circumstances in which the liquidator will be justified in purchasing property with a view to its resale must indeed be rare, but they arose in the case of Re Bairnsdale Food Products Ltd,[586] where an option to purchase premises leased to the company became exercisable during the winding up and was immediately followed by an offer from a third party to buy the subject property on most favourable terms. It was held that, in accepting both these offers, the liquidator had not exceeded his powers, since the double transaction which had been entered into did not in substance differ from a simple sale of the right conferred by the option. "If," said Fullagar J,

> "the liquidator could buy and sell the subject matter of that right so as to realize for the company the value of that right [and if] he made the purchase only for the purpose of resale … he was really doing no more than selling the assets of the company".[587]

9-081 Liquidators in both compulsory and voluntary winding up must note that if they dispose of any company property to a person who is connected with the company, notice must be given by the liquidator to the liquidation committee.[588]

I. Duty to settle a list of contributories

9-082 An important aspect of the liquidator's tasks is to determine which of the company's members are contributories of the company. These are persons who are liable to contribute to the assets of the company on a winding up.[589] The court has the duty to settle a list of contributories[590] and this power is delegated to liquidators in compulsory liquidations.[591] Also, under s.165(4)(a) the liquidator in a voluntary liquidation is given the power of the court to settle a list of contributories. It is appropriate to note that the court is entitled to dispense with a list of contributories in circumstances where it is not necessary to make calls on, or adjust the rights of, contributories.[592] This would occur where all shares are fully paid up, but in other situations dispensing with a list will depend on the facts and should only be done after due reflection.[593] The duty to settle a list is discussed in depth in Ch.10.

(iv) Contracts Contracts not determined by the liquidation of the company may be disclaimed by the liquidator in the course of the winding up only where they are unprofitable. Disclaimer occurs sometimes where the contract is of a kind which imposes continuing obligations,[849] the effect being to bring the company's liabilities to an end, leaving the other party with a right of proving for damages in the winding up.[850] As noted earlier, a contract cannot be disclaimed merely because the property that is the subject of the contract can be sold by a liquidator more readily and at a higher price if a contract was not in place, as this will not in itself mean that the contract is unprofitable.[851] 9-106

K. Duty to distribute to creditors

After paying off expenses of the liquidation and other priority claims that are set out in r.6.42 for creditors' voluntary liquidations and r.7.108 in compulsory liquidations, the liquidator has a duty to distribute what remains, if anything, to the creditors. This distribution must be in accordance with the Act and will entail the payment of some creditors, such as the payment of employees within statutory limits, in priority to general creditors.[852] This duty is not able to be delegated to anyone else.[853] 9-107

L. Duty to distribute surplus assets

When all the assets of the company have been got in and realised, and all the debts and liabilities, including the costs of winding up, have been paid or provided for, which will not occur where a company was insolvent, the liquidator may proceed to distribute any surplus among the members of the company.[854] Their rights of sharing in the distribution may be prescribed in the memorandum or articles of association, but subject to these, the principle is one of equality.[855] In order to carry this into effect, it may be necessary for the liquidator to adjust the rights of the contributories inter se by making calls on those who have paid less on their shares than their fellow members in order to ensure that losses are evenly distributed among all the members of the company.[856] Once this stage has been reached the liquidator is virtually a bare trustee for the members,[857] who can call upon the liquidator to distribute the remaining assets either in their liquidated form or in specie.[858] Any amounts in the hands of the liquidator which have remained unclaimed or not distributed after dissolution or the liquidator's earlier vacation of office, and which represent unclaimed or undistributed assets of the company, are to be paid immediately to the Insolvency Service Account kept with the Bank of England[859] and anyone who believes that they are entitled to a sum of money may apply to the Department of Business, Energy and Industrial Strategy for payment. 9-108

If, unusually, a company which is being wound up in insolvency and by way of compulsory liquidation, has a surplus, then s.154 provides that the court will distribute any surplus to those entitled to it. The liquidator is not permitted to make a distribution. He or she may only distribute it after obtaining special leave from the court.[860] The liquidator must apply to the court for an order under r.7.117. A list of persons to whom it is intended to return capital must accompany the application.[861] If an order is made then the liquidator is sent a sealed copy of the order[862] and the liquidator is to follow the procedures set out in r.7.118.

M. Duty to bring about dissolution

9-109 The final step in the winding up is to procure the dissolution of the company.[863] This occurs after the liquidator has completed the winding up, made the final distributions to creditors (in insolvent liquidations) and distributions representing surplus assets to members of the company in solvent liquidations. The procedure for doing so under the legislation pre-dating the Act used to vary according to whether the company had been wound up compulsorily or voluntarily. This is no longer the case. This topic is discussed in depth in Ch.17 below.

IV. SUPERVISION AND CONTROL OF LIQUIDATORS

9-110 It is clear that, in essence, liquidators, as experienced professionals, are trusted to act reasonably, carefully and properly, and as a consequence they have a good deal of freedom to conduct a winding up in accordance with their discretion. Notwithstanding that, the Act does make some provision for supervision and control over liquidators.

The creditors and contributories are able to exercise some measure of direct control over liquidators in the performance of their duties through the medium of decision procedures and meetings which it is their duty to seek or call from time to time.[864] Apart from this, however, it is primarily to the court and the Secretary of State that the creditors and contributories must look for effective protection against misconduct or errors on the part of liquidators. Liquidators may seek the decisions of creditors and contributories to ascertain their views[865] but they are not bound to follow those views. However, it would be normal for liquidators to give weight to the opinion of the majority of the creditors unless either the creditors were influenced unduly by extraneous considerations or where special circumstances existed.[866] According to Snowden J in Re Longmeade Ltd:

> "[I]f all the persons having an interest in the insolvent company are fully informed and of the same view, then it seems to me that the liquidator would ordinarily be obliged to give effect to that view. That follows from the fact that liquidation is a statutory scheme

LORD HODGE:

1. This appeal raises the question whether an agreement to settle disputes arising out of a shareholders' agreement by arbitration may prevent a party to that agreement from pursuing a petition to wind up the company whose management is the focus of those disputes. The other side of the coin is whether an application to the Grand Court to wind up that company on the just and equitable ground makes all matters which are the subject matter of those court proceedings non-arbitrable, thereby rendering inoperative the agreement to resolve such disputes by arbitration.

2. Ting Chuan (Cayman Islands) Holding Corporation ("Ting Chuan") and FamilyMart China Holding Co Ltd ("FMCH") are the shareholders of China CVS (Cayman Islands) Holding Corp ("the Company") which is the company that is subject to the winding up proceedings. Ting Chuan owns 59.65% and FMCH 40.35% of the issued shares in the Company.

3. The relationship between Ting Chuan and FMCH so far as is relevant is governed by a shareholders' agreement dated 11 May 2011 ("the SHA"), pursuant to which four of the Company's seven directors are nominated by Ting Chuan (referred to as "the majority directors") and three are nominated by FMCH (referred to as "the minority directors"). FMCH alleges that there was an understanding between it and Ting Chuan as to how the Company would operate its business.

4. The Company through nine subsidiaries operates a very substantial convenience store business in the People's Republic of China ("PRC") under the brand name "FamilyMart". As at 31 December 2021 the business had an annual turnover in excess of US $1.32 billion. The Company was licensed to operate through its subsidiaries the FamilyMart brand in the PRC in return for a royalty of 1 per cent on all revenues. The Company is solvent and operates as a going concern. As explained below, nobody intends to wind up the business, but establishing the grounds for winding up the Company on the just and equitable ground is a necessary step in the company law of the Cayman Islands in order to obtain a court order for the buy-out of the shareholding in the Company of the majority shareholder (here, Ting Chuan).

1. Factual background

5. FMCH is a Japanese company whose owners are two enterprises, Taiwan FamilyMart Co Ltd and FamilyMart Co Ltd (referred to as "the FM parties"), one of which has had considerable success in the convenience store business in Japan and elsewhere in Asia for over 40 years under the brand name "FamilyMart". The owner of Ting Chuan is Ting Hsin (Cayman Islands) Holding Corporation ("Ting Hsin") which was until 2006 the majority shareholder of the Company. Ting Chuan and Ting Hsin are part of a group of companies founded by the Wei family which includes entities related to or associated with Ting Chuan or Ting Hsin (referred to as "the Ting Hsin Group").

6. Members of the Ting Hsin Group have experience in the food industry but lacked expertise in the convenience store business. To make up for that lack of expertise they required the assistance of staff provided by the FM parties to act as departmental heads with a view to transferring those responsibilities to Ting Hsin's own staff at a later date. FMCH believes that the Ting Hsin Group is owned and controlled by the majority directors who are members of the Wei family, and their family members.

7. FMCH presented a petition to wind up the Company to the Grand Court on 12 October 2018. In that petition FMCH alleges that the Company was incorporated as a joint venture vehicle to develop and conduct a convenience store business in the PRC. The Ting Hsin Group sought by the joint venture to combine the FamilyMart brand and the expertise of the FM parties with the infrastructure which the Ting Hsin Group had established in the PRC. Relations between Ting Chuan and FMCH became strained because FMCH believed and believes that since about 2012 the majority directors of the Company have diverted profits of the Company to members of the Ting Hsin Group which are suppliers of the Company, being food factories and the suppliers of logistics and information processing services to the Company, and have prevented the minority directors from gaining access to information relating to the Company's business, including the identity of those related party suppliers. FMCH asserts that, by so acting, Ting Chuan acted in breach of an understanding that the contracting of such services would be transparent and disclosed by the Ting Hsin Group to the FM parties and would be on a footing that the terms were fair and reasonable.

8. In its petition FMCH alleges that Ting Chuan and/or Ting Hsin have caused, permitted and/or procured the majority directors to act in breach of their duties to the Company. FMCH alleges (i) that it has lost trust and confidence in the conduct and management of the Company's affairs as a result of that lack of probity and (ii) that its relationship with Ting Chuan has irretrievably broken down. FMCH avers that it is just and equitable that the Company be wound up. In the alternative, and this is the real aim of its application, FMCH seeks an order from the Grand Court that Ting Chuan be required to sell its majority stake in the Company to FMCH at a value to be determined by the Court, if not agreed.

9. Ting Chuan, relying on the arbitration agreement in the SHA, applied to strike out the winding up petition or, alternatively, for an order dismissing or staying the petition under section 4 of the Foreign Arbitral Awards Enforcement Act (1997 Revision) ("FAAEA") or under the inherent jurisdiction of the court until the disputes which underlay the petition had been arbitrated. By the Citation of Acts of Parliament Act 2020 legislation which previously was referred to as a "Law" is now referred to as an "Act". The Board adopts that nomenclature in this judgment.

10. The Grand Court (Kawaley J) in an order dated 25 February 2019 granted Ting Chuan's application to stay the winding up proceedings for arbitration under section 4 of the FAAEA. By order dated 14 July 2020, Kawaley J, in an exercise of his powers under the Companies Winding up Rules O.3 r 12(1)(a), (b) and (d), allowed the Company to defend the proceedings if so advised, and ordered that the petition be treated as an inter partes proceeding and that the advertisement of the petition be dispensed with.

11. As discussed more fully below, the Court of Appeal by order dated 27 July 2020 set aside Kawaley J's order of 25 February 2019 and refused to grant a stay of the winding up petition. Ting Chuan has obtained the permission of the Board to appeal against that decision.

2. The arbitration agreement

12. Section 20.3(a) of the SHA provides that it is governed by the laws of the Cayman Islands. The SHA contains the arbitration agreement (section 20.3(b)) which, so far as relevant, provides:

> "Any and all disputes in connection with or arising out of this Agreement shall, insofar as is possible, first be settled amicably by the Parties hereto. … If the Parties cannot come to an amicable settlement within twenty (20) days of the onset of any dispute, any and all disputes in connection with or arising out of this Agreement [shall be] submitted for arbitration in accordance with and finally settled under the Rules of Arbitration of the International Chamber of commerce [sic] in effect at the time of the arbitration, except as may be modified herein or by mutual agreement of the Parties. The arbitration shall be confidential and conducted in the Chinese language. The Parties agree that the arbitration shall take place in Beijing, PRC. The award of the arbitration tribunal shall be final and binding upon the disputing Parties, and the prevailing Party may apply to a court of competent jurisdiction for enforcement of such award. …" (Emphasis added)

13. FMCH initially argued that the dispute between it and Ting Chuan did not fall within the scope of the arbitration agreement, but it abandoned that contention in the course of the hearing before the Court of Appeal. It is now a matter of agreement that the dispute falls within the scope of the arbitration agreement. The central dispute between the parties is now whether FMCH's petition in the Grand Court for the winding up of the Company has made the matters raised in that petition not susceptible to arbitration.

3. The relevant statutory provisions

14. The Companies Act (2022 Revision) provides in section 90 that a company may be wound up compulsorily by order of the Court. Section 92 provides that a company may be wound up by the Court on various grounds including if "(e) the Court is of opinion that it is just and equitable that the company should be wound up" (Emphasis added).

15. Section 95, which sets out the powers of the court, provides in subsection (2):

> "The Court shall dismiss a winding up petition or adjourn the hearing of a winding up petition on the ground that the petitioner is contractually bound not to present a petition against the company."

Subsection (3) provides for several remedies, including the remedy which FMCH is seeking by its presentation of the winding up petition. It provides so far as relevant:

> "If the petition is presented by members of the company as contributories on the ground that it is just and equitable that the company should be wound up, the Court shall have jurisdiction to make the following orders, as an alternative to a winding-up order, namely – …
> (d) an order providing for the purchase of the shares of any members of the company by other members or by the company itself and, in the case of a purchase by the company itself, a reduction of the company's capital accordingly."

This provision was introduced into the Companies Act by the Companies (Amendment) Act 2007. As is well known, the Cayman Islands has not provided in its company law for a self-standing petition (separate from a winding up petition) by a member of a company for a remedy where the affairs of the company are being or have been conducted in a manner that is unfairly prejudicial to the interests of members. Such a remedy was introduced into United Kingdom company law by section 75 of the Companies Act 1980 and is now contained in sections 994-996 of the Companies Act 2006.

16. The Cayman Islands has separate legislation governing foreign arbitrations and domestic arbitrations. The FAAEA addresses foreign arbitrations and gives effect to the UN Convention on the Recognition and Enforcement of Foreign Arbitral Awards (1958) ("the New York Convention"). Section 4 of the FAAEA, which gives effect to article II of the New York Convention, provides:

> "If any party to an arbitration agreement … commences any legal proceedings in any court against any other party to the agreement … in respect of any matter agreed to be referred, any party to the proceedings may at any time after appearance, and before delivering any pleadings or taking any other steps in the proceedings, apply to the court to stay the proceedings; and the court, unless satisfied that the arbitration agreement is … inoperative …, shall make an order staying the proceedings."

Domestic arbitration agreements in the Cayman Islands are governed by the Arbitration Act 2012, which is based on the UNCITRAL Model Law on International Commercial Arbitration 1985 (as amended in 2006) and the English Arbitration Act 1996.

4. The judgments of the courts below

17. Kawaley J in his judgment of 25 February 2019 observed (para 17) that the petition had been drafted in a "somewhat obtuse way" to sidestep the argument that the complaints arose in relation to the SHA and were caught by the very broad arbitration agreement. He held (para 61) that it was "clear beyond sensible argument" that the allegations in the petition related to the subject matter of the SHA. He rejected FMCH's submission that the underlying disputes were not arbitrable because only the court can grant a winding up order, holding that there was a fundamental difference between the resolution of the underlying disputes and the grant by the court of statutory relief (para 66). He attached no significance to the fact that neither the Company nor the majority directors were parties to the SHA because the genuine dispute was between the minority shareholder and the majority shareholder (para 67). He granted a mandatory stay of the winding up petition under section 4 of the FAAEA.

18. The Court of Appeal (Rix, Martin and Moses JJA), in a judgment dated 23 April 2020, overturned Kawaley J's decision, holding that the court had exclusive jurisdiction to determine whether a company should be wound up on the just and equitable ground and that, as a result, the underlying disputes were not susceptible to arbitration, notwithstanding that they fell within the scope of the arbitration agreement contained in the SHA. In so deciding, the Court of Appeal discussed as a key authority the judgments of Patten, Longmore and Rix LJJ in the Court of Appeal of England and Wales in Fulham Football Club (1987) Ltd v Richards [2011] EWCA Civ 855; [2012] Ch 333 ("Fulham"), in which the court granted a stay of an unfair prejudice petition under section 994 of the Companies Act 2006 to enable the parties to resolve their underlying dispute by arbitration. The Cayman Islands Court of Appeal, in the leading judgment by Moses JA, also considered other cases, including the judgment of Harris J in the Hong Kong High Court in Quiksilver Greater China Ltd v Quiksilver Glorious Sun JV Ltd [2014] 4 HKLRD 759 ("Quiksilver"), in which the judge stayed a petition seeking a winding up on the just and equitable ground to enable the substantive dispute between the parties, which was within the scope of an arbitration agreement, to be determined by arbitration; and a judgment of the Federal Court of Australia in WDR Delaware Corporation v Hydrox Holdings Pty Ltd [2016] FCA 1164 ("WDR Delaware"), which followed the Quiksilver judgment by granting a stay for arbitration of a petition on the grounds of oppressive or unfairly prejudicial behaviour in which a winding up order was only one of several available remedies. The rationale of those cases was that an essentially private dispute between shareholders, in which discrete issues could be identified, should be resolved, in accordance with the parties' agreement, by arbitration.

19. Moses JA distinguished those cases, holding that under section 92 of the Companies Act the court's consideration of whether it is just and equitable that a company should be wound up is a threshold question and not a question of relief. Section 92 was the sole gateway to obtaining alternative relief under section 95(3): Tianrui (International) Holding Co Ltd v China Shanshui Cement Group Ltd [2019] CILR 481 ("Tianrui"). Tianrui did not involve a conflict between an arbitration agreement and a petition to wind up a company but its reasoning was central to the Court of Appeal's reasoning. Fulham was to be distinguished on the basis that in that case there was no need to prove conduct that would justify winding up the company. By contrast in the context of an application to wind up a company on the just and equitable ground, Moses JA summarised the question in these terms (para 98):

> "In cases where there is an arbitration agreement the scope of which embraces disputes of fact which are also raised in the petition, the question of a stay to arbitration turns on whether it is possible to submit such disputes to arbitration without trespassing upon the exclusive jurisdiction of the court to make a winding up order."

He stated that in Fulham and the cases which had followed it, the courts had identified discrete, substantive issues which did not invoke the exclusive jurisdiction of the court. But where a petitioner was invoking a statutory right to bring the petition and the underlying issues were central and inextricably connected to the question whether the company should be wound up on the just and equitable ground, it was difficult to identify discrete issues outside the exclusive jurisdiction of the court.

20. Moses JA held that in determining the threshold question the court did not have to determine only questions of primary fact but had to evaluate all the circumstances of the case. The court had to decide whether the conduct of the majority directors and the breakdown of the relationship between the shareholders justified the winding up of the Company. If matters were hived off to arbitration, there would be a risk of inconsistent decisions where there was first a decision by an arbitrator and then a further decision by the court which took into account the arbitrator's award where some of the parties to the petition would not be bound by the arbitrator's award. This outcome could be avoided only if the parties had agreed not to present a winding up petition. No such agreement was expressly stated in the SHA and none could be implied. As a result, section 95(2) of the Companies Act did not apply.

21. Moses JA held that because neither the majority directors nor the Company were parties to the SHA and thereby to the arbitration agreement, it was not permissible to apply the mandatory provisions of section 4 of the FAAEA to the petition in its entirety and because the allegations against Ting Chuan could not be separated from the threshold issue, section 4 could not operate pro tanto. The arbitration agreement was therefore inoperative. Finally, there was no basis for the court to grant a discretionary stay in the exercise of its powers of case management.

5. The parties' positions in this appeal

22. Ting Chuan submits that the Court of Appeal erred in refusing to grant a stay of the winding up petition to allow disputes under the SHA to be determined by arbitration. Ting Chuan asserts that (i) it and FMCH are parties to an arbitration agreement, (ii) FMCH has commenced legal proceedings against it, (iii) those legal proceedings are in respect of matters agreed to be referred to arbitration, and (iv) therefore it is entitled to a mandatory stay unless the Board is satisfied that the relevant matters are non-arbitrable.

23. Ting Chuan identifies the matters which it argues are arbitrable and entitle it to a mandatory stay under the FAAEA. It argues that the petition for winding up contains five matters, the first four of which should be determined by arbitration. The five matters are:

> (1) Whether FMCH has lost trust and confidence in Ting Chuan and in the conduct and management of the Company's affairs. Ting Chuan particularises this matter into three sub-headings: (i) whether the majority directors owe various duties to the Company, (ii) whether the majority directors have breached those duties or engaged in misconduct, and (iii) whether Ting Chuan caused, permitted or procured the majority directors to act in breach of their duties or to engage in the alleged misconduct.

(2) Whether the fundamental relationship between FMCH and Ting Chuan has irretrievably broken down. In particular: (i) whether an understanding was reached between the shareholders by 2003 and, if so, what were the terms of that understanding, (ii) was the understanding superseded at any point in time after 2003, for example by reason of the conclusion of the SHA, and (iii) whether Ting Chuan acted contrary to that understanding after 2012.

(3) Whether it is just and equitable that the Company should be wound up.

(4) Whether FMCH should be granted the alternative relief, which it prefers, under section 95(3)(d) of the Companies Act, namely an order requiring Ting Chuan to sell its shares in the Company to FMCH, and, if so, what is the value of those shares.

(5) Whether, if such alternative relief is not appropriate, an order winding up the Company should be made and whether the persons identified by FMCH should be appointed as joint official liquidators.

In the alternative, Ting Chuan argues that the first two matters listed above are arbitrable, that there should be a mandatory stay of the winding up petition pro tanto under the FAAEA, and that the Board should grant a discretionary stay of matters (3) to (5) above.

24. FMCH invites the Board to uphold the judgment of the Court of Appeal. It characterises the principal question raised in the appeal as being whether and, if so, in what respect and to what extent a petition to wind up a Cayman Islands registered company on the just and equitable ground is arbitrable. It argues that the legislation does not allow a private arbitral tribunal to make the critical threshold decision that it is just and equitable that a company should be wound up. It advances two principal reasons for that view. First, it submits that the proceedings are inherently unsuited to arbitration, and, secondly, it argues that the legislature has recognised that there is a public interest in the judicial determination of winding up petitions in open court, which excludes the use of private arbitration to any extent in the process. It points out that a court in deciding whether it is just and equitable that a company be wound up has regard to all the facts as they exist at the date of the hearing and exercises its discretion at that date. The proceedings must be conducted expeditiously because section 99 of the Companies Act may render void dispositions of property and other transactions made after the presentation of the petition. By contrast, the reference to arbitration of matters encompassed by the winding up application might require multiple and successive arbitrations which would not bind all of the parties to the winding up petition. This cannot have been what a rational businessperson would have contemplated. The winding up petition has been stayed since 2018 while the parties, on Ting Chuan's insistence, engaged in a very expensive arbitration before the ICC International Court of Arbitration which lasted three and a half years dealing with claims which Ting Chuan advanced, unsuccessfully, against FMCH.

6. The structure of The Board's analysis

25. In addressing those submissions, the Board first considers by way of background the uncontested view that, as a general rule, the law of the Cayman Islands, like English law and the laws of many other jurisdictions, respects the right of parties to agree to have their disputes determined by a private arbitral tribunal. Secondly, the Board addresses the interpretation of section 4 of the FAAEA, and in particular the meaning of (i) "legal proceedings", (ii) "matters", and (iii) "the arbitration agreement is … inoperative". The Board, thirdly, considers whether the petition for winding up on the just and equitable ground is an unum quid, excluding any possibility of arbitration, or whether there should be a partial stay under the FAAEA so that matters within the scope of the arbitration agreement can and should be hived off for arbitration. Fourthly, the Board considers the application for a discretionary stay of the winding up petition; and, finally, the Board briefly addresses a submission relating to section 95(2) of the Companies Act.

7. Background: the approach to arbitration agreements

26. It is common ground in this case that the disputes between Ting Chuan and FMCH, which are articulated in the winding up petition, fall within the scope of the arbitration agreement. No question therefore arises as to the interpretation of the arbitration agreement itself. Case law in England and Wales, and the Cayman Islands, which adopts a liberal interpretation of an arbitration agreement, is not directly in issue. Nonetheless, such case law on interpretation is indicative of the respect which the courts of many jurisdictions give to the autonomy of parties to choose how they wish their disputes to be resolved. In Enka Insaat ve Sanayi AS v OOO "Insurance Co Chubb" [2020] UKSC 38; [2020] 1 WLR 4117, ("Enka Insaat") Lord Hamblen and Lord Leggatt, giving the leading judgment of the court, stated (para 107):

> "In Fiona Trust & Holding Corpn v Privalov [[2007] UKHL 40;] [2007] Bus LR 1719, the House of Lords affirmed the principle that 'the construction of an arbitration clause should start from the assumption that the parties, as rational businessmen, are likely to have intended any dispute arising out of the relationship into which they have entered or purported to enter to be decided by the same tribunal' (see para 13, per Lord Hoffmann).

> Contrary to a submission made on behalf of Chubb Russia, this is not a parochial approach but one which, as the House of Lords noted in the Fiona Trust case, has been recognised by (amongst other foreign courts) the German Federal Supreme Court (Bundesgerichtshof), the Federal Court of Australia and the United States Supreme Court and, as stated by Lord Hope at para 31, 'is now firmly embedded as part of the law of international commerce'. In his monumental work on International Commercial Arbitration, 2nd ed (2014), p 1403 Gary Born summarises the position as follows:
> 'In a substantial majority of all jurisdictions, national law provides that international arbitration agreements should be interpreted in light of a "pro-arbitration" presumption. Derived from the policies of leading international arbitration conventions and national arbitration legislation, and from the parties' likely objectives, this type of presumption provides that a valid arbitration clause should generally be interpreted expansively and, in cases of doubt, extended to encompass disputed claims. That is particularly true where an arbitration clause encompasses some of the parties' disputes and the question is whether it also applies to related disputes, so that all such controversies can be resolved in a single proceeding (rather than in multiple proceedings in different forums).'"

The Court of Appeal of the Cayman Islands has adopted a similarly expansive approach to the interpretation of arbitration agreements in order to give effect to the reasonable commercial expectations of the parties: McAlpine Ltd v Butterfield Bank (Cayman) Ltd (Appeal No 30 of 2019) (unreported) 21 November 2019 at paras 30-31.

27. The legislature of the Cayman Islands in enacting statutory rules for its domestic arbitration in the Arbitration Act 2012 stated the principles on which the Act was founded and by which its provisions should be construed: section 3(3). Those principles are:

> "(a) the object of arbitration is to obtain the fair resolution of disputes by an impartial arbitral tribunal without undue delay or undue expense;
> (b) the parties should be free to agree how their disputes are resolved, subject only to such safeguards as are necessary in the public interest; and

> (c) in matters governed by this Law the court should not intervene except as provided in this Law." (Emphasis added)

Those principles are articulated in substantially the same terms in section 1 of the Arbitration Act 1996 in England and Wales and in section 1 of the Arbitration (Scotland) Act 2010. The respect which they show to the autonomy of the parties is not a new phenomenon. In England and Wales, the courts until the later nineteenth century often took the view that a contract to oust the jurisdiction of the courts was against public policy and would not enforce such a contract. This approach was altered by legislation in the Common Law Procedure Act 1854, section 11 and in section 4 of the Arbitration Act 1889. Such a judicial approach to arbitration agreements did not exist in Scotland as the House of Lords explained in A Sanderson & Son v Armour & Co Ltd 1922 SC (HL) 117, in which Lord Dunedin expressed the matter pithily (p126): "[i]f the parties have contracted to arbitrate, to arbitration they must go." More recently, similar statements have been made about English law: in Nori Holding Ltd v PJSC Bank Otkritie Financial Corp [2018] EWHC 1343 (Comm); [2019] Bus LR 146, at para 66, Males J stated: "[w]here parties agree to arbitrate, it is the policy of the law that they should be held to their bargain." See also Mustill & Boyd, Commercial Arbitration, 2nd ed, Companion Vol (2001) p 75.

28. Ting Chuan prays in aid section 26 of the Arbitration Act 2012 which provides:

> "(1) Any dispute that parties have agreed to submit to arbitration under an arbitration agreement may be determined by arbitration unless the arbitration agreement is contrary to public policy or, under any other law of the Islands, such a dispute is not capable of determination by arbitration.
> (2) The fact that any other law confers jurisdiction in respect of any matter on the court but does not refer to the determination of that matter by arbitration, does not mean that a dispute about that matter is incapable of determination by arbitration."

In the Board's view FMCH is correct in its submission that the 2012 Act, which is concerned only with arbitrations where the seat of the arbitration is in the Islands (section 3(1)), is not of itself a valid tool for interpreting the FAAEA, which was enacted at an earlier date and is concerned only with arbitrations with a foreign seat. Nonetheless, the section is consistent with a position in relation to international arbitration which has extensive support internationally. See for example, in England and Wales, Wealands v CLC Contractors Ltd [2000] 1 All ER (Comm) 30 ("Wealands"), Mance LJ paras 17, 18 and 21; Bridgehouse (Bradford No 2) Ltd v BAE Systems plc

[2020] EWCA Civ 759; [2020] Bus LR 2025, Newey LJ paras 56-57; and Fulham, Patten LJ paras 27-33; in Singapore, Tomolugen Holdings Ltd v Silica Investors Ltd [2015] SGCA 57; [2016] 1 SLR 373 ("Tomolugen"), Sundaresh Menon CJ paras 75-76; in Australia, ACD Tridon Inc v Tridon Australia Pty Ltd [2002] NSWSC 896 ("Tridon"), Austin J paras 192-194, WDR Delaware Foster J para 147; in Hong Kong Quiksilver, Harris J para 14. The Board observes a similar approach in the jurisprudence of the Supreme Court of the United States: see, for example, Green Tree Financial Corp-Alabama v Randolph (2000) 531 US 79, Rehnquist CJ at p 90. It is important in cases which arise out of domestic legislative provisions implementing the New York Convention to have regard to jurisprudence in other contracting states to promote legal certainty in the jurisprudence relating to international arbitration.

29. The Board therefore accepts Ting Chuan's submission that effect should be given to the arbitration agreement unless the agreement is contrary to the public policy of the Islands or there is a rule of law or statutory provision which renders the matters within the scope of the arbitration agreement incapable of resolution by arbitration.

8. The interpretation of section 4 of the FAAEA

30. Section 4 of the FAAEA (para 16 above) implements article II(3) of the New York Convention which provides:

> "The court of a Contracting State, when seized of an action in a matter in respect of which the parties have made an agreement within the meaning of this article, shall, at the request of one of the parties, refer the parties to arbitration, unless it finds that the said agreement is null and void, inoperative or incapable of being performed."

31. Many countries which are contracting states to the New York Convention have implemented provisions like section 4 of the FAAEA in accordance with their obligations under the New York Convention. In Gol Linhas Aereas SA v MatlinPatterson Global Opportunities Partners (Cayman) II LP [2022] UKPC 21 ("Gol Linhas") the Board, in a judgment delivered by Lord Hamblen and Lord Leggatt, addressed the correct approach to the interpretation of the FAAEA. In para 21 of its judgment the Board referred to the judgment of the UK Supreme Court in Enka Insaat at para 126 in which it observed that more than 160 states had signed the New York Convention and stated:

> "The essential aim of the Convention was to establish a single uniform set of international legal standards for the recognition and enforcement of arbitration agreements and awards. Its > success is reflected in the fact that … the New York Convention has been implemented through national legislation in virtually all contracting states." (Citations omitted)

The Board went on to observe (para 74) that the meaning of a Cayman Islands statute is a question to be decided by applying the law of the Cayman Islands but that the international origin of the provision necessitated a particular approach to its interpretation. The Board stated (para 75):

> "As with any statute which incorporates into domestic law the text of an international treaty, the interpretation and application of the statutory language must take account of its origin in an international instrument intended to have an international currency. That entails that, as Lord Macmillan put it in Stag Line Ltd v Foscolo, Mango & Co Ltd [1932] AC 328, 350, in the interests of uniformity the words should not be given a local interpretation controlled by what he called 'domestic precedents of antecedent date', but rather should be construed 'on broad principles of general acceptation'; see also James Buchanan & Co Ltd v Babco Forwarding & Shipping (UK) Ltd [1978] AC 141, 152 (Lord Wilberforce); Fothergill v Monarch Airlines Ltd [1981] AC 251, 281-282 (Lord Diplock). This principle is just as relevant in determining the scope of application of rules incorporating an international convention as it is in interpreting their linguistic meaning."

It is appropriate therefore to consider the jurisprudence of several countries as guides to the interpretation of section 4 of the FAAEA in so far as they have statutory provisions which are worded in a similar way to the Cayman Islands provision.

32. The Board has set out the relevant text of section 4 of the FAAEA in paragraph 16 above. Several questions of interpretation arise. They are (i) the meaning of "legal proceedings" commenced by a party to an arbitration agreement, (ii) the meaning of any "matter" which the parties have agreed to refer to arbitration, (iii) whether a stay of legal proceedings can be a partial stay, and (iv) the meaning of "inoperative" in the phrase "the court, unless satisfied that the arbitration agreement is ... inoperative… shall make an order staying the proceedings".

(a) The meaning of "legal proceedings"

33. It was not contentious and the Board sees no reason to question that "legal proceedings" in section 4 of the FAAEA can include a petition to wind up a company of which the parties to an arbitration agreement are members. In Fulham (para 33) the Court of Appeal of England and Wales treated as legal proceedings under section 9(1) of the Arbitration Act 1996 a petition under section 994 of the Companies Act 2006 alleging that a company's affairs had been conducted in a manner which was unfair to the petitioner as one of its members. In Quiksilver, Harris J in the Court of First Instance in Hong Kong dealt with a petition for the winding up of a solvent company on the just and equitable ground. The relevant provision of the Arbitration Ordinance (differing from those of the Cayman Islands and England and Wales) spoke of "a court before which an action is brought" having the power to refer the parties to the petition to an arbitration. He observed that winding up proceedings were not an action and distinguished the case of Fulham on that ground; but, as the parties did not dispute that the court had a discretionary power to stay the petition, the difference in wording between the Hong Kong provisions and the English provisions did not have a material impact on the matter which he had to decide (paras 20-21).

(b) The meaning and ascertainment of "matter"

34. There is now considerable jurisprudence in several countries which casts light on the meaning of a "matter" in domestic legislation implementing the New York Convention.

35. In Fulham Patten LJ, giving the leading judgment of the Court of Appeal of England and Wales, treated as "matters" falling within the arbitration clause of the rules of the Football Association Premier League Ltd ("the FAPL") the allegation that there had been unfair prejudice to Fulham Football Club (1987) Ltd ("the Club") in the conduct of the affairs of the FAPL and the remedies, which the Club sought, of an order restraining the chairman of the FAPL from participating in future player transfer negotiations and an order that he cease to be chairman of the FAPL. In para 33 Patten LJ observed that it was common ground that an arbitrator could make the orders which the Club sought. In substance, the subject matter of the Club's petition under section 994 of the Companies Act 2006 was treated as a matter to be referred to arbitration and the section 994 petition was stayed. The principal question which was in dispute in that case was whether the matters were arbitrable; a similar question arises in this appeal which the Board addresses below.

36. In Lombard North Central plc v GATX Corporation [2012] EWHC 1067 (Comm); [2013] Bus LR 68 ("Lombard North Central") Andrew Smith J in the High Court of England and Wales addressed an application under section 9 of the Arbitration Act 1996 for a stay of legal proceedings for arbitration. The arbitration agreement was contained in an agreement for the financing of train vehicles which provided for the establishment of a joint venture by the claimants and another company. The arbitration agreement covered disputes which arose relating to the joint venture. The claimants sought declaratory relief in the High Court concerning the meaning of a clause in the agreement which provided for the establishment of the joint venture. The defendants applied for a stay of those proceedings. The case involved a dispute as to the scope of the arbitration agreement, a subject with which the Board is not concerned in this appeal, and the meaning of section 9 of the 1996 Act. In his judgment Andrew Smith J focussed on the words "in respect of" a matter rather than the word "matter" in section 9. What he said is nonetheless important with regard to the meaning of "matter" as his statements on the subject in paras 13-17 of his judgment have been relied on in the English cases which the Board discusses below.

37. In his discussion in those paragraphs Andrew Smith J, first, recognised that section 9 empowers the court to grant a stay of part of legal proceedings, where those proceedings were in respect of a referred matter and other matters. He held that the express words of section 9(1) permitted such a stay as they referred to a stay of the proceedings "so far as they concern that matter". Secondly, he stated that the court determines whether the proceedings relate to a referred matter by having regard to the nature of the claim or claims rather than relying only on the formulations in the claim form and any pleadings. In so doing, the court should consider what questions will foreseeably arise for determination in the proceedings, and whether they include, or would foreseeably include, referred matters. Such foreseeable questions would, in the Board's view, include matters raised in defences yet to be pleaded. Thirdly, he held that a party to an arbitration agreement is entitled to a stay unless he could have no real or proper purpose for seeking the stay. Fourthly, the risk of proceedings both before the courts and an arbitral tribunal is inherent in an arbitration agreement which refers only certain disputes to arbitration. Referring to the speech of Lord Mustill in Channel Tunnel Group Ltd v Balfour Beatty Construction Ltd [1993] AC 334, at 353, he stated that that is the price of respecting the parties' agreement and the risk that they are to be taken to have chosen to take. Fifthly, he stated that a defendant would not necessarily be entitled to stay the legal proceedings where the referred matter was peripheral to the proceedings as a whole. The proceedings could be partly stayed to allow the referred matter to be determined by arbitration while the proceedings could otherwise proceed.

38. In Quiksilver the Court of First Instance in Hong Kong addressed an application to stay or dismiss petitions by a shareholder to wind up two solvent joint venture companies on the just and equitable ground. The shareholders of the companies had entered into a detailed joint venture agreement which contained an arbitration clause and a buy-sell procedure as a means of resolving disputes by enabling one party to buy out the shares of the other. After difficulties had arisen in the buy-sell procedure, Quiksilver Greater China Ltd presented the winding up petitions. The other shareholder, Glorious Sun Overseas Co Ltd, invoked the arbitration agreement and sought a stay of the winding up petitions pending the outcome of the arbitration. Before the judge, the principal disputes between the parties were whether the winding up petitions amounted to class actions and whether a shareholder had an inalienable right of access to the court to seek the winding up of a company rather than any question of statutory interpretation as to what would amount to a "matter" to be sent to arbitration. Because, as mentioned above, the Hong Kong legislation referred to an "action" rather than "legal proceedings" the Hong Kong equivalent to section 4 of the FAAEA was not in play and the judge was addressing a discretionary stay rather than a mandatory stay under the Hong Kong legislation. Harris J recognised, and it was common ground between the parties, that an arbitrator could not make a winding up order which affected third parties but he held that the precise relief sought in the winding up petitions was not critical. He stated (para 22) that the correct approach is "to identify the substance of the dispute between the parties and ask whether or not that dispute is covered by the arbitration agreement." Harris J analysed the substantive dispute between the parties to be the basis on which the joint venture was to end, being either a buy-out by Glorious Sun or a winding up at the instance of Quiksilver. That commercial dispute was arbitrable and, if Quiksilver were to prevail in the arbitration, the stay of the winding up petitions could be lifted and the court would not need to re-hear the substantive arguments, which would have been determined in the arbitration.

39. In Tomolugen the Court of Appeal of Singapore addressed an application under section 6 of the International Arbitration Act (Cap 143A, 2002 Rev Ed) ("the IAA") by Lionsgate Holdings Pte Ltd ("Lionsgate") for a mandatory stay for arbitration of court proceedings raised by a minority shareholder, Silica Investors Ltd ("Silica"), under section 216 of the Companies Act (Cap 50, 2006 Rev Ed) for relief for oppressive or unfairly prejudicial conduct. The defendants in the court proceedings were the company, the shareholders of the company, including Lionsgate, and the directors and former directors of the company and related companies. Lionsgate, which was the wholly owned subsidiary of Tomolugen Holdings Ltd, the majority shareholder in the company, had sold shares in the company to Silica in a share sale agreement which contained an arbitration clause. Lionsgate argued that part of the dispute in the court action fell within the arbitration clause of the share sale agreement and to that extent the legal proceedings should be the subject of a mandatory stay. It, and the other defendants, sought a discretionary case management stay of the remainder of the legal proceedings, pending the outcome of the arbitration. Much of the judgment of the Court of Appeal, delivered by Sundaresh Menon CJ, concerned the question of arbitrability, which the Board considers below in this appeal. But the judgment also contained an important discussion of the concept of a "matter".

40. The Court of Appeal (paras 15-19) analysed the allegations made in the section 216 application under four broad categories (1) the share issuance allegation, (2) the management participation allegation, (3) the guarantees allegation, and (4) the asset exploitation allegation.

41. It will assist the understanding of the judgment if the Board quotes the relevant provision (section 6) of the IAA which provides:

> "(1) Notwithstanding Article 8 of the Model Law, where any party to an arbitration agreement to which this Act applies institutes any proceedings in any court against any other party to the agreement in respect of any matter which is the subject of the agreement, any party to the agreement may, at any time after appearance and before delivering any pleading or taking any other step in the proceedings, apply to that court to stay the proceedings so far as the proceedings relate to that matter.
> (2) The court to which an application has been made in accordance with subsection (1) shall make an order, upon such terms or conditions as it may think fit, staying the proceedings so far as the proceedings relate to the matter, unless it is satisfied that the arbitration agreement is null and void, inoperative or incapable of being performed." (Emphasis added)

42. Between paras 108 and 122 of the court's judgment Sundaresh Menon CJ addressed the question whether a "matter" should be interpreted broadly by identifying the essential dispute or the main issue, as Silica urged, or more granularly, as Lionsgate submitted. He stated (para 108) that establishing whether the dispute pertained to a matter that is subject to the arbitration agreement involves two stages:

> "(a) the court must first determine what the matter or matters are in the court proceedings; and
> (b) it must then ascertain whether the matter(s) fall within the scope of the arbitration clause on its true construction."

At the first stage, the court proceedings which are sought to be stayed may involve more than a single matter. In addressing the differing submissions of the parties, Sundaresh Menon CJ stated (para 113) that the starting point of the analysis was the language of section 6 of the IAA. Section 6 of the IAA mandates a stay only "so far as" the court proceedings relate to the matter or matters which are the subject of the arbitration agreement. This, he stated, militates against taking "an excessively broad view of what constitutes a 'matter' or treating it as a synonym for the court proceedings as a whole". He continued (para 113):

> "In our judgment, when the court considers whether any 'matter' is covered by an arbitration clause, it should undertake a practical and common-sense enquiry in relation to > any reasonably substantial issue that is not merely peripherally or tangentially connected to the dispute in the court proceedings. The court should not characterise the matter(s) in either an overly broad or an unduly narrow and pedantic manner. In most cases, the matter would encompass the claims made in the proceedings. But, that is not an absolute or inflexible rule." (Emphasis in the original)

43. In support of this view Sundaresh Menon CJ then addressed jurisprudence from Australia (Tridon), the British Virgin Islands (Ennio Zanotti v Interlog Finance Corp Claim No BVIHCV 2009/0394 (8 February 2010)) and England (Lombard North Central) before concluding at para 122:

> "We therefore consider that a 'matter', for the purposes of s 6 of the IAA, should not be construed in either an overly broad or an unduly narrow way. On the specific facts of this case, each of the four categories of allegations made in the Suit raises substantial issues that are neither peripheral nor tangential to Silica Investors' claim for relief under s 216 of the Companies Act. We accordingly find that each category is a separate 'matter' for the purposes of Lionsgate's stay application under s 6 of the IAA."

44. Thereafter, the court analysed the arbitration clause to determine which of the categories of allegation (para 40 above) fell within the scope of the arbitration agreement. It was not in dispute that the third and fourth categories did not, and the court therefore focused on the first two categories. In each category the court examined the substance of the controversy and concluded that the share issuance allegation was not within the scope of the arbitration agreement but that the management participation allegation was.

45. In WDR Delaware Foster J in the Federal Court of Australia addressed an application for a stay under section 7(2) of the International Arbitration Act 1974 and article 8(1) of the UNCITRAL Model Law on International Commercial Arbitration which has the force of law in Australia. Hydrox Ltd was a joint venture company. The legal proceedings in question were for (i) a declaration that the affairs of Hydrox Ltd had been conducted in a manner oppressive to, unfairly prejudicial to or unfairly discriminatory against WDR, and (ii) an order for the winding up of Hydrox Ltd. It was common ground that the disputes between the shareholders were within the scope of the arbitration clause in the joint venture agreement. The principal dispute before Foster J was whether some or all of the claims in the court proceedings were arbitrable and, if so, whether the whole or only part of the court proceedings should be stayed.

46. The relevant statutory provisions were as follows. Section 7(2) of the International Arbitration Act 1974 provided:

> "Subject to this Part, where:
>
> (a) proceedings instituted by a party to an arbitration agreement to which this section applies against another party to the agreement are pending in a court; and
>
> (b) the proceedings involve the determination of a matter that, in pursuance of the agreement, is capable of settlement by arbitration;
>
> on the application of a party to the agreement, the court shall, by order, upon such conditions (if any) as it thinks fit, stay the proceedings or so much of the proceedings as involves the determination of that matter, as the case may be, and refer the parties to arbitration in respect of that matter." (Emphasis added)

Article 8(1) of the Model Law provides:

> "A court before which an action is brought in a matter which is the subject of an arbitration agreement shall, if a party so requests not later than when submitting his first statement on the substance of the dispute, refer the parties to arbitration unless it finds that the agreement is null and void, inoperative or incapable of being performed."

47. Foster J set out his analysis of how the court identifies the matters which are the subject of the legal proceedings between paras 102 and 123 of his judgment. In summary, he reasoned: (i) that the nature and extent of the matters are ordinarily to be ascertained from the pleadings and from the underlying subject matter upon which the pleadings, including any defence, are based; the task is to ascertain the substantive questions in dispute, (ii) multiple matters may exist within the one court proceeding; (iii) a matter is something more than a mere issue or question that might fall for decision in the court proceedings or in the arbitral proceedings, (iv) a matter may or may not comprise the whole subject matter of any given proceeding, and (v) the court must first identify the matter or matters to be determined in the court proceeding before asking whether those matters fall within the scope of the arbitration agreement, and, if so, whether they are arbitrable.

48. In support of his third proposition, that a matter is something more than a mere issue or question which might fall for determination in proceedings, Foster J cited the judgment of the High Court of Australia in Tanning Research Laboratories Inc v O'Brien (1990) 169 CLR 332 ("Tanning"). That case was concerned principally with section 7(2) and (4) of the Arbitration (Foreign Awards and Agreements) Act 1974 (renamed in 1989 the International Arbitration Act 1974, as considered in WDR Delaware) and the question whether a liquidator was a person "claiming through" the company in liquidation, which was a party to an arbitration agreement, and therefore entitled to a stay of legal proceedings for arbitration. The High Court held that the liquidator, who had rejected a creditor's proof of debt for goods allegedly sold under a licence agreement which contained an arbitration clause, was a person claiming through the company under section 7(4) and was entitled to a stay under section 7(2). Deane and Gaudron JJ in a joint dissenting judgment discussed the meaning of the word "matter" in section 7(2) at pp 351-352. They observed that "matter" was not defined in the 1974 Act but that, in any context, it was "a word of wide import" and stated:

> "In the context of s. 7(2), the expression 'matter … capable of settlement by arbitration' may, but does not necessarily, mean the whole matter in controversy in the court proceedings. So too, it may, but does not necessarily encompass all the claims within the scope of the controversy in the court proceedings. Even so, the expression 'matter … capable of settlement by arbitration' indicates something more than a mere issue which might fall for decision in the court proceedings or might fall for decision in arbitral proceedings if they were instituted. … It requires that there be some subject matter, some right or liability in controversy which, if not co-extensive with the subject matter in controversy in the court proceedings, is at least susceptible of settlement as a discrete controversy."

Deane and Gaudron JJ went on (p 353) to reject the argument that section 7(2) did not apply to proof of debt proceedings, stating that the operation of the section is not confined to proceedings in which the parties seek the same relief as might be sought in arbitration proceedings.

49. In Sodzawiczny v Ruhan [2018] EWHC 1908 (Comm); [2018] Bus LR 2419 ("Sodzawiczny") Popplewell J in the High Court of England and Wales addressed an application for a stay of legal proceedings under section 9 of the Arbitration Act 1996 which refers to proceedings having been brought "in respect of a matter which … is to be referred to arbitration." The basis on which the defendants sought a stay of proceedings was that their defence to legal proceedings against them fell within the scope of the parties' arbitration agreement. The claimant opposed the stay, arguing that section 9 was not engaged if the claim itself did not fall within the arbitration agreement.

50. Popplewell J recorded that it was common ground that section 9 of the 1996 Act allowed a stay for arbitration of one or more matters within the legal proceedings while leaving other matters to be pursued in court. It was also common ground that there were two stages in the court's inquiry under section 9: first the court must determine what the matter or matters are in respect of which the court proceedings have been brought; and, secondly, the court must then determine in respect of each such matter whether it falls within the scope of the arbitration agreement (paras 35-36).

51. The material difference between the parties was as to the meaning of "matter". The claimant's counsel submitted that "matter" in section 9 was to be equated with a claim or cause of action and the fact that a defence is raised which falls within an arbitration agreement does not engage section 9. The defendants' counsel argued that "matter" meant an issue and that the court had to search for issues which were the subject matter of the arbitration agreement. Popplewell J referred to various authorities, including Lombard North Central and Tomolugen. He observed that the thing which parties referred to arbitration was a dispute or difference, words which were in this context synonymous. A dispute could be constituted in general terms, or it might be well defined before legal proceedings were commenced. A cause of action might involve several issues and sub-issues, some of which might be arbitrable and some not, and a commercial action often might involve several causes of action. Defences to a claim might involve a completely different set of facts and legal principles from those involved in the claim itself.

52. Popplewell J rejected the claimant's argument that section 9 was not concerned with a defence but only with a claim. He set out in para 43 what he considered to be the principled approach to what constitutes a "matter". He stated:

> "The court should treat as a 'matter' in respect of which the proceedings are brought any issue which is capable of constituting a dispute or difference which may fall within the scope of an arbitration agreement."

53. He continued his analysis in that paragraph by stating, secondly, that where the issues had not been fully identified in the legal proceedings by the time the court addressed the application for a stay, the court should seek to identify the issues which it was reasonably foreseeable might arise. He stated, thirdly, that the court should stay the proceedings to the extent of any issue which falls within the scope of an arbitration agreement. The search, he said, "is not for the main issue or issues, or what are the most substantial issues, but for any and all issues which may be the subject matter of an arbitration agreement". This applied to any dispute with which the court proceedings were, or would foreseeably be, concerned. Fourthly, section 9 was concerned with substance and not form, and the court should look at the nature and substance of the claim and the issues to which it gave rise and not simply the formulation in the pleadings. The same approach should be adopted to identified or foreseeable defences. In para 44 of his judgment Popplewell J recognised that this approach could lead to a fragmentation of proceedings but opined that this was the result of the sanctity of the parties' arbitration contract and the requirement in section 9 that the court uphold the parties' bargain. The risk of fragmentation could be reduced either by an expansive construction of the arbitration agreement or by the court's use of its case management powers to stay proceedings in so far as they fall outside the scope of the arbitration agreement.

54. In Republic of Mozambique (acting through its Attorney General) v Credit Suisse International [2021] EWCA Civ 329; [2022] 1 All ER Comm 235 ("Mozambique") the Court of Appeal of England and Wales addressed the meaning of "matter" in section 9 of the 1996 Act. Carr LJ, in a judgment with which Singh and Henderson LJJ agreed, stated:

> "63. A 'matter' is not the same as a cause of action; it includes any issue capable of constituting a dispute under the relevant arbitration agreement. And a mandatory stay under s. 9(4) can be applied pro tanto (as reflected in the words 'so far as they concern that matter' in s. 9(1)).
> 64. There are two stages of inquiry for a court (although there may be overlapping considerations): first, to identify the 'matters' in respect of which the proceedings are brought; secondly, to assess whether those matters are 'matters' which the parties have agreed are 'to be referred to arbitration'. That is to be resolved by reference to the scope of the relevant arbitration agreement properly construed in context...."

55. Carr LJ then stated that the relevant principles were summarised in the judgment of Popplewell J in paras 43 and 44 of his judgment in Sodzawiczny and quoted in full those paragraphs, which the Board has summarised in paras 52 and 53 above. She stated (para 66) that the position identified by Popplewell J was consistent with and followed the earlier decision of the Singapore Court of Appeal in Tomolugen which the Board has discussed in paras 39-44 above. Carr LJ summarised the position under the title "Discussion and analysis" at paras 70-72 of her judgment stating:

> "70. It is trite law that an arbitration agreement is a contractual agreement to which statute dictates that mandatory effect must be given in so far as it applies: Sodzawiczny at para 44. The application of s. 9 can give rise to particular > difficulties both as a matter of analysis and procedure, but the sanctity of the parties' agreement takes priority.

> 71. Thus, whether or not there is futility in practical terms of any stay is immaterial. Equally, the fact that there may be (on the facts of this case particularly acute) unwelcome case management complications if all or parts of claims are stayed is irrelevant. These are complexities which flow from s. 9 and ones which will often arise in multi-party, multi-issue litigation such as this.
> 72. I also accept that there is a two-stage test (although the considerations that arise may overlap and it may be convenient to consider the questions together): first to identify the matter and secondly to decide if that matter is one that the parties have agreed can only be arbitrated. Further, the court looks to substance and not form, adopting a practical and common-sense approach. It should guard against placing undue weight on what may be nuanced emphases or artificial characterisations adopted for tactical or other purposes. This is of course not to say that the parties' pleaded position is to be ignored, but rather to emphasise that the search is for the reality of the dispute."

56. The Supreme Court of the United Kingdom has reviewed the decision of the Court of Appeal in Mozambique in a judgment handed down on the same day as this judgment is promulgated. The approach of that court to the question of what is a "matter" and how the court ascertains what is a "matter" is consistent with the approach which the Board adopts on this appeal in the following paragraphs.

57. From this brief review of international authorities the Board considers that there is now a general consensus among leading arbitration jurisdictions in the common law world that the domestic courts of countries that are signatories of the New York Convention respect and give priority to the autonomy of the parties to arbitration agreements. The statutory provisions of those countries provide for a mandatory stay of legal proceedings at the request of a party to an arbitration agreement when a matter in those proceedings is referrable to arbitration. There is also a broad consensus on how to approach the determination of matters which must be referred to arbitration.

58. The court in considering such an application adopts a two-stage process. First, the court must determine what the matters are which the parties have raised or foreseeably will raise in the court proceedings, and, secondly, the court must determine in relation to each such matter whether it falls within the scope of the arbitration agreement. (See Tomolugen, para 42 above; WDR Delaware, para 47 above and Sodzawiczny, para 50 above).

59. The court must ascertain the substance of the dispute or disputes between the parties. This involves looking at the claimant's pleadings but not being overly respectful to the formulations in those pleadings which may be aimed at avoiding a reference to arbitration. It involves also a consideration of the defences, if any, which may be skeletal as the defendant seeks a reference to arbitration, and the court should also take into account all reasonably foreseeable defences to the claim or part of the claim. (See Lombard North Central, para 37 above; Quiksilver, para 38 above, Tomolugen, para 42 above, WDR Delaware, para 47 above; and Sodzawiczny, para 53 above).

60. Secondly, while article II(3) of the New York Convention, which requires that the court refer a matter to arbitration, is silent as to the stay of the court proceedings, legislation implementing this provision of the New York Convention has generally made express provision for a stay pro tanto. Examples include section 9 of the Arbitration Act 1996 in England and Wales, section 10 of the Arbitration (Scotland) Act 2010 in Scotland, section 7 of the International Arbitration Act 1974 in Australia, and section 6 of the IAA in Singapore. In the Cayman Islands section 4 of the FAAEA speaks of "staying the proceedings" and makes no reference to the possibility of a stay pro tanto. Nonetheless, the context is a domestic statute implementing an international convention, in which broad and generally accepted principles should be adopted in interpreting such a statute: see Gol Linhas which the Board discussed in para 31 above. In Bennion, Bailey and Norbury on Statutory Interpretation (8th ed. 2020) the authors state at section 9.3: "Unless the contrary intention appears, the legislature is presumed to intend an enactment to be read in light of the principle that the greater includes the less." This principle is derived from Roman law ("non debet cui plus licet, quod minus est non licere": Corpus Juris Civilis, Digest 17.21 (Ulpian)). In the Board's view in this context the greater includes the lesser. Counsel did not argue otherwise in this appeal. Accordingly, the Board considers that section 4 of the FAAEA allows a pro tanto stay of legal proceedings.

61. Thirdly, in the Board's view, a "matter" is a substantial issue that is legally relevant to a claim or a defence, or foreseeable defence, in the legal proceedings, and is susceptible to be determined by an arbitrator as a discrete dispute. If the "matter" is not an essential element of the claim or of a relevant defence, it is not a matter in respect of which the legal proceedings are brought. The Board agrees with the statement of Sundaresh Menon CJ in para 113 of Tomolugen that a "matter" requiring a stay does not extend to an issue that is peripheral or tangential to the subject matter of the legal proceedings. The Board agrees with Foster J's third proposition in WDR Delaware that a "matter" is something more than a mere issue or question that might fall for decision in the court proceedings or in the arbitral proceedings.

62. A focus on the substantial nature and relevance of a referred matter to the legal proceedings is consistent with international jurisprudence, including Lombard North Central, Quiksilver, and Tomolugen. It is also consistent with the Australian jurisprudence in Tanning and WDR Delaware. In those cases, the judicial formulation was influenced by the statutory wording of section 7(2) of the International Arbitration Act 1974 which refers to a matter "capable of settlement by arbitration". But there is no material difference between that formulation and the other judicial formulae as a stay of legal proceedings should be granted only in respect of a dispute which falls within an arbitration agreement and is capable of settlement by arbitration.

63. The judgment of Popplewell J in Sodzawiczny is in part consistent with this approach but the passages in his summary of the law in para 43 of his judgment which suggest that a "matter" is any issue which is capable of constituting a dispute or difference within the scope of an arbitration agreement cannot be accepted without qualification in the light of the wider case law discussed above. Popplewell J referred to Lombard North Central and Tomolugen as the background to his analysis. Those judgments contain further qualifications which are not expressly articulated in his summary, although he may have taken them as read. In para 43 he spoke of a "matter" as "any issue which is capable of constituting a dispute or difference" within the scope of the arbitration agreement and as covering "all issues which may be the subject of the arbitration agreement". These formulae expressly draw on the judgment of Andrew Smith J in Lombard North Central. But no mention is made of Andrew Smith J's concern about the abusive application for a stay which the Board discusses in para 64 below nor of his recognition that peripheral matters may not merit a stay of the legal proceedings. The emphasis in Tomolugen on the evaluation of the matter as being of reasonable substance and not peripheral to the legal proceedings is not reflected in the relevant paragraph of the Sodzawiczny judgment.

64. No judicial formula encapsulating the meaning of "matter" should be treated as if it were a statutory text. A court facing an application for a stay under section 4 of the FAAEA should approach the question in a practical and common-sense way. The court must respect the agreement of the parties to arbitrate their disputes. An agreement to arbitrate a dispute is an agreement not to resolve that dispute in court proceedings. Thus, any substantial matter in the legal proceedings, which is relevant to the claim or foreseeable defence, and which is within the scope of the arbitration agreement, will give rise to a mandatory stay of the legal proceedings pro tanto on the application of one of the parties. There is considerable authority to support the view that the procedural complexity caused by a reference to arbitration does not of itself render a matter non-arbitrable: see, for example, Wealands, Mance LJ para 26, Fulham, Patten LJ para 25, Tomolugen, Sundaresh Menon CJ para 105. That does not mean that procedural complexity is irrelevant in all circumstances because the court, when addressing an application to stay legal proceedings to enable the determination of a dispute by arbitration, should be careful to prevent an abuse of process. The Board agrees with Andrew Smith J in Lombard North Central (para 37 above) that the court could refuse an otherwise mandatory stay if the applicant has no real or proper purpose for seeking the stay. That could include not only an application for a stay in relation to issues that were peripheral to the legal proceedings but also an application that amounted to an abuse of process. In this regard the Board respectfully disagrees with the statement of the Court of Appeal in England and Wales in para 71 of the judgment in Mozambique (para 55 above) that the practical futility of a stay will in all circumstances be irrelevant. There may be circumstances in which a party seeks a stay for an improper purpose and it would be contrary to justice if the court could not act to prevent an abuse of process. For example, if matters (1) and (2) were referred to arbitration and an arbitral tribunal were to determine those matters in FMCH's favour and FMCH acted promptly to remove a stay on the legal proceedings before the Grand Court, the court would be entitled to look with some care at any application for a stay for a further arbitration.

65. Fourthly, the exercise involving a judicial evaluation of the substance and relevance of the "matter" entails a matter of judgment and the application of common sense. It is not a mechanistic exercise. It is not sufficient merely to identify that an issue is capable of constituting a dispute or difference within the scope of an arbitration agreement without carrying out an evaluation of whether the issue is reasonably substantial and whether it is relevant to the outcome of the legal proceedings of which a party seeks a stay. In so far as the summary of the law in para 43 of Sodzawiczny suggests otherwise, it is in error.

66. The approach to the word "matter" in section 4 of the FAAEA set out in paras 59-65 above may involve the fragmentation of the parties' disputes with some matters being determined by an arbitral panel and other matters being resolved by the court. Such fragmentation may on occasion be inconvenient to one or more of the parties to the court proceedings. Rational businesspeople may as a general rule prefer that their disputes are determined in the same forum: see Lord Hoffmann in Fiona Trust & Holding Corpn v Privalov [2007] UKHL 40; [2007] Bus LR 1719 ("Fiona Trust"), paras 5-8. An arbitration agreement may be interpreted generously to achieve that end if the court can ascertain that as the parties' commercial purpose and the wording of the agreement can bear that meaning. But, where, on a proper interpretation of the arbitration agreement, the parties have contracted to refer to arbitration disputes which do not extend to all the matters raised in the legal proceedings, giving effect to the parties' contract will involve fragmentation of the disputes. The disadvantages caused by such fragmentation can be mitigated by effective case management by both the court and the arbitral panel.

67. In the light of the case law discussed above, the Board considers that the obiter comments of Carswell LCJ in the Northern Ireland Court of Appeal in In re Wine Inns Ltd [2000] NIJB 343, 358-359, should not be followed. He stated that the just and equitable winding up petition or the application for relief against the conduct of the management of a company in an unfairly prejudicial manner in that case, which related to allegations of the breakdown of trust and confidence in a quasi-partnership, each raised an indivisible issue and not a series of discrete disputes or matters. That is not consistent with the case law which the Board has discussed above.

68. As discussed below, the meaning of "matter" is relevant to the question of whether an arbitration agreement is operative. The Board now turns to that question.

(c) The meaning of "the arbitration agreement is … inoperative"

69. As set out in para 30 above, article II(3) of the New York Convention, which is enacted in domestic law by section 4 of the FAAEA, provides exceptions to the obligation of a court of a contracting state to refer a matter to arbitration if the arbitration agreement is "null and void, inoperative or incapable of being performed." Section 4 uses the same words in defining the exceptions. In this case, the questions whether the subject matter of the dispute between the parties is indivisible or whether the remedies sought are arbitrable would not, in the Board's view, fall within the exception that the agreement was null and void or the exception that that agreement was incapable of being performed. The Board is concerned with the exception that the agreement is inoperative. The essence of the dispute between the parties on this appeal turns on this question. It is whether the arbitration agreement is inoperative or, in other words, the matters at issue between the parties are incapable of being settled by arbitration or the remedies sought are unavailable to an arbitral tribunal.

70. On the authorities there are two broad circumstances in which an arbitration agreement may be inoperative. The first is where certain types of dispute are excluded by statute or public policy from determination by an arbitral tribunal. The second is where the award of certain remedies is beyond the jurisdiction which the parties can confer through their agreement on an arbitral tribunal. The Board refers to the first type as "subject matter non-arbitrability" and to the second as "remedial non-arbitrability".

71. Subject matter non-arbitrability can arise where the state intervenes by statute to preserve a right of access to the courts. Examples of such in English law in the field of employment and discrimination can be found in section 203 of the Employment Rights Act 1996 and section 144(1) of the Equality Act 2010, which, subject to specified exceptions, prevent parties by agreement from contracting out of an employee's right to have access to an employment tribunal, or in the latter Act the courts. Subject matter non-arbitrability may also arise as a result of public policy considerations. In the Singaporean case of Larsen Oil and Gas Pte Ltd v Petropod Ltd [2011] 3 SLR 414, ("Larsen") V K Rajah JA, delivering the judgment of the Singapore Court of Appeal, at para 44 recognised two grounds for excluding from arbitration a dispute which fell within the scope of an arbitration agreement. The first was where the legislature had precluded the use of arbitration to determine the particular type of dispute and the second was where "there is an inherent conflict between arbitration and the public policy considerations involved in that particular type of dispute". Larsen was concerned with claims by the liquidator of an insolvent company for the avoidance of unfair preferences and payments made with an intention to defraud a creditor which arose only on the onset of insolvency and could be pursued by the liquidator of the insolvent company for the benefit of the company's creditors. The court refused the application by Larsen, the recipient of the alleged preference, to stay the legal proceedings for arbitration of the dispute on grounds of public policy, namely that it would affect the substantive rights of the company's creditors and undermine the policy aims of the insolvency regime.

72. The underlying concept of subject-matter non-arbitrability is that there are certain matters which in the public interest should be reserved to the courts or other public tribunals for determination. But there is no agreement internationally as to the kinds of subject matter or dispute which fall within subject matter non-arbitrability. In the 2001 Companion Volume to their book on Commercial Arbitration Lord Mustill and Stewart Boyd stated (p 71):

> "Since different states have their own traditions and precepts, differing radically from state to state, on matters of politics, economics, morality and the like, it is not surprising that equally radical divergences can be found when each state identifies the matters which are regarded as too important to be left to private dispute resolution."

73. A similar statement can be found in Born, International Commercial Arbitration, 3rd ed (2021) Vol I, p 1029, para 6.01 in which the author states:

> "Although the better view is that the [New York] Convention imposes international limits on Contracting States' applications of the nonarbitrability doctrine… the types of claims that are nonarbitrable differ from nation to nation. Among other things, typical examples of nonarbitrable subjects in different jurisdictions include selected categories of disputes involving criminal matters; domestic relations and succession; bankruptcy; trade sanctions; certain competition claims; consumer claims; labor or employment grievances; and certain intellectual property matters. Over the past several decades, the scope of the non-arbitrability doctrine has materially diminished in most developed jurisdictions.
> As these examples suggest, the types of disputes which are nonarbitrable nonetheless almost always arise from a common > set of considerations. The nonarbitrability doctrine rests on the notion that some matters so pervasively involve either 'public' rights and concerns, or interests of third parties, that agreements to resolve such disputes by 'private' arbitration should not be given effect." (Footnotes omitted)

74. It would be wrong, however, to overstate the differences of approach in the commercial sphere between jurisdictions which share the same common law heritage. In the Board's view, the jurisprudence of the courts of other common law jurisdictions in this sphere can provide the generally accepted principles for the commercial law of the Cayman Islands. It is also relevant to bear in mind, when considering these commentaries, the relatively granular meaning of "matter" in the FAAEA, which the Board discussed in paras 61-63 above, when addressing the question whether a matter is excluded from arbitral determination by subject matter non-arbitrability.

75. The second circumstance in which an arbitration agreement may be inoperative, ie where there is remedial non-arbitrability, is concerned with the circumstance in which the parties have the power to refer matters to arbitration but cannot confer on the arbitral tribunal the power to give certain remedies. In the common law world there appears to be a general consensus that an arbitration agreement cannot confer on an arbitral tribunal the power to make an order to wind up a registered company on the application of a creditor where the company is insolvent and there is strong authority in support of such an exclusion when the application is by a contributory where the company is solvent. This is because the power to wind up a company lies within the exclusive jurisdiction of the courts, which alone have the discretion as to whether to make such an order. See in English law, Fulham at paras 76 and 83, in Hong Kong, Quiksilver para 14, in Singapore, Tomolugen para 83 (in relation to a creditor's application), in Australia, WDR Delaware para 26. In Quiksilver and WDR Delaware the inability of an arbitral tribunal to make a winding up order was common ground; it is also common ground between the parties on this appeal.

76. There is a general consensus that an arbitral tribunal has the power to grant inter partes remedies, such as ordering a share buy-out in proceedings for relief for unfairly prejudicial conduct in the management of a company under section 994 of the Companies Act 2006 in the United Kingdom and similar legislation in other jurisdictions. See Fulham, Patten LJ at paras 77-78, Longmore LJ at paras 96 and 99; Tomolugen, Sundaresh Menon CJ at paras 88-89 and 103; WDR Delaware, Foster J at para 147 quoting para 194 of Tridon. Although the court is given the power by statute to make such orders, an arbitral tribunal may also grant such a remedy because third parties, who are not involved in the dispute, do not have a legal interest in the dispute and there is no public element in a dispute of that nature.

77. Similarly, in an application to wind up a company on the just and equitable ground there may be matters in dispute between the parties, such as allegations of breaches of a shareholders' agreement, which can be referred to an arbitral tribunal for a determination, which is binding on the parties, notwithstanding that only a court can make a winding up order: Fulham, Patten LJ at para 76; Quiksilver, Harris J at paras 14, 21-22; Tomolugen, Sundaresh Menon CJ at paras 96-103; WDR Delaware, Foster J at paras 161-164. The researches by the appellants' counsel demonstrate that a similar approach can be found in case law in Quebec, Canada (Capital JPEG Inc v Corporation Zone B4 Ltd [2019] QCCS 2986) in relation to mediation, Cyprus (In re Kissonerga Development Co Ltd (Application no 7/20) (unreported) 9 July 2020 which was an interim decision, Jersey (Consolidated Resources Armenia v Global Gold Consolidated Resources Ltd [2015] JCA 061 ("Consolidated Resources"), and Zambia (Vedanta Resources Holdings Ltd v ZCCM Investment Holdings plc [2020] ZMCA 104). See also in Hong Kong China Europe International Business School v Chengwei Evergreen Capital LP [2021] HKCFI 3513 ("China Europe"). Counsel did not address these cases in any detail, but they are consistent with the main cases which the Board has discussed above and support a conclusion that there is substantial agreement among common law jurisdictions as to the correct approach.

78. In WDR Delaware Foster J summarised his conclusion on this matter at para 164:

> "With the exception of that part of the present proceeding which involves the Court forming an opinion as to whether the plaintiffs are entitled to a winding up order, the questions of fact and law which mark out the substantive controversy between the parties in this proceeding are all matters which are capable of resolution by arbitration. Any award or awards which determine those matters will be taken into account when the Court comes to consider whether a winding up order should be made. If, at the end of the arbitral process, the award or awards do not address satisfactorily or comprehensively all of the grounds relied upon by the plaintiffs in support of their claims for relief made in the present proceeding, then it will be open to them to supplement or explain the terms of the relevant award or awards by evidence. The process by which that would be done is the everyday process of applying the law of evidence."

The Board agrees as a general rule with this approach to discrete matters which involve inter partes disputes in the context of a winding up application. Matters, such as whether one party has breached its obligations under a shareholders' agreement or whether equitable rights arising out of the relationship between the parties have been flouted, are arbitrable in the context of an application to wind up a company on the just and equitable ground and the arbitration agreement is not inoperative because the arbitral tribunal cannot make a winding up order.

9. The application of the FAAEA to the facts of this case

79. The first matter which the Board must address is the interpretation of the Companies Act. As stated in para 14 above, section 92 of that Act sets out the grounds on which the court may wind up a company including the ground which is relevant in this appeal, ie that the court is of the opinion that it is just and equitable that the company should be wound up. Section 95 of that Act sets out the powers of the court, which include the power to make a winding up order or on a contributory's petition on the just and equitable ground, an alternative order providing, among other things, for the purchase of the shares of any members of the company by other members of the company.

80. The Board agrees with Moses JA that the court's consideration under section 92 of the Act whether it is just and equitable that the company should be wound up is a threshold question which is to be answered before a petitioner can get access to any of the remedies available under section 95. That is clear from a straightforward reading of the wording of the Act. The Board also accepts, as Moses JA held, that the court has exclusive jurisdiction to make a winding up order. A winding up order is an order in rem which only a court can make. It is beyond the jurisdiction of an arbitral tribunal as parties cannot confer such a power on an arbitral tribunal by private agreement. An arbitral agreement that purported to confer such a power would be inoperative to that extent.

81. Further, in deciding whether to make a winding up order on the just and equitable ground, the court conducts a wide-ranging enquiry into and evaluation of the facts. The court takes the decision whether it is just and equitable to wind up a company with regard to all the relevant circumstances at the date of the hearing: Lau v Chu [2020] UKPC 24; [2020] 1 WLR 4656 ("Lau v Chu"), para 43 per Lord Briggs, giving the judgment of the Board. A decision by an arbitral tribunal on whether it was just and equitable to wind up the company by reference to the circumstances which existed on an earlier date could not determine the issue which the court has to consider. Such a decision would be an ineffective legal judgment. The Board therefore respectfully disagrees with the obiter suggestion by Patten LJ in Fulham at para 83 (and its endorsement by Sundaresh Menon CJ in Tomolugen at para 100) that an arbitrator could make a ruling on whether it would be appropriate for a complainant to initiate winding up proceedings or be limited to some lesser remedy. A ruling by an arbitral tribunal that it was of the view that it was just and equitable that a company be wound up would be ineffective; it could not bind the parties in a hearing before the court and, given the interests of third parties in a possible winding up of the company, it could not bind the court. In deciding on the appropriate remedy under section 95 the court takes into account the interests of third parties, including the company's directors and employees, and businesses which have dealings with the company, who will be affected if a winding up order is made. See, by way of analogy, Fulham para 46; In re Neath Rugby Ltd [2009] EWCA Civ 291, [2010] BCC 597, para 84; and In re Asia Television Ltd [2015] 1 HKLRD 607, paras 55-58.

82. The parties were therefore correct in their agreement that an arbitral tribunal does not have the power to decide the fifth matter listed in para 23 above, ie whether a winding up order should be made and whether the persons identified by FMCH should be appointed joint liquidators of the Company. Further, for the reasons set out above, the Board agrees with Mr Thomas Lowe, counsel for FMCH, that an arbitral tribunal does not have power to make a ruling on matters (3) and (4), ie whether it is just and equitable that the company should be wound up or whether the remedy of a share buy-out should be granted under section 95 of the Companies Act.

83. That leaves the first and second matters set out in para 23 above. The first is whether FMCH has lost trust and confidence in Ting Chuan and in the conduct and management of the Company's affairs. FMCH allege that Ting Chuan caused, permitted or procured the majority directors, whom it appointed, to act in breach of their duties to the Company and to engage in misconduct in the management of the Company's affairs. The second is whether the fundamental relationship between FMCH and Ting Chuan has irretrievably broken down as a result of Ting Chuan's having acted contrary to the understanding between the parties as to how the business of the Company would be operated. Those two matters raise questions of mixed fact and law.

84. Moses JA further reasoned that, as the majority directors and the Company were not parties to the SHA and to the arbitration agreement which it contained, and as the allegations made against Ting Chuan could not be separated from the threshold issue of whether the court was of the opinion that it was just and equitable that the Company be wound up, the arbitration agreement was inoperative. His conclusion has been summarised in a first instance decision of the High Court of England and Wales in these terms:

> "Where … a necessary precursor to any form of relief is a decision by the court that it would be just and equitable to wind up the company, then bifurcation will not be possible."

See Riverrock Securities Ltd v International Bank of St Petersburg [2020] EWHC 2483 (Comm); [2021] 2 All ER (Comm) 1121, para 68 per Foxton J. See also NDK Ltd v HUO Holding Ltd [2022] EWHC 1682 (Comm); [2022] Bus LR 761, para 64 in which Foxton J recorded the proposition from Riverrock as common ground between the parties. The issue before the Board in relation to matters (1) and (2) is whether that statement is correct.

85. Mr Lowe advanced several submissions as to why the Court of Appeal had decided this case correctly. On the question of statutory interpretation, he argued that the Companies Act made it clear that no private arbitral tribunal could make the critical decision whether it is just and equitable to wind up the Company. The Board agrees for the reasons discussed above but that argument goes only to matters (3) and (4).

86. Mr Lowe can derive no support from the judgment of the Court of Appeal of England and Wales in Salford Estates (No 2) Ltd v Altomart Ltd (No 2) [2014] EWCA Civ 1575; [2015] Ch 589 ("Salford Estates"). That case concerned a winding up petition on the ground that the company was unable to pay its debts under section 122(1)(f) of the Insolvency Act 1986. The petitioner cited several debts in its petition as evidence of the company's inability to pay its debts, only some of which arose out of the transaction to which the arbitration agreement applied. Sir Terence Etherton C opined that in those circumstances there was no basis for a mandatory stay of the winding up proceedings under section 9 of the Arbitration Act 1996 (para 34). He then expressed the view (para 35) that it seemed "highly improbable" that Parliament intended section 9 of the 1996 Act to confer on a debtor the right to a non-discretionary order "striking at the heart of the jurisdiction and discretionary power of the court to wind up companies in the public interest where companies are not able to pay their debts". In the Board's view, whether or not this view is correct, it has no bearing on a petition in which a member of a company seeks a winding up order on the just and equitable ground.

87. Mr Lowe also advanced an argument that the Cayman Islands was unique among Commonwealth countries in not introducing either a remedy for oppression, such as the former section 210 of the Companies Act 1948 in the United Kingdom, or a remedy for unfairly prejudicial conduct in the management of the company, such as that which has been available in the United Kingdom since 1980 and is now contained in sections 994-996 of the Companies Act 2006, which was separate from an application to wind up the company. He inferred from the legislature's decision not to introduce such remedies as separate proceedings from a winding up petition that the legislature had evinced an intention that disputes between shareholders concerning the conduct of the management of Cayman Islands companies were to be conducted in open court in the public interest. He pointed out that the Cayman Islands is a very significant jurisdiction for the incorporation of companies which operate in other jurisdictions or internationally and that there was a public interest in maintaining the confidence of incorporators in the competence of the Cayman Islands courts in resolving shareholder disputes. He submitted that, while the Cayman Islands had ambitions to host international arbitrations, it was not a significant centre for such proceedings in contrast to its role as one of the largest offshore incorporation centres. The problems with this argument are, first, that neither party produced or suggested that there were any pre-legislative materials which explained why the Cayman Islands legislature had not introduced free-standing remedies for oppression and unfair prejudice. The submission therefore is simply speculation. Secondly, in any event, on the basis that matters (3)-(5) are to be determined exclusively by the courts, there will be court proceedings in public in which the critical decisions are made and the factual basis on which those decisions are made will be manifest. The Board is not persuaded that there is a public interest in making the Cayman Islands an outlier in relation to the treatment of international arbitration.

88. FMCH further submitted that winding up was intended to be a quick and efficient process. The presentation of a winding up petition offered protections to the petitioner as section 99 of the Companies Act serves to maintain the status quo by nullifying retrospectively on the making of a winding up order any disposition of the company's property or transfer of shares or alteration in the status of its members after the commencement of the winding up, unless the court orders otherwise. The Court of Appeal of the Cayman Islands clarified the purpose of this provision in Tianrui (International) Holding Co Ltd v China Shanshui Cement Group Ltd [2020] CILR 417. A prolonged process involving an arbitration in relation to matters (1) and (2) followed by a court process to determine matters (3)-(5) would not achieve the speedy resolution of the disputes and would leave hanging over the Company the possibility of the retrospective nullification of transactions under section 99. Mr Lowe pointed out that the parties had already been involved in a lengthy arbitration at the instance of Ting Chuan which had been very expensive and had taken over three and a half years to complete.

89. This is an argument relating to public policy. Mr Lowe further submitted that the complexity and delay involved in a bifurcation of the proceedings between an arbitral tribunal and the court would frustrate the expectations of reasonable businesspeople. In the Board's view the reference to such expectations is a relevant consideration principally in the interpretation of an arbitration agreement, viz Lord Hoffmann in Fiona Trust, rather than a distinct ground of public policy. In any event, there is no necessity that an arbitration of matters (1) and (2) would involve undue delay if the arbitral tribunal exercises robust case management in fulfilment of their task in reaching a speedy resolution of an arbitrated dispute. The Board is not persuaded that the determination of matters (1) and (2) by an arbitral tribunal is excluded on grounds of public policy because of the risk of some delay. In invoking the jurisdiction of the Court on the just and equitable ground FMCH is seeking a statutory remedy of an equitable nature: In re Westbourne Galleries Ltd; Ebrahimi v Westbourne Galleries Ltd [1973] AC 360, 379 per Lord Wilberforce; Lau v Chu, para 64 per Lord Briggs. The clean hands doctrine applies. Further, in the Board's view, in the exercise of this equitable jurisdiction the court must have regard to a party's contractual obligations, which may include an agreement to refer to arbitration disputes which fall within the scope of the relevant arbitration agreement.

90. There is no substance in the submission that a sword of Damocles is hanging over the Company through the operation of the avoidance provisions of section 99 of the Companies Act. As Mr Charles Kimmins KC pointed out on behalf of Ting Chuan, Kawaley J issued a consent order on 16 November 2018 which prevents payments made for the purpose of paying debts and expenses of the Company in the ordinary course of its business after the date of presentation of the winding up petition from being avoided under section 99 of the Companies Act.

91. The Board is not persuaded that an agreement to refer to arbitration disputes arising out of the SHA amounts to a contractual prohibition on initiating a petition to wind up a company. The Board discusses this matter below when it considers section 95(2) of the Companies Act. The submission that an arbitration would deny a party the protections of section 99 of the Companies Act is misconceived both because the arbitration agreement does not prevent the presentation of a winding up petition and because the parties have chosen to limit the application of section 99 in this case.

92. A further submission by FMCH in support of the argument that the just and equitable jurisdiction was indivisible was that the court alone could decide the facts in conducting the broad enquiry which was required when deciding whether it was just and equitable that a company should be wound up. Mr Lowe went so far as to suggest that the court needed to hear and test all the evidence. When questioned by the court he conceded, correctly, that there was nothing to stop the parties presenting the court with a statement of agreed facts. In the Board's view, such a statement could include, in principle, that FMCH had lost trust and confidence in Ting Chuan and that the fundamental relationship between those parties had broken down. A party could admit such facts, if it wished. As the court in exercising its jurisdiction under section 92 of the Companies Act would be bound by such an agreed statement or admission as between the parties, there is no reason in principle why the court should not be bound in a question between Ting Chuan and FMCH by the determination of an arbitral tribunal, which would set out its reasoning and its findings of fact.

93. The Board recalls that Kawaley J in his order of 14 July 2020 ordered that the petition be treated as an inter partes proceeding between those parties. See para 10 above. A finding by the arbitral tribunal on matters (1) and (2) would be binding on the parties under article 35(6) of the ICC Rules of Arbitration which provides:

> "Every award shall be binding on the parties. By submitting the dispute to arbitration under the Rules, the parties undertake to carry out any award without delay and shall be deemed to have waived their right to any form of recourse insofar as such waiver can validly be made."

There is therefore no danger of duplication of effort or inconsistent findings in relation to matters (1) and (2).

94. Finally, FMCH submits that section 4 of the FAAEA requires a stay only in respect of a matter which is capable of settlement by arbitration. It submits that a matter must be a determination of a right or liability and not merely a declaration. It prays in aid a statement by Deane and Gaudron JJ in their joint judgment in the High Court of Australia in Tanning at 351 in which they interpreted the meaning of "matter" in the Australian legislation, which includes the words "capable of settlement by arbitration" in this way:

> "It requires that there be some subject matter, some right or liability in controversy which, if not co-extensive with the subject matter in controversy in the court proceedings, is at least susceptible of settlement as a discrete controversy."

FMCH referred also to a more recent joint judgment of Kiefel CJ and Gageler, Nettle and Gordon JJ in the High Court of Australia in Rinehart v Hancock Prospecting Pty Ltd (2019) 267 CLR 514, para 68 in which, paraphrasing the judgment of Deane and Gaudron JJ in Tanning, they stated that it was sufficient that the defence puts in issue "among other things, some right or liability which is susceptible of settlement under the arbitration agreement as a discrete controversy". But the Board notes that the meaning of the judgment in Tanning was not a matter of controversy in that appeal.

95. The Board does not accept this submission, which is that an arbitrable matter must be a dispute which leads to the determination by an arbitral tribunal of a right or a liability, if by that FMCH means that the arbitral panel must have the jurisdiction to make an award such as an order for payment to enforce the right or require a party to fulfil its obligation. The Board does not interpret the judgment of Deane and Gaudron JJ as excluding the possibility of the determination of a dispute or controversy by means of a declaration, where the dispute is a matter of substance. See paras 59-62 above.

96. Matters (1) and (2) are controversies relating to legal or equitable rights which are of substance. They are matters which lie at the heart of the legal proceedings in the Cayman Islands for an order under section 95 of the Companies Act. A declaration, for example, that Ting Chuan had breached FMCH's equitable rights and that their relationship had irretrievably broken down would be highly relevant to FMCH's application for a just and equitable winding up of the Company or in the alternative a share buy-out. They are also matters which the parties accept fall within the scope of the arbitration agreement.

97. For the reasons set out above, the Board concludes that matters (1) and (2) which it has set out in para 23 above are "matters" in terms of section 4 of the FAAEA for which a stay pro tanto of the winding up proceedings is mandated.

10. The application for a case management stay of the winding up proceedings

98. Ting Chuan seeks a discretionary stay of the winding up proceedings so far as they are formally directed against parties other than itself. Kawaley J in para 75 of his judgment opined that section 95(1)(d) of the Companies Act, which provides that the court may make "any other order that it thinks fit" gave him the power to do so. The Court of Appeal between paras 138 and 141 of Moses JA's judgment discussed the court's power to grant a discretionary case management stay but considered that there was no room to exercise such discretion as the petition to wind up the Company on the just and equitable ground involves an indivisible factual evaluation.

99. As the winding up process is intended to be conducted with expedition, the court will, as a general rule, rarely wish to grant a stay of such proceedings. But a stay for arbitration is a special case. Where the shareholders of a company are engaged in an inter partes dispute which is within the scope of a binding arbitration agreement and an essential precursor to the determination of a winding up petition on the just and equitable ground, there are strong grounds for granting such a stay. In Salford Estates the Court of Appeal of England and Wales held that the court's discretionary power under section 122(1) of the Insolvency Act 1986 ("A company may be wound up by the court if …") had to be exercised consistently with the parties' agreement as to the proper forum for resolving their disputes and in accordance with the legislative policy of the Arbitration Act 1996. The case concerned a disputed debt alleged to arise under a lease and the lessor presented a petition seeking the winding up of the tenant. Sir Terence Etherton MR, giving the judgment of the court, stated (para 39) that section 122(1) of the Insolvency Act 1986 conferred on the court a discretionary power to wind up a company. He said that it was "entirely appropriate" that the court should, "save in wholly exceptional circumstances", grant a discretionary stay as that was consistent with the pro-arbitration policy of the 1996 Act.

100. The statutory provisions under which the Cayman Islands courts are operating in this case are contained in the FAAEA. The FAAEA does not contain provisions stating the well-known principles that parties are free to agree how their disputes are resolved subject only to such safeguards as are necessary in the public interest, and restricting the intervention of the court, such as are found in section 1 of the 1996 Act, on which the Court of Appeal of England and Wales relied in Salford Estates, and in section 3(3) of the Arbitration Act 2012 in the Cayman Islands, which relates to domestic arbitrations. Nonetheless, such principles are wholly consistent with the wide international consensus in favour of a pro-arbitration policy in relation to international arbitrations governed by the New York Convention, which provides in article II(1):

> "Each Contracting State shall recognize an agreement in writing under which the parties undertake to submit to arbitration all or any differences which have arisen or which may arise between them in respect of a defined legal relationship, whether contractual or not, concerning a subject matter capable of settlement by arbitration."

101. Thus, in Tomolugen the Court of Appeal in Singapore in an unfair prejudice petition granted a mandatory stay under section 6 of the IAA of one of the matters which fell within the scope of the arbitration agreement and granted a discretionary case management stay of the other matters which did not: see Sundaresh Menon CJ at paras 187-190. In WDR Delaware, a case involving a winding up petition arising out of allegations of oppressive conduct, Foster J granted a stay of the whole of the winding up petition although only certain matters were arbitrable. Similarly, in Consolidated Resources the Court of Appeal in Jersey granted a mandatory stay of the matters within the scope of the arbitration agreement and, using the court's inherent jurisdiction, a discretionary stay of the remaining claims in the proceedings for unfair prejudice and winding up (para 159). In China Europe, Linda Chan J in the Court of First Instance in Hong Kong granted a discretionary stay for arbitration of a winding up petition on the just and equitable ground, where the disputes between the shareholders which grounded the petition fell within the scope of an arbitration agreement. It will be recalled that in Hong Kong section 20 of the Arbitration Ordinance, which provided for a mandatory stay, referred to an "action" and did not extend to a winding up petition; Quiksilver para 20.

102. The Board is inclined to think, in agreement with Kawaley J and Sir Terence Etherton MR, that in the Cayman Islands as in England and Wales there is a statutory basis for the grant of a stay of a winding up petition. The Board therefore does not need to determine whether and to what extent a discretion exists under the court's case management powers apart from statute. In In re Nanfong International Investments Ltd [2018] CILR 321 ("Nanfong") the Cayman Islands Court of Appeal adopted a restrictive approach to the grant of a discretionary stay, applying the principles set out by Lord Bingham of Cornhill CJ in Reichhold Norway ASA v Goldman Sachs International [2000] 1 WLR 173 ("Reichhold"). Moses JA adopted the same approach in this case, holding at para 138 that a stay will be granted only in rare and compelling circumstances. The Board observes that in Reichhold and Nanfong the basis on which a stay was sought did not involve an assertion that all or some of the matters in the legal proceedings fell within the scope of a binding arbitration agreement. While it is not necessary for the Board to decide this matter, it questions the proposition that a discretionary case management stay of winding up proceedings on the just and equitable ground where a substantial part of the dispute between the parties or some of the parties to the petition falls within the scope of a binding arbitration agreement should be granted only in rare and compelling circumstances. Such a conclusion appears to be inconsistent with the support which the courts give to arbitration and the trend of case law internationally.

103. The determination of matters (1) and (2) will be an essential precursor to the court's formation of its opinion whether it is just and equitable to wind up the Company, which in turn is the threshold for giving a remedy under section 95 of the Companies Act (ie matters (3)-(5)). The Board is satisfied that it is appropriate to grant such a stay.

11. Section 95(2) of the Companies Act

104. It will be recalled that section 95(2) states that the court shall dismiss or adjourn a hearing of a winding up petition if the petitioner is contractually bound not to present a petition against the company. In this case there is no contract binding FMCH not to present a winding up petition. The arbitration agreement in the SHA requires certain matters to be determined by arbitration but is silent as to the presentation of a winding up petition against the Company. The Board is satisfied that the contractual obligation on the parties to determine those matters by arbitration entails an obligation not to have those matters determined by a court. That obligation is enforced by the court's grant of a stay of the winding up petition pro tanto. It does not amount to a contractual prohibition against the initiation of winding up proceedings. Section 95(2) is therefore not relevant to the dispute between the parties and the Board will say no more about it.

12. Conclusion

105. Matters (1) and (2) are substantive disputes between FMCH and Ting Chuan which provide the factual basis for the winding up petition on the just and equitable ground. Those matters fall within the scope of the parties' arbitration agreement and must be determined by an arbitral tribunal unless the parties waive their right to arbitration. There must therefore be a mandatory stay of the winding up petition in relation to matters (1) and (2) under section 4 of the FAAEA and a discretionary stay in relation to matters (3)-(5). In relation to the Company, which is the other party to the winding up petition, the Board is satisfied that there should be a stay of the winding up petition. The determination of matters (1) and (2) is the precursor to the determination of the petition which Kawaley J in his order dated 14 July 2020 has ordered be treated as an inter partes proceeding between FMCH and Ting Chuan.

106. The Board will humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal should be allowed.

ITEM NO. 145

JA-31

EXHIBIT V

[2010 (2) CILR 154]

IN THE MATTER OF FREERIDER LIMITED

Grand Court, Financial Services Division

(Foster, J.)

16 September 2010

Companies—compulsory winding up—dispositions and transfers during winding up—validation by court—grant of security over all company's assets may be within "ordinary course of company's business" for purpose of consent validation order but depends on context—relevant considerations include but not limited to (a) circumstances of case; (b) how objective observer would regard; and (c) prior practices, focusing on businesses in ordinary operation and not abnormal financial difficulties—not to qualify if for purpose of funding one shareholder's litigation against another or merely because non-fraudulent and within company's objects

Companies—compulsory winding up—dispositions and transfers during winding up—validation by court—grant of security over all company's assets usually to be prospectively validated by court, though may retrospectively validate—relevant considerations include but not limited to whether (a) within directors' powers; (b) directors believed it necessary; (c) in good faith; (d) backed by good reasons; and (e) irregularities in company's affairs—court to avoid prejudice to unsecured creditors

The company was in official liquidation in the Grand Court.

The company was a part of a corporate structure for the exploitation of an invention of Mr. Heinen, and was a quasi-partnership between himself and Mr. Le Comte with each of them holding 50% of the voting shares. Its principal assets were intellectual property rights in the invention. Mr. Le Comte was of the view that the company's assets were highly valuable, and had good commercial prospects. They entered into a shareholder agreement, one of the terms of which was that "All votes [are] to be carried in favour of, and/or all actions to be taken and documents and instruments [are] to be executed in accordance with, the recommendation with regard thereto made by Mr. Le Comte in his sole discretion." Over time, the relationship between the two broke down, and the company experienced significant financial difficulties. Legal proceedings between them were commenced in New York and the Netherlands, and, in March 2009, Mr. Heinen applied to the Grand Court to wind up the company. Subsequently, in June 2009, Mr. Le Comte proposed that the company obtain a validation order to enable it to carry on its general business, notwithstanding the existence of the winding-up petition. Mr. Heinen formally consented to the validation order, the terms of which permitted "payments and other dispositions of property made by the company in the ordinary course of its business for proper value," and requested details of the transactions that Mr. Le Comte sought to validate. No such details were ever provided. In August and December 2009, Mr. Le Comte, purporting to act on behalf of the company, entered into two promissory notes with 733 Properties, a company which was part of the Durst Organization in New York. One of the heads of the Durst Organization was Mr. Durst, a personal friend of Mr. Le Comte's. In entering into the notes, both 733 Properties and the Durst Organization relied on Mr. Le Comte's attorneys' opinion, some of the assumptions underlying which Mr. Durst knew to be under challenge. The notes, which were in substantially identical terms, each provided (a) for a credit line of up to US$1m., to be repaid with interest, to be made available to the company; (b) for the grant by the company of security over all of its assets; and (c) that the institution against the company of any liquidation proceeding, which remained undismissed for 90 days, would amount to default, rendering the note immediately due and payable and allowing 733 Properties to exercise its rights pursuant to the security. Correspondence between Mr. Durst and Mr. Le Comte indicated that they had previously discussed the proposal to grant the security, with the aim of preventing Mr. Heinen from gaining control over the company's assets, and that the proposal and subsequent grant had been concealed from Mr. Heinen. Nonetheless, Mr. Le Comte and his wife provided to the Durst Organization personal guarantees of the company's obligations under the notes. Mr. Le Comte and Mr. Heinen both agreed that the company was solvent on a balance sheet test at this time, although the reason Mr. Le Comte gave for entering into the notes was that the company was unable to pay its debts as they fell due.

The Grand Court (Foster, Ag. J.) directed (in proceedings reported at 2009 CILR 604) that, since the winding-up petition was in reality a dispute between Mr. Le Comte and Mr. Heinen, the petition be heard inter partes between them, with the company not able to participate. In May 2010, the Grand Court (Foster, J.) ordered the winding up of the company on the just and equitable ground (in proceedings reported at 2010 (1) CILR 486), finding that Mr. Le Comte had been guilty of a lack of probity in his management of the company's affairs. This had the effect, pursuant to s.99 of the Companies Law (2010 Revision), that any disposition of the company's property made after the presentation of the winding-up petition in March 2009 would be void unless validated by the court. Liquidators were appointed in respect of the company. The company's bank statements showed that a significant amount of the sums drawn down under the notes were used by Mr. Le Comte to settle the accounts of the attorneys acting on his instructions in the winding-up proceedings. Shortly thereafter, 733 Properties gave notice that the winding-up order constituted a default, that all sums and obligations to it had become due, and that it intended to exercise its rights pursuant to the security. 733 Properties subsequently assigned its rights to its subsidiary, the GCF Group.

The liquidators applied for a declaration that the purported grant of the security over all the company's assets was void under s.99 of the Companies Law (2010 Revision). They submitted that the grant of the security was not within the terms of the validation order, since it (a) had been for the inappropriate purpose of funding Mr. Le Comte's litigation against Mr. Heinen; (b) was not part of the ordinary operation of the business, but rather a response to abnormal financial difficulties, with major consequences; (c) was not analogous to the loans that the company had previously taken from Mr. Le Comte himself or the proposed third-party financing he had discussed with Mr. Heinen; (d) was concealed from Mr. Heinen, when, under the terms of the shareholders' agreement between himself and Mr. Le Comte, he should have been consulted and the matter put to a vote; (e) was disproportionate to the amount of borrowing enabled by the notes, given Mr. Le Comte's high valuation of the company; (f) inappropriately provided for an immediate default upon the execution of the notes; (g) had the collateral purpose of giving the Durst Organization a priority claim over the assets and thereby preventing Mr. Heinen from gaining control; and (h) was therefore not in the ordinary course of the company's business. They further submitted that it should not now be retrospectively validated, since (i) granting the security was not in the interests of the company, nor could a reasonable and honest director have believed it to be; (j) there had been irregularities in the company's affairs in that Mr. Le Comte was guilty of a lack of probity; (k) retrospective validation at this time would frustrate the official liquidators' taking control of the assets; and (l) declaring the grant of the security void would not be unfair to 733 Properties or the Durst Organization, since it was their decision to rely on Mr. Le Comte's attorneys' opinion, some of the assumptions underlying which Mr. Durst knew to be under challenge.

The GCF Group submitted in reply that the grant of the security was within the terms of the validation order and should not be declared void under s.99 of the Companies Law, since (a) the company's articles of association provided that the company's objects were unrestricted; (b) the company had relied on loans from Mr. Le Comte in the past; (c) Mr. Heinen and Mr. Le Comte had previously discussed proposals to obtain third party financing; (d) meeting the costs of the ongoing litigation through borrowing money had become an existing practice of the company; (e) by virtue of the shareholders' agreement between them, Mr. Le Comte was not required to inform Mr. Heinen of the proposed grant; (f) the existence of the winding-up petition, of which the Durst Group was already aware, was not intended to qualify as a default; (g) the fact that Mr. Le Comte and his wife had provided personal guarantees of the company's obligations under the notes was inconsistent with the inference of a collateral purpose; and consequently (h) the grant of the security was in "the ordinary course of the company's business." In the alternative, GCF applied for an order retrospectively validating the grant of the security, submitting that (i) the court had an unfettered jurisdiction to validate dispositions, including retrospectively; (j) the company was solvent at the relevant time, and therefore the validation of the grant of the security should not be seen as prejudicial to unsecured creditors; and (k) declaring the grant of the security void would be unfair to 733 Properties and the Durst Organization.

The court considered (a) the test for whether a company's actions came within "the ordinary course of business"; and (b) when it would exercise its discretion to validate a disposition of a company's property so that the disposition would not be void under s.99 of the Companies Law.

Held, declaring the purported grant of the security void:

(1) The court would declare the grant of the security to be void under s.99 of the Companies Law (2010 Revision). Since it was established law that a grant of security over a company's assets was a disposition of its property, in order to determine whether it was within the terms of the validation order the question was whether it was made in "the ordinary course of the company's business." In answering this, the relevant considerations included the circumstances in which the grant occurred, whether an objective observer would consider it as having occurred in the ordinary course of business, and the prior practices of the company. The focus needed to be on the ordinary operational activities of businesses, and not responses to abnormal financial difficulties. However, not all these factors would be applicable in every case, no single factor would be conclusive, and the list was not exclusive. A disposition could be in the ordinary course of business despite being unprecedented, and conversely, a disposition would not automatically qualify simply because it was non-fraudulent and within the objects of the company's articles of association. A grant of security over all of a company's assets during winding up could fall within the ordinary course of a company's business, but the court needed to consider all the circumstances. Moreover, the grant of such security should usually be the subject of a prospective validation application to the court, in order that all the potential consequences could be properly analyzed (paras. 13–17).

(2) The grant of the security was outside the ordinary course of the company's business in a number of ways. First, the purpose of obtaining money in return for security was to finance Mr. Le Comte's litigation against Mr. Heinen, of which the company was merely the subject-matter, and it would not be in the ordinary course of any company's business to borrow money to fund litigation by one shareholder against another. Secondly, it was a response to abnormal financial difficulties, and not within the ordinary operational activities of the company. Neither the loans the company had previously taken from Mr. Le Comte himself nor the proposed third-party financing he had discussed with Mr. Heinen before their relationship broke down were analogous to granting security over all the company's assets, which was a highly unusual step with major consequences. Thirdly, Mr. Le Comte had deliberately concealed from Mr. Heinen the grant of the security, when the shareholders' agreement required Mr. Le Comte to consult with Mr. Heinen, and arguably to put the matter to a vote. Fourthly, the extent of the security was disproportionate to the amount of borrowing enabled by the notes, given Mr. Le Comte's much higher valuation of the company. It was also surprising that—on a usual construction without reference to the parties' intentions, as required by Cayman law—the notes provided for an immediate default upon their execution. Fifthly, there was clear evidence that Mr. Le Comte's grant of the security had the collateral purpose of giving the Durst Organization a priority claim, thereby preventing Mr. Heinen from gaining control of the assets. In the circumstances, the grant of the security was clearly not in the ordinary course of the company's business and therefore fell outside the terms of the consent validation order (para. 31; paras. 42–49).

(3) Moreover, the court would not retrospectively validate the grant of security over all of the company's assets. The grant of such security should usually be the subject of a prospective validation application to the court, in order that all the potential consequences could be properly analyzed. Nonetheless, the court had an unfettered discretion whether to validate any particular disposition, including doing so retrospectively, so that it would not be void under s.99 of the Companies Law. In determining whether to exercise this discretion, the relevant considerations would be: whether the disposition was within the directors' powers; whether the directors believed it to be necessary or in the interests of the company; whether it was made in good faith; whether there were good reasons for it; and whether there had been irregularities in the affairs of the company. Not all of these factors would always be applicable, nor was it an exclusive list—every case would turn on its own circumstances. The court's principal concern would be to avoid prejudice to the body of unsecured creditors as a whole. If the company were solvent, the usual assumption would be that the disposition would not be prejudicial to the creditors as it should not affect their repayment, although even this would not be conclusive if, as here, the winding-up petition were based on grounds other than insolvency (para. 25; paras. 51–59).

(4) In these circumstances, it was unclear whether the company was solvent at the time of the grant of the security. It appeared that, although it was solvent on a balance sheet test, it was not solvent in that it was unable to pay its debts as they fell due. However, even if it were solvent when the grant of the security was proposed, the court would not have validated the grant of the security at that time. As the court had already concluded, the grant was not in the ordinary course of the company's business, and there was no evidence suggesting that the reasons for granting it were in the interests of the company or could have been held by a reasonable and honest director. Rather, it appeared to be purely in Mr. Le Comte's personal interests. Irregularities in the affairs of the company had also been shown, in that Mr. Le Comte had been guilty of a lack of probity and had granted the security to achieve a collateral purpose. Even if the court would have validated it at the time of its proposal, it would not now do so retrospectively, since, the company having entered official liquidation, validation of the grant of the security would frustrate the official liquidators' taking control of the assets. Nor would this be unfair to 733 Properties or the Durst Organization, since it was their decision to rely on Mr. Le Comte's attorneys' opinion, some of the assumptions underlying which Mr. Durst knew to be under challenge. The grant of the security would therefore not be validated retrospectively, and would be void under s.99 of the Companies Law (paras. 61–67).

1. FOSTER, J.: This is the ruling on the application of the joint official liquidators ("the JOLs") of Freerider Ltd. ("the company," and in official liquidation) by summons dated August 30th, 2010 seeking a declaration that the security over all the assets of the company purportedly granted under two convertible revolving secured promissory notes and security agreements, respectively dated August 17th, 2009 ("the first note") and December 3rd, 2009 ("the second note," and together, "the notes") in favour of 733 Properties Inc. and subsequently assigned to its subsidiary, GCF Group LLC, is not within the terms of a validation order made by consent on June 29th, 2009 ("the consent validation order"), not having been granted in the ordinary course of the company's business for proper value, and is therefore void under s.99 of the Companies Law (2010 Revision) ("the Law"). The ruling also relates to the summons of GCF, also dated August 30th, 2010, seeking an order that, if the court finds that the security is not within the terms of the consent validation order, the grant of the security should now be retrospectively validated and accordingly not be void pursuant to s.99 of the Law.

General background

2. The company was ordered to be wound up on just and equitable grounds on May 13th, 2010 on the petition of Mr. Heinen, who is one of the two voting shareholders, which was vigorously opposed by the only other voting shareholder, Mr. Le Comte. Mr. Le Comte subsequently appealed to the Court of Appeal against the winding-up order, but his appeal was refused on August 24th, 2010. In a previous ruling dated November 11th, 2009, the court had directed pursuant to O.3, r.11(2) of the Companies Winding Up Rules 2008 that the company itself should not be able to participate in the winding-up proceedings, as it was merely the subject-matter of the proceedings, which should be treated as inter partes proceedings between Mr. Heinen and Mr. Le Comte.

3. The background to the dispute between Mr. Heinen and Mr. Le Comte concerning the company is fully set out in the reasons for the winding-up order dated May 13th, 2010, and I do not consider it necessary to rehearse that background.

The consent validation order

4. Section 99 of the Law provides:

"When a winding up order has been made, any disposition of the company's property and any transfer of shares or alteration in the status of the company's members made after the commencement of the winding up is, unless the Court otherwise orders, void."

Section 100(2) of the Law provides:

"In any other circumstance not specified in subsection (1) [none of which are applicable here], the winding up of a company by the Court is deemed to commence at the time of the presentation of the petition for winding up."

Both s.99 and s.100(2) are intended to protect the unsecured creditors of the company once winding-up proceedings have commenced. The companies law in the United Kingdom, Australia, Canada and most other Commonwealth common law jurisdictions has been to the same effect since the 19th century.

5. On June 22nd, 2009, the attorneys then representing the company on Mr. Le Comte's instructions, Turner & Roulstone, wrote to Mr. Heinen's attorneys, Appleby, proposing that the parties should agree to a validation order to enable the company to carry on its general business notwithstanding the presentation of the winding-up petition, thus avoiding the consequences of s.99 of the Law. Turner & Roulstone requested an urgent response. The following day, June 23rd, 2009, Appleby responded stating that they were taking instructions in relation to the proposed validation order and in the meantime requested details of the transactions which it was sought to validate. By reply email on June 24th, Turner & Roulstone responded, again requesting that Mr. Heinen's attorneys revert to them on the proposed orders without delay. Their email then said:

"The company needs to have the ability to conduct its general business and this type of order is given as of right where a just and equitable petition has been issued. There is no obligation on the company to provide specific details of the transactions which it wishes to conduct." [Emphasis supplied.]

6. By reply letter dated June 29th, 2009, Appleby confirmed that their client, Mr. Heinen, was prepared to agree to the terms of the "draft consent order validating payments and other dispositions of property made by the company in the ordinary course of its business for proper value pending the determination of the petition." Appleby went on to contend that their client was entitled to details of all such transactions and requested confirmation by return that such details would be provided. It seems that no response to that request was ever received.

7. The consent validation order, being a consent order, was dealt with administratively and signed by the clerk of court. There was no hearing by or involvement of the court. The consent validation order provided as follows:

"It is hereby ordered by consent that, notwithstanding the presentation of the petition against Freerider Ltd. ("the company"):

(1) payments made into or out of the bank accounts of the company in the ordinary course of business of the company; and

(2) dispositions of the property of the company made in the ordinary course of its business for proper value;

between the date of presentation of the petition and the date of judgment on the petition or further order in the meantime shall not be void by virtue of the provisions of s.99 of the Companies (Amendment) Law 2007 [now s.99 of the Law] in the event of an order for the winding up of the company being made on the said petition."

It is para. 2 of the consent validation order which is now in issue.

Procedure

8. I should note that Mr. Heinen had previously issued a summons, dated June 16th, 2010, subsequently amended on July 15th, 2010, by which he himself sought a declaration that the notes and the security were both void pursuant to s.99 of the Law. This summons as amended therefore predated the JOLs' summons, which is the subject of this ruling. Both counsel for GCF and counsel for Mr. Le Comte raised an issue as to Mr. Heinen's locus to make such an application, contending that the JOLs were the only appropriate parties to seek a declaration under s.99 of the Law. As the JOLs have since done that (albeit that their application relates only to the grant of the security and not to the promissory notes as such), I declined to hear Mr. Heinen's amended summons or the related arguments on the question of Mr. Heinen's locus in the course of hearing the JOLs' summons. However, I indicated that I would deal with any issues arising out of Mr. Heinen's amended summons, if necessary, at some future date. Nonetheless, since Mr. Heinen and Mr. Le Comte are both contributories and were respectively the petitioner and the respondent in the winding-up proceedings, I did agree to hear and did hear submissions on behalf of Mr. Heinen in support of the JOLs' summons and in opposition to GCF's summons and submission on behalf of Mr. Le Comte in opposition to the JOLs' summons and in support of GCF's summons.

9. I should also note that counsel for Mr. Heinen indicated that he wished to argue that the grant of the security was not anyway a disposition of the property of the company because, he contended, Mr. Le Comte had no authority to enter into the notes and to grant the security on behalf of the company. Since, at a previous directions hearing on August 27th, 2010, I had already directed that the sole issue for determination at the hearing before me in the event that the JOLs issued a summons would be whether the grant of the security was made in the ordinary course of the company's business in terms of the consent validation order, I declined to allow Mr. Heinen's counsel to make his proposed argument at the hearing of the JOLs' summons. However, I accepted that Mr. Heinen's counsel was entitled to consider his position in light of this ruling and, if he considered it necessary and appropriate, to make an application in that regard at some future date.

The disposition in issue

10. The affidavit evidence establishes that Mr. Le Comte, purporting to act on behalf of the company, as the borrower and 733 Properties as the lender entered into the first note on August 17th, 2009, approximately two months after the date of the consent validation order. 733 Properties is a company which is part of the Durst Organization of New York, which carries on business principally as an owner, builder and manager of commercial and residential real estate in New York. The Durst Organization is headed by Mr. Jonathan Durst and a cousin of his. Mr. Durst's wife is a close personal friend of Mr. Le Comte's wife. According to Mr. Durst's affidavit, he has been a friend of Mr. Le Comte and his family for almost 20 years, principally through the friendship of their respective wives and children. Mr. Le Comte's evidence confirms this.

11. The first note relates to a sum of up to US$1m. together with interest. The second note relates to a further sum of up to US$1m. together with interest. The notes are otherwise in substantially identical terms and by cl. 3 in each case provide for the grant by the company of security (referred to in the notes as "collateral") over all of the company's assets, wherever located, including all intellectual property rights and any claims against third parties. The notes also provide (cl. 2) inter alia that the institution against the company of any liquidation proceeding which remains undismissed for 90 days is an event of default as a result of which the note in each case becomes automatically and immediately due and payable and 733 Properties has the right to exercise its rights under the note with regard inter alia to the security.

12. On May 21st, 2010 (just over a week after the winding-up order of May 13th, 2010 was made), 733 Properties gave formal notice that the winding-up order constituted a default under the notes and that all sums and obligations under the notes were then due and payable and that 733 Properties intended to exercise its rights and remedies under the notes, including all its rights to proceed against the "collateral" (i.e. the security). Since then, there has been an ongoing disagreement between 733 Properties (and its subsequent assignee, GCF) and the JOLs and Mr. Heinen over the right of the JOLs or 733 Properties, now GCF, to possession and control of the assets of the company, including the right to control the litigation instigated by Mr. Le Comte in the name of the company in New York and the Netherlands. Subsequently, as I understand it, by consent of the parties, including the JOLs, the legal proceedings in New York were stayed by the court until November 30th, 2010 to enable determination of the validity of the purported grant of the security by the company, which is, of course, a matter of Cayman law, by this court.

The relevant law on the ordinary course of business

13. Section 99 of the Law applies when there is a disposition of a company's property after the commencement of a winding up and the court has not made an order that the disposition concerned is not thereby void. It was accepted by all parties that the expression "disposition of property" in this context encompasses encumbrances granted over a company's property, such as the security in this case. That is clearly established by authority and not in doubt. Furthermore, as the petition for winding up the company was presented (i.e. filed with the court and initiated) on March 6th, 2009 and a winding-up order has since been made, the winding up of the company is deemed, pursuant to s.100(2) of the Law, to have commenced on March 6th, 2009. Accordingly, the security was clearly granted after the commencement of the winding up. There is again no doubt about that and there was no dispute in that regard either between the parties.

14. The court has not made any order specifically validating the granting of the security. The only validation order made is the consent validation order which validates dispositions made by the company "in the ordinary course of its business for proper value." The phrase "in the ordinary course of business" has been considered by various Commonwealth courts on a number of occasions and in a number of contexts, the circumstances of all of which are inevitably different. However, the opinion of the Privy Council in Countrywide Banking Corp. Ltd. v. Dean (3), which is of course binding on this court, is in my opinion the appropriate authority for determination of the meaning of that expression in Cayman law. The Privy Council made reference to several decisions in other courts, but ultimately declined to adopt any particular formulation of the phrase. It said ([1998] A.C. at 349):

"There are difficulties in drawing upon formulations in different words of statutory tests and treating them as applicable in all circumstances. Such difficulties are increased where those formulations originate in different legal or factual contexts. This is particularly so where the test is essentially one of fact in any event. For these reasons, as presently informed by the argument in this case, their Lordships do not adopt any particular formulation. Nor is it necessary for this case to make any comprehensive statement, suitable for all cases, of the criteria for determining when a transaction is to be held to have taken place in the ordinary course of business for the purpose of [the English legislation under consideration].

Plainly the transaction must be examined in the actual setting in which it took place. That defines the circumstances in which it is to be determined whether it was in the ordinary course of business. The determination then is to be made objectively by reference to the standard of what amounts to the ordinary course of business. As was said by Fisher, J. in the Modern Terrazzo Ltd. case, 10 October 1997, the transaction must be such that it would be viewed by an objective observer as having taken place in the ordinary course of business. While there is to be reference to business practices in the commercial world in general, the focus must still be the ordinary operational activities of businesses as going concerns, not responses to abnormal financial difficulties. Their Lordships respectfully agree with the judge's conclusion by reference to the policy of the section:

FILED UNDER SEAL

'Whether a payment should be regarded as commercially routine at a day to day trading and operating level will turn at least in part upon a comparison with the practices of the commercial community in general. But equally, the way in which the particular company has acted in the past, and its dealings with the particular creditor, would seem pertinent. That the payment was simply a repetition of past patterns of behaviour would make it more difficult to argue that it represented special assistance to an insider or the result of special enforcement measures or a situation in which the subject creditor ought to have investigated before extending credit. So at a policy level there is something to be said for the view that relevant considerations should extend to the prior practices of the particular company.'"

15. It was submitted on behalf of the JOLs, in my opinion correctly, that the opinion of the Privy Council makes it clear that there are no comprehensive criteria for what constitutes "in the ordinary course of business." It is essentially a matter of fact in the light of the particular circumstances in each case. Nonetheless, certain key points were made clear, namely:

(a) the transaction must be examined in the circumstances in which it occurred;

(b) the transaction must be such that an objective observer would view it as having taken place in the ordinary course of business;

(c) the focus of the enquiry must be on the ordinary operational activities of businesses, not responses to abnormal financial difficulties; and

(d) prior practices of the company will be a relevant consideration.

16. Of course, the Privy Council made it clear that none of these points is necessarily applicable in every case, they are not conclusive and are not intended to be comprehensive or exclusive. They are simply guidelines.

FILED UNDER SEAL
Case 1:26-cv-00495-JLH Document 8-30 Filed 05/12/26 Page 15 of 31 PageID #: 6131

There was no substantial disagreement between the parties about this analysis, although their respective interpretation of the circumstances of the granting of the security differed considerably, and consequently their proposed application of these guidelines to such circumstances also differed.

17. I also found assistance from the judgment in the English case of Ashborder BV v. Green Gas Power Ltd. (1), which was a case involving interpretation of the phrase "in the ordinary course of business" in the context of a floating charge over assets of a company which had borrowed funds from lenders in the Enron group. The judge (Etherton, J., now a judge of the English Court of Appeal), in concluding that certain agreements fell outside the scope of the ordinary course of the business of the company concerned, held that the words of the phrase were ordinary words of the English language which had to be given the meaning which ordinary business people would be expected to give them against the factual and commercial background in which the agreements concerned were made. He said that a transaction could be in the ordinary course of business even if it were exceptional or unprecedented, but that a transaction was not to be regarded as in the ordinary course of a company's business merely because it was not fraudulent and was within the company's objects in its memorandum of association. He said that meaning must be given to the word "ordinary" in the phrase. He then held that, in the circumstances of that case, the transactions were not in the ordinary course of the company's business by reason inter alia of the non-disclosure to all the directors of the material terms of the agreements and because of his concerns about concealment of the transactions. He also relied on the fact that the company was in abnormal financial difficulty at the time and the agreements were entered into as an exceptional abnormal response to that. These factors were, in the view of the judge, sufficiently unusual features to take the transactions out of the scope of the company's ordinary course of business.

The circumstances of the grant of the security

18. There was no contemporaneous documentary evidence before me to indicate when discussions between Mr. Le Comte and Mr. Durst concerning the proposed first note started. The first available email communication is dated April 6th, 2009. It is from Mr. Le Comte to Mr. Durst under the heading "Freerider—Durst Convertible Secured Promissory Note" and, among other matters (as to which I shall comment further below), attached a proposed agreement. In the email, Mr. Le Comte said he had "tried to capture the spirit of our conversations in order to protect your interests as best I could." Clearly therefore, there had been previous conversations between Mr. Le Comte and Mr. Durst about the proposed loan, as to which there was no evidence before me. Clearly, Mr. Le Comte was also endeavouring to protect the interests of the Dursts. There then followed a series of email exchanges between Mr. Le Comte and Mr. Durst, which culminated with the execution of the first note dated August 17th, 2009.

19. It is clear from this correspondence that the proposed and subsequent grant of the security was intentionally concealed by Mr. Le Comte from his co-director and contributory, Mr. Heinen, and that Mr. Durst was expressly told that this would be the case. In fact Mr. Heinen was not made aware of the existence of either of the notes and the grant of the security until after 733 Properties told the JOLs of them subsequent to the winding-up order. Mr. Le Comte sought to justify this to Mr. Durst at the time, and again in his affidavit evidence produced at the hearing before me, on the basis that his purported grant of the security on behalf of the company fell within his exclusive domain and overriding authority pursuant to the first shareholder agreement dated July 19th, 2003 between him and Mr. Heinen ("the shareholder agreement"). I should add that it was also argued before me that Mr. Heinen would anyway have had a conflict of interest with regard to the grant of the security since the borrowing secured thereby was, it was contended, to be used to meet the company's past and ongoing legal costs of the various litigation against him. Mr. Le Comte's position was that significant sums were and would in future be owed to attorneys in New York, the Netherlands and the Cayman Islands by, on his case, the company, which the company urgently needed and would in future need to settle in order to progress the litigation, and that Mr. Heinen, as the principal opposing party in such litigation, would have had a conflict of interest in being involved in the decision as to whether the company should grant the security in respect of borrowing from the Dursts for such purposes.

20. It appears from the email correspondence between Mr. Le Comte and Mr. Durst that Mr. Le Comte's request was that the company should be given access to a credit line for sums up to US$1m. pursuant to each note, and this appears to be what in practice occurred. GCF claims that Mr. Le Comte, purportedly on behalf of the company, drew down a total principal sum of US$1,550,000 under the notes and that, as at May 31st, 2010, interest amounting to US$38,836.77 had accrued on that sum.

21. Mr. Le Comte provided no evidence as to how the various sums drawn down under the notes were in fact used. His affidavit evidence was that they were used to settle outstanding debts of the company due principally to the attorneys acting in the litigation in New York, the Netherlands and in this country, and to fund the ongoing costs of such litigation. However, no evidence to support that general assertion was produced. Evidence from certain of the company's bank statements showed that a significant portion of the sums drawn down was used by Mr.

Le Comte to settle the accounts of the Cayman attorneys, Turner & Roulstone, acting on his instructions in the winding-up proceedings.

Analysis and comment

22. It seems to me that, in order to determine whether the grant of the security was in the ordinary course of the company's business, I must first consider what the business of the company was. As explained in the reasons for the winding-up order dated May 13th, 2010, the company was established to enable payments generated by the commercial exploitation of the intellectual property in TheWheel and associated technology to be made to an entity in a tax-free jurisdiction and also so that the intellectual property rights concerned could be held outside the Dutch company, e-Traction Europe BV, which actually carries out the physical work on and development of TheWheel and associated technology (see 2010 (1) CILR 486, at paras. 14 and 69). Accordingly, the company's business essentially consists of the holding and control of the intellectual property rights in TheWheel and other related technology.

23. It was submitted on behalf of GCF that the company's memorandum of association provides that the company's objects are unrestricted and that, accordingly, the grant of the security was within the company's objects. I was also referred to art. 95 of the company's articles of association, which provides that—

"the directors may exercise all the powers of the company to borrow money or to mortgage or charge its undertaking, property and uncalled capital or any part thereof, to issue debentures, debenture stock and other securities whenever money is borrowed or as security for any debt, liability or obligations of the company or of any third party."

It was contended that, accordingly, the provision of the security pursuant to the notes was within the company's objects and within the powers of its directors.

24. It was further submitted that, since the company has been reliant from time to time in the past on loans from Mr. Le Comte to meet its day to day operating expenses, borrowing money was within the ordinary course of the company's business. It was said that the grant of security as a condition of borrowing is clearly a usual practice of the business community in general.

25. It is, of course, the grant of the security over all of the company's assets and rights which is in issue, not the borrowing of money. The grant of such security obviously impacts adversely upon the position of unsecured creditors and is clearly an important and significant transaction. The principal purpose of the statutory scheme applicable to winding up is to protect unsecured creditors and their entitlement to eventual pari passu distribution in a winding up and to enable the winding up of the company in an orderly manner by officers of the court. This is the principal reason why, in my opinion, a proposal by the directors of a company to grant security over all of its assets and rights after winding-up proceedings have been initiated would and should normally be the subject of a prospective validation application to the court so that the benefit to the company, which the directors contend derives from such secured borrowing, may be properly and fully analyzed and fairly balanced against the rights and interests of unsecured creditors in advance of any such security being granted. No doubt the court, in doing so, would have regard to the views of unsecured creditors, but an overall approach, having regard to all the circumstances, will be taken.

26. In fact, the company has never previously granted security of any kind in respect of its borrowings, which have always been from Mr. Le Comte as a shareholder and investor in the company. Both he and Mr. Heinen are on record as having said on several occasions that they consider the intellectual property rights currently held by the company to be of very substantial value having regard to the considerable financial potential from exploitation of TheWheel and associated technology. Those rights are also the company's only asset of any significance. Mr. Le Comte also estimated the realizations from the litigation, particularly in New York, if successful, would be very significant. In such circumstances, to grant security over all of the company's assets and rights, including all of the intellectual property rights it holds, was, as I have said, clearly a very significant and important step, particularly having regard to the fact that such security was granted pursuant to the first note in respect of a loan of up to US$1m., a relatively small amount in proportion to Mr. Le Comte's own opinion of the very high value of the company's assets and rights.

27. It was also contended on behalf of Mr. Le Comte that, since the company has been carrying on litigation over the past three years (albeit procured by him), meeting the costs of such litigation through borrowing has been a prior practice and become part of the ordinary course of the company's business. I shall comment on that suggestion later in this ruling.

28. As I have already mentioned, in deliberately not informing his co-director, Mr. Heinen, of the proposed grant of the security, Mr. Le Comte relied on the provisions of the shareholder agreement and in particular s.1, as he did in his unsuccessful opposition to the winding up of the company. In the present context, Mr. Le Comte contends that the effect of the shareholder agreement is that he has the sole right to determine all management issues of the company of a non-technical nature and that accordingly it was solely up to him whether or not the company should enter into the notes and grant the security. In his view, Mr. Heinen was not entitled to any say in the matter. However, in my opinion, apart from the fact that, as Mr. Le Comte was well aware at the time, it is anyway contended by Mr. Heinen that the shareholder agreement is not valid, that is not quite what the shareholder agreement provides. Section 1(2) provides, with regard to business and other non-technical issues:

"All votes [are] to be carried in favour of, and/or all actions to be taken and documents and instruments [are] to be executed in accordance with, the recommendation with regard thereto made by Mr. Le Comte in his sole discretion."

29. This clearly, at the least, requires there to be a recommendation with regard to the proposed action by Mr. Le Comte provided to Mr. Heinen, and, arguably, also a vote. The section does not, in my view, simply entitle Mr. Le Comte to ignore Mr. Heinen entirely and to make decisions and take actions unilaterally in respect of the company without at least informing his co-director (described in the shareholders agreement, as he and Mr. Le Comte both are, as a "manager" of the business). Mr. Le Comte, of course, alleges that he had removed Mr. Heinen as a director of the company. However, he was well aware that that was strongly disputed and that Mr. Heinen had refused to resign. Mr. Le Comte was aware of all this when he claimed to Mr. Durst that he had the sole right to procure the company to grant the security and that he did not intend to inform Mr. Heinen of what he proposed. Nor do I consider that the fact that he considered Mr. Heinen would have had a conflict of interest meant that he was not required to inform Mr. Heinen of his proposed action on behalf of the company.

30. A further point which was the subject of argument before me related to the provisions regarding default in the notes. It was submitted by counsel for the JOLs and counsel for Mr. Heinen that the wording of cl. 2(a)(iii) of each of the notes meant that, upon execution, the notes would become automatically and immediately due and payable because liquidation proceedings against the company had at the date of execution been commenced and remained undismissed for 90 days. This would have brought about an immediate acceleration of liability under the notes and the obligation of the company to pay an increased interest rate and legal and other expenses. There was affidavit evidence from the New York attorney representing the Durst Group in which he commented on that submission. He stated that the language in cl. 2(a)(iii) of each note is merely pro forma, that it was not contemplated that the existence of the winding-up petition, of which he and the company's New York attorneys were well aware, would qualify as a default and that he did not believe the company would have executed the notes if it had believed there was already an existing default.

31. The notes are, of course, governed by New York law, although the law in this country is that foreign law is presumed to be the same as Cayman law in the absence of expert evidence of the relevant foreign law. No such expert evidence on the law of New York relating to the construction and interpretation of legal documents such as the notes was made available to me. Under Cayman law, it is well established that such documents are to be construed and interpreted solely upon the basis of their wording and that evidence of preliminary negotiations, of the subjective intentions of the parties and those connected to them and of subsequent actions is not relevant or admissible as an aid to their construction. There is no evidence before me as to whether or not that also represents the law of New York, but, on a construction of cl. 2(a)(iii) in accordance with Cayman law, the submissions on behalf of the JOLs and Mr. Heinen in this regard are, in my opinion, clearly correct. It seems to me, to put it at its lowest, that the construction and effect of documentation which the directors of a company subject to winding-up proceedings propose to enter into, allegedly in the best interests of the company, such as the notes and the associated security, should and would properly be the subject of scrutiny by the court in considering whether or not a disposition pursuant to such documentation should be validated.

32. I have already made passing reference to some of the email communications between Mr. Le Comte and Mr. Durst but in my view they warrant further analysis and comment. I should say that the general tone of this series of emails is informal and friendly and makes it clear that there is considerable family friendship between Mr. Le Comte and his family on the one hand and Mr. Durst and his family on the other. There do appear to me to be gaps in the correspondences produced to me. As I have said, it is also clear from the correspondence that there were meetings and discussions between Mr. Le Comte and Mr. Durst, the content of which were either not recorded or such records were not produced and which was not disclosed nor explained in the affidavit evidence.

33. The first email produced, dated April 6th, 2009, from Mr. Le Comte to Mr. Durst, to which I have already referred in part, commences as follows:

"All went according to plan in Luxembourg, though not without noteworthy incidents. [Mr. Heinen] has been set up for the next round without knowing and/or realizing it.

The 'pearls of wisdom' have meanwhile materialized. Please find attached a proposed agreement . . ."

I consider it reasonable to assume that Mr. Durst understood what Mr. Le Comte was talking about. There is no evidence or suggestion otherwise.

Case 1:26-cv-00495-JLH Document 8-30 Filed 05/12/26 Page 21 of 31 PageID #: 6137

34. In a subsequent email, dated May 29th, 2009, Mr. Le Comte informed Mr. Durst that it was—

"imperative that a parallel research and development production facility be created in the United States. A successful participation in this project would represent an enormous economic opportunity for the combined companies.

[Mr. Le Comte then referred to a pilot program for a people-mover system at Frankfurt Airport.]

Let's talk about this at your leisure. Incidentally, I did speak with your friend Tedd and gave him my best advice based on my assessment of the financial feasibility of his project . . ."

Again, it is not entirely clear what Mr. Le Comte is referring to by "the combined companies," but Mr. Durst must have known.

35. The reference to Mr. Durst's friend Tedd is to a contact he had provided to Mr. Le Comte who was interested in the possibility of using the technology associated with TheWheel. Mr. Heinen emphatically denied in his affidavit evidence that he had ever agreed that there should be a research and development facility in the US and he gave various credible reasons why he would never have agreed to that. It was submitted that this email was indicative of Mr. Le Comte's alleged plan to take over the intellectual property rights in TheWheel and associated technology entirely. It also seems that he may have been discussing doing so jointly with the Dursts.

36. On June 5th, 2009, Mr. Le Comte emailed Mr. Marx at the Durst Organization, with a copy to Mr. Durst, attaching a copy of the original draft agreement. He said:

"I have since come to the conclusion that a specific lien on the intellectual property and/or certain rights thereto should be added to ensure the ability to have a priority claim in recovering the debt, which should also serve in signalling to the 'opposition' that the actions being contemplated by them at this time are unlikely to allow them to gain control over the principal company assets (e-Traction Europe BV and the intellectual property) . . ."

A subsequent email from Mr. Le Comte to Mr. Durst, dated June 15th, 2009, makes it clear that there was also a conversation between them the same day as Mr. Le Comte's June 5th email.

37. Section 142(1) of the Companies Law (2009 Revision) (now s.142(1) of the 2010 Revision) provides:

"Notwithstanding that a winding up order has been made, a creditor who has security over the whole or part of the assets of a company is entitled to enforce his security without the leave of the Court and without reference to the liquidator."

The evidence shows that Mr. Le Comte, Mr. Durst and their respective New York lawyers were well aware of this provision.

38. In my view, the inference from the email correspondence between Mr. Le Comte and Mr. Durst to which I have referred above, taken with Mr. Le Comte's deliberate action in not informing Mr. Heinen of his proposal to grant the security and the other circumstances at the time, is that Mr. Le Comte's intention, at least in part, was that the priority claim effected by the grant of the security to his friends the Dursts' company would prevent Mr. Heinen, through an official liquidator appointed on a winding up pursuant to Mr. Heinen's petition, from taking control of the assets of the company, particularly the intellectual property rights.

39. It was argued on behalf of GCF that the fact that Mr. Le Comte provided the Dursts with joint personal guarantees by himself and his wife of the company's obligations under the notes is inconsistent with this inference. Having regard to the particular circumstances of this matter, I do not agree. As I have already said, Mr. Le Comte was clearly of the firm view that the assets of the company "make it a very valuable company" with "enormous commercial prospects and valuable assets," and is on record as emphasizing that view on several occasions, including to Mr. Durst (see for example the email dated July 20th, 2009). He said that it was "simply inconceivable that in three years, when the loan comes due, [the company] would be worth less than the maximum amount of the credit line." If, as Mr. Le Comte believed, it was inconceivable that the company would be unable to repay the sums drawn down under the notes, the risk to him in providing the unsecured joint guarantees was negligible. In my judgment, the provision of the joint guarantees does not detract from the inference from the email correspondence, and from the other circumstances which I have already mentioned, that Mr. Le Comte's offer to add the security to the proposed borrowing arrangements was intended, at least in part, to prevent a liquidator appointed by this court from taking possession and control of the company's assets. He wished to ensure that, in the event of a winding up, the company's assets would be under the possession and control of his friends the Dursts.

40. Mr. Le Comte's deliberate concealment of the proposed and actual grant of the security is, in my opinion, entirely consistent with this analysis. Although by the time of the consent validation order on June 29th, 2009, discussions and negotiations between Mr. Le Comte and Mr. Durst with regard to the proposed borrowing and the grant of the security were well underway, no mention of the proposed transaction, and particularly the grant of the security, was made by Mr. Le Comte's Cayman attorneys, Turner & Roulstone, in their correspondence proposing the consent validation order to Mr. Heinen's Cayman attorneys, Appleby. The explanation of the proposed validation order in Turner & Roulstone's email dated June 24th, 2009 that "the company needs to have the ability to conduct its general business" was, in the circumstances, disingenuous to say the least. Despite requests from Appleby for details of the transactions in question, no such information was provided, and no indication of the proposed grant of the security was given. I am also concerned that no mention of the grant of the security was made to the court at any time prior to or during the hearing of the winding-up petition in April 2010. Given the extent and effect of the purported grant of the security, it was clearly likely to be a significant factor in the court's consideration of whether a winding-up order should be made and official liquidators appointed to take possession and control of the company's assets. In my opinion the existence of the security should have been disclosed.

Conclusions on the "ordinary course of business" issue

41. Etherton, J. pointed out in Ashborder BV v. Green Gas Power Ltd. (1) that there may be circumstances in which the grant of security over all the assets of a company may be held to fall within the scope of the ordinary course of that company's business. Equally, however, even if prima facie such a grant may be considered to fall within the scope of that phrase, there may nonetheless be such unusual features surrounding such a disposition that it will nonetheless fall outside the scope of the ordinary course of the company's business.

42. In the present case I do not consider the grant of the security, which extended to all of the assets of the company, which Mr. Le Comte himself expressly considered to be of enormous commercial value, to have been in the ordinary course of the company's business at all. I have already explained the nature of the company's business. In my opinion, the fact that Mr. Le Comte has procured the company to engage in litigation with his co-director and contributory in New York, the Netherlands and Luxembourg over the past three years or so in no sense means that litigation is a business of the company. Certainly, the litigation in this court leading up to the winding-up order was not properly litigation by the company anyway: it was litigation between Mr. Le Comte and Mr. Heinen personally. It was essentially and obviously a dispute between Mr. Le Comte and Mr. Heinen, as quasi-partners in the business, the subject of which was the company. Furthermore, it was very clearly not the ordinary business of the company, or of any company, to borrow money to fund litigation by one shareholder against another. Even the litigation in New York and the Netherlands, in which Mr. Le Comte has procured the company to engage, is principally litigation against an equal shareholder/contributory of the company. In my opinion that does not fall within the realm of what an objective observer would consider to be within the ordinary course of the company's business. Borrowing for that purpose, and the grant of security over the assets of the company to enable such borrowing, is no different.

43. The transaction between Mr. Le Comte and the Dursts was, on Mr. Le Comte's own case, a response to abnormal financial difficulties and not within the ordinary operational activities of the company. It was in no sense a routine or typical transaction for the company. I am not persuaded by the argument that the prior practices of the company in taking loans from Mr. Le Comte, a shareholder and investor in the company, were in any sense akin to the dispositions involving the grant of the security. Even if it is correct that in the past, before the deadlock between them arose, Mr. Le Comte and Mr. Heinen together made attempts to obtain third-party financing for the company and that such financing would probably have involved the company being required to give security for such financing, there is no evidence at all with regard to the type or extent of any borrowing or of any security which may have been discussed. Furthermore, there is no obvious evidence that at that time any such borrowing was proposed to be used for the purposes of litigation by the company, still less litigation between the two principals of the company, and clearly that was not the case. In my opinion the only prior practice of the company in this respect has been the unsecured funding of the company from time to time by Mr. Le Comte as a shareholder and investor. That is entirely different from the grant of security over all the assets of the company in support of limited borrowing from friends of Mr. Le Comte. It is not something the company ordinarily would do. It was clearly a highly significant and unusual step for the company, and one with major potential consequences. I am of the opinion that, quite apart from the unusual features surrounding the transaction, the grant of the security pursuant to the first note, repeated pursuant to the second note, was clearly not within the ordinary course of the company's business.

44. I am also of the opinion that the unusual circumstances surrounding the purported grant of the security by the company through Mr. Le Comte take the grant out of the scope of the ordinary course of the company's business in any event. Not only were the proposals and discussions concerning the grant of the security made without the knowledge of the only other director at a time when all involved with the transaction knew that the winding-up petition had been initiated, but there was also a deliberate decision to conceal the proposal. Furthermore, Mr. Durst had been expressly told that there was another director who had refused to resign and that he was not to be informed about the proposed notes. The actual grant of the security was also subsequently and deliberately concealed from Mr. Heinen, not only in his capacity as a director of the company but also as a contributory and as the petitioner for the winding up, until after the winding-up order had been made. It was also concealed from this court.

45. I have already commented on the surprising terms of the notes, which on a usual construction meant that there was an immediate default as soon as they were executed. In the circumstances, such a provision was not clearly in the best interests of the company, notwithstanding that in the event and with hindsight notice of default was not given until after the winding-up order was made.

46. A further significant feature of the security which I consider takes it outside the scope of the ordinary business of the company is its extent, which seems to me disproportionate to the amount of borrowing, which, pursuant to the first note, was up to US$1m. There does not appear to have been any discussion about the appropriate security or its nature or extent, simply the offer of security over all the company's assets by Mr. Le Comte. This in itself seems surprising and unusual to me.

47. In my opinion, it is also relevant that the whole transaction involving the grant of the security was with longstanding friends of Mr. Le Comte and his wife. Even if the affidavit evidence of Mr. Durst that the Dursts "would certainly not have made the loans to Freerider without having the security which it obtained under the notes" is accepted, he does say that he does "not recall specifically when or how the question of security was raised in our discussions." The fact of the matter is that it was Mr. Le Comte who voluntarily proposed that the security should be added to the proposed agreement with the Dursts to ensure they had a priority claim in order that, from Mr. Le Comte's perspective, the winding-up proceedings would not allow "the opposition" to gain control over the principal assets of the company.

48. Quite apart from the ostensible purpose of the borrowing in respect of which the security was purportedly granted by the company and the misuse by Mr. Le Comte, again purportedly on behalf of the company, of at least a portion of that borrowing for his own purposes (and this court has already ordered Mr. Le Comte to refund to the company those monies which he procured the company to pay to his Cayman attorneys for representing his interests in his dispute with Mr. Heinen about the winding up of the company on the grounds that such use was misfeasance by Mr. Le Comte as a director), there is, as I have already explained, clear evidence that there was a collateral purpose in Mr. Le Comte offering and purportedly granting the security on behalf of the company. In my opinion, that is a sufficiently unusual feature of this transaction of itself which takes the grant of the security out of the ordinary course of the company's business. However, there are anyway the other unusual features which I have discussed which also render the circumstances surrounding grant of the security sufficiently extraordinary as to mean that it was clearly not in the ordinary course of the company's business.

49. In my judgment, when all the circumstances surrounding the purported grant of the security are considered, it cannot reasonably be said that it was in the ordinary course of the company's business. Accordingly, I make the declaration which the JOLs seek: that the grant of the security is not within the terms of the consent validation order dated June 29th, 2009.

Retrospective validation

50. In light of my conclusion that the grant of the security was not made in the ordinary course of the company's business, it is void pursuant to s.99 of the Law "unless the Court otherwise orders." In that case, GCF, by its summons dated August 30th, 2010, now seeks an order by way of retrospective validation of the grant of the security.

The relevant law on validation

51. Neither s.99 of the Law nor any other statutory provisions prescribe the circumstances in which the court may validate any particular disposition so that it is not void under the section. The court has an unfettered discretion whether to validate any disposition in its particular circumstances. The equivalent position in England was stated in Re Steane's (Bournemouth) Ltd. (12) ([1950] 1 All E.R. at 25):

"The legislature, by omitting to indicate any particular principles which should govern the exercise of the discretion vested in the court, must be deemed to have left it entirely at large, and controlled only by the general principles which apply to every kind of judicial discretion."

52. That was confirmed in the English Court of Appeal by Buckley, L.J. in In re Gray's Inn Constr. Co. Ltd. (9), who added ([1980] 1 W.L.R. at 717): ". . . [T]he discretion must, in my opinion, be exercised in the context of the liquidation provisions of the [UK companies legislation, which is generally equivalent to the Law]." Accordingly, the statutory scheme on winding up pursuant to the Law is clearly relevant. I have already summarized the purpose of s.99, which is part of that scheme, earlier in this ruling, as being to preserve the assets of a company in winding up for the protection of its creditors (see confirmation of this by Smellie, C.J. in Scotiabank (C.I.) Ltd. v. Treasure Island Resort (Cayman) Ltd. (11) (2004–05 CILR 423, at para. 11)).

53. Guidance on the matters to be taken into account by the court in considering validation was addressed by Henderson, J. in In re Fortuna Dev. Corp. (8), as approved by Smellie, C.J. in In re Cybervest Fund (5).

FILED UNDER SEAL
Case 1:26-cv-00495-JLH Document 8-30 Filed 05/12/26 Page 27 of 31 PageID #: 6143

In the Cybervest case, Smellie, C.J. agreed with and adopted a summary of the guidelines set out in the Fortuna case, which in turn derived from statements of "broad guidelines" in an English case, In re Burton & Deakin Ltd. (2). In the Fortuna case, it was said (2004–05 CILR 533, at para. 5):

"Thus, there are four elements which must be established before an applicant is entitled to a validation order. First, the proposed disposition must appear to be within the powers of the directors . . . Secondly, the evidence must show that the directors believe the disposition is necessary or expedient in the interests of the company . . . Thirdly, it must appear that in reaching the decision the directors have acted in good faith. The burden of establishing bad faith is on the party opposing the application. Fourthly, the reasons for the disposition must be shown to be ones which an intelligent and honest director could reasonably hold."

54. Smellie, C.J. went on in the Cybervest case to add (2006 CILR 80, at para. 29):

"There is another consideration to add to this list, in light of the concerns raised in this matter, although arguably it is subsumed within the third and fourth elements. This would be whether irregularities in the conduct of the affairs of the company can be shown, even if the company is clearly solvent, as is alleged here."

55. Of course these guidelines are neither exclusive nor necessarily applicable to every case in which the court may or may not validate a disposition of a company's property when the company is subject to winding-up proceedings. Every case will turn on its own particular circumstances.

56. It also appears that different considerations may apply depending on whether the company concerned is solvent or insolvent. Solvency in this context has been said to mean that the court is satisfied by credible evidence that the company is able to pay its debts as they fall due (see Re Fairway Graphics Ltd. (7) ([1991] BCLC at 468–469)). As I will explain later, it does not appear to me that the company was solvent in that sense at the relevant time.

57. The usual assumption in a case where the company is solvent is that the particular disposition would not be prejudicial to the creditors as it should not affect their debts being repaid (see Fortuna (8)). However, even if a company is solvent, that is not necessarily conclusive where the winding-up petition is based on grounds other than insolvency, such as the just and equitable ground (see Cybervest (5)), as in the present case.

58. If it cannot be established that the company concerned is solvent, then the principal concern of the court in considering an application for a validation order will be to seek to avoid prejudice to the interests of unsecured creditors of the company (see Denney v. John Hudson & Co. Ltd. (6)). Occasionally, in appropriate circumstances, the court has sanctioned the grant of a charge over a company's property as security for a loan to enable the company to continue its business as a going concern so that it can be can be sold as such, but in exercising its broad discretion the court must determine the question having regard to all the circumstances in each case. In the present case, I have, of course, already determined that the grant of security was not in the ordinary course of the company's business. It is, however, also clear that payments by a company (and by extension, security granted in respect of borrowing to fund such payments) in respect of disputes which are essentially between shareholders of the company would not be validated (see In re Crossmore Elec. & Civil Engr. Ltd. (4)).

FILED UNDER SEAL

59. It was submitted on behalf of GCF that it would be unfair to it (and the Dursts) if the grant of the security were not now validated. However, the purpose of s.99 of the Law is to minimize hardship to the general body of creditors as a whole: prejudice suffered by one particular creditor—in this case GCF/the Dursts—if the disposition is not validated is to be given relatively little weight (see Re Tellsa Furniture Pty Ltd. (13)). Of course, the nature and extent of any hardship suffered by the recipient of the disposition in issue will depend entirely on the facts and circumstances surrounding the disposition. As was said in the same case (ibid.), quoting from Re Mal Bower's Macquarie Elec. Centre Pty. Ltd. (10) (1 N.S.W.L.R. at 258)—

"the legislative intention, as disclosed by the terms of [the equivalent of s.99 of the Law] is such as to require an investigation of what happened to the property, that is to say, what was the disposition, and then to enable the liquidator to recover it upon the basis that the disposition was void. It is recovery from the disponee that forms the basic legislative purpose of [the equivalent section]."

Analysis and comment on the retrospective validation application

60. It is clear that the onus is on GCF to establish that a retrospective validation order should now be made in all the circumstances. The first note, pursuant to which the security was purportedly granted (it was in practical terms re-affirmed pursuant to the second note) was signed as of August 17th, 2009, a year before GCF made its application for validation thereof.

61. It is unclear whether the company was solvent at the relevant time, which in my view is at the time of the purported grant of the security pursuant to the first note. As I have already mentioned, both Mr. Le Comte and Mr. Heinen are firmly of the view that the company was and is solvent on a balance sheet test. However, the very reason why, according to Mr. Le Comte, he procured the company to borrow from the Dursts was because the company was unable to pay its debts as they fell due. The JOLs have certified that the company is of doubtful solvency but that seems to be because they have had little or no access to the company's records and have accordingly been unable to reach a conclusion either way. The position appears to be that, at the time of the grant of security, the company may have been solvent on a balance sheet test but insolvent in being unable to pay its debts as they fell due.

62. However, assuming, in GCF's and Mr. Le Comte's favour for the sake of argument, that the company was solvent at the relevant time, then the test approved by Smellie, C.J. in Cybervest (5) should be applied to the circumstances surrounding the grant of the security, which I have already outlined in determining that the grant of the security was not within the ordinary course of the company's business. I do not think it necessary for me to repeat my summary of and comment on those circumstances.

63. There was no "body of evidence" presented to me to satisfy me that the reasons for the grant of the security were ones that an honest and intelligent director could reasonably have held. Indeed, apart from Mr. Le Comte's general comments in his affidavit evidence that the purpose of the borrowing, which was secured by the purported grant of the security, was largely to pay the legal costs of the litigation in New York, the Netherlands and this country, there was, as I have already mentioned, no detailed information provided by him as to precisely how the funds borrowed from the Dursts' company had been utilized, nor was there any evidence to justify the submission on his behalf that such borrowing was in the best interests of the company. For example, there was no expert opinion evidence as to the merits of the litigation in New York from the company's perspective in order to justify further expenditure on the litigation at that time, namely when the company was the subject of winding-up proceedings. The evidence, and the inference I have drawn from it, is that the money borrowed from 733 Properties/the Dursts was used not only to settle outstanding invoices but also in order to enable the litigation to progress. There was no explanation, still less professional opinion, as to why, for example, the legal proceedings in New York, and perhaps in the Netherlands, could not have been stayed on the company's application pending the determination of the winding-up proceedings, rather than the company spending more money on the litigation in such circumstances. There was no evidence, other than the bare assertions of Mr. Le Comte, that continuing to spend money on the litigation was in the best interests of the company at that time, rather than it being in his personal interests. The evidence, in my opinion, very much supported the latter interpretation.

64. I should also mention the consideration specifically referred to in

Case 1:26-cv-00495-JLH Document 8-30 Filed 05/12/26 Page 30 of 31 PageID #: 6146

Cybervest, namely whether irregularities in the conduct of the affairs of the company can be shown. The court has already concluded that the members of the company have justifiably lost confidence in Mr. Le Comte based on a lack of probity in his conduct of the affairs of the business, including the company (see 2010 (1) CILR 486, at para. 72) and I have already explained why I infer a collateral purpose on the part of Mr. Le Comte in offering and then purporting to grant the security to his friends' company. No authority has been submitted to me to the effect that the court has ever made a validation order, still less a retrospective one, in such circumstances.

65. It seems to me, having regard to the circumstances surrounding the grant of the security, most improbable that it would have been validated at or about the time of its proposed grant a year ago. Even if I am wrong about that, it does not follow that the grant of the security should now be validated retrospectively. The circumstances are now clearly different in that a winding-up order has since been made and the JOLs, who are officers of this court subject to this court's supervision, have been appointed to fulfil their statutory duties under the Law. The uncertainty with regard to the outcome of the winding-up proceedings which may have existed at the time when the security was purportedly granted now no longer exists. The grant of the security, which at the time may have possibly frustrated any official liquidators who might have been appointed in taking possession and control of the company's assets, now would definitely have that effect.

66. As far as 733 Properties and the Dursts are concerned, it was their decision to rely on an opinion by Mr. Le Comte's own attorneys, Turner & Roulstone, several of whose important assumptions were under challenge by Mr. Heinen, of which, at least in some respects, Mr. Durst was aware. For example, Turner & Roulstone did not point out the risks involved in not informing Mr. Heinen of the proposed transaction in light of the fact that Mr. Heinen had refused to resign as a director of the company. They did not point out the risk of the grant of the security, once it became known, being challenged and the risk of it being held by a court that it had not been granted in the ordinary course of the business of the company. They did not point out the risk involved in relying on the shareholder agreement which was under challenge and anyway open to other possible interpretation, or indeed the risks generally arising from the fact that Mr. Le Comte was involved in hostile litigation with Mr. Heinen in several jurisdictions which he was not inevitably bound to win in all respects. Furthermore, as I have already said, it seems to me reasonable to infer that Mr. Durst understood that Mr. Le Comte had offered the security at least in part for tactical collateral reasons of his own relating to his dispute with Mr. Heinen and also related to his suggestions concerning his future control and development of the company's intellectual property rights, involving a proposal for a research and development facility in the US, perhaps even as a possible venture with the Dursts.

FILED UNDER SEAL

Conclusion on the retrospective validation application

67. Having regard to all the circumstances surrounding the grant of the security and in light of my analysis and comments above, in the exercise of my discretion I refuse the application of GCF for retrospective validation. I am satisfied that the grant of the security would probably not have been validated prospectively if an application for validation had been made prior to its grant, as in my opinion it should have been, and I do not consider that it should now be validated retrospectively. Indeed it seems to me that there are good additional reasons, as I have outlined above, why that should not be done. I therefore refuse the application by GCF by their summons dated August 30th, 2010 and declare the grant of the security to be void under s.99 of the Law. In the circumstances I will reserve the question of costs for further submissions from counsel in due course.

Declaration accordingly.

Maples & Calder for the liquidators; Campbells for the GCF Group; Appleby for Mr. Heinen; Turner & Roulstone for Mr. Le Comte.

Power to make overlapping appointments

35. Where the provisions of any Law either expressly or by implication limit the number of persons who may at any time be appointed to or hold an office, such provisions shall not, if any substantive holder of the office is on leave of absence pending relinquishment of office, prevent the substantive appointment of another person to such office or the discharge by such other person of the functions of the office; and, if such an appointment is made the fact that temporarily there is more than one holder of such office shall not prevent both the period of leave of the retiring holder of the office and the period of service of his successor during such leave from being treated as pensionable service for the purposes of any Law permitting the grant of retiring benefits in respect of service in such office.

Power to appoint chairman

36. Where, under any Law, power is given to the Governor in Council, to the Governor or to any public officer or body to appoint any board, tribunal, commission, committee or similar body, it shall be lawful for the Governor in Council, the Governor or such public officer or body, in the absence of any provision to the contrary, to appoint a chairman of such board, tribunal, commission, committee or similar body.

Power to appoint by official designation

37. Where, by or under any Law, the Governor in Council, the Governor or any public officer or body is empowered to appoint or name a person to be a member of any board, tribunal, commission, committee or similar body, or to have and exercise any powers or perform any duties, the Governor in Council, the Governor or such public officer or body may either appoint a person by name or direct the person for the time being holding the office designated by the Governor in Council, the Governor or such public officer or body to be a member of such board, tribunal, commission, committee or similar body or to have and exercise such powers and perform such duties; and thereupon, or from the date specified by the Governor in Council, the Governor or such public officer or body, the person appointed by name or the person for the time being holding such office shall be a member of such board, tribunal, commission, committee or similar body, or shall have and may exercise such powers and perform such duties accordingly.

Construction of enabling words

38. Where, in any Law, power is given to any person to do or enforce the doing of any act or thing, all such powers shall be understood to be also given as are reasonably necessary to enable the person to do or enforce the doing of the act or thing.

Powers of Governor to delegate authority

39. When, by any Law, the Governor is empowered to exercise any powers or perform any duties, he may, unless by law expressly prohibited from so doing, depute any person by name, or the person for the time being holding the office designated by him, to exercise such powers or perform such duties on his behalf, subject to such conditions, exceptions and qualifications as the Governor may direct; and thereupon, or from the date specified by the Governor, the person so deputed shall have and exercise such powers and perform such duties subject as aforesaid:

Provided that nothing herein contained shall authorise the Governor to depute any person to hear any appeal or to make regulations under the power in that behalf conferred upon him by any Law.

Provisions as to Imperial Acts and Orders in Council

English Laws in force in the Islands

40. All such laws and Statutes of England as were, prior to the commencement of 1 George II Cap. 1, esteemed, introduced, used, accepted or received as laws in the Islands shall continue to be laws in the Islands save in so far as any such laws or Statutes have been, or may be, repealed or amended by any Law of the Islands.

Reference in Law to provision of Imperial Act

41. Where, in any Law, reference is made to any provision of an Imperial Act or Order in Council and that provision is subsequently repealed and re-enacted without substantial modification, the reference in such Law to the provision of the Act or Order in Council so repealed shall, if the context so requires and unless the contrary intention appears, be construed as a reference to the provision so re-enacted.

Imperial Acts, etc., to be read with necessary modifications

42. Whenever any Imperial Act is extended or applied to the Islands, such Act shall be read with such formal alterations as to names, localities, courts, officers, persons, moneys, penalties and otherwise as may be to make it applicable to the circumstances.

Provisions as to penalties

Statement of penalty means maximum penalty

43. Where any fine or penalty is imposed by or under the authority of any Law it shall be implied that the amount of such fine or penalty is the maximum amount; and where by any Law any person may be sentenced to any term of imprisonment it shall be implied that such term of imprisonment is the maximum term.

Penalty at foot of section indicates maximum penalty for contravention of section

44. Where in any Law any fine, penalty or term of imprisonment is set out at the foot of any section it shall indicate that any contravention of the section, whether by act or omission, shall be an offence against that Law and shall, unless the contrary intention appears, be punishable by a fine, penalty or term of imprisonment not exceeding the amount or term stated.

Payment of portion of penalty by direction of Governor

45. Subject to the express provisions of any Law, where any fine or penalty is imposed by or under the authority of any Law, every such fine or penalty shall be payable into the general revenues of the Islands, but the Governor in Council may direct the payment to any aggrieved person, or to any person whose information or evidence has led to the conviction of the offender or to the recovery of the fine or penalty, of such proportion of the fine or penalty as he may think fit.

Disposal of forfeits

46. (1) Where, under any Law, any animal or thing is adjudged by any court or other authority to be forfeited, it shall, unless the contrary is otherwise provided or unless it is expressed by law to be forfeited to any person, be forfeited to the Crown, and the net proceeds thereof, if it is ordered by competent authority to be sold, shall be paid into the general revenues of the Islands, unless other provision is made.

(2) Nothing in this section shall affect any provision in any Law whereby any portion of any fine or forfeit or of the proceeds of any forfeit is expressed to be recoverable by any person or may be granted by any authority to any person.

Imposition of penalty not to bar civil action

47. The imposition of a penalty or fine by any Law, in the absence of express provision to the contrary, shall not relieve any person from liability to answer for damages to a person injured.

Provisions as to offences

Provision as to offences under two or more Laws

48. Where any act or omission constitutes an offence under two or more Laws, or both under a Law and under the common law, the offender shall, unless the contrary intention appears, be liable to be prosecuted and punished under either or any of those Laws or under the common law, but shall not be liable to be punished twice for the same offence.

Attempt to commit an offence to be deemed an offence

49. A provision which constitutes an offence shall, unless the contrary intention appears, be deemed to provide also that an attempt to commit such offence shall be an offence against such provision, punishable as if the offence itself had been committed.

Remission of penalties

50. It shall be lawful for the Governor in the name of Her Majesty to remit in whole or in part any sum of money which under any Law may be imposed as a penalty, fine or forfeiture on a convicted offender, although such money may be in whole or in part payable to some person other than the Crown, and to extend the Royal mercy to any person who may be imprisoned for non-payment of any sum of money so imposed, although such sum may be in whole or in part payable to some person other than the Crown.

Miscellaneous

Change in title of public office, etc.

51. Whenever any change in title of any public office or department, branch, agency or organ of Government occurs, the Governor, if occasion requires, may by notice in the Gazette declare that such change of title shall take effect from a date specified in such notice, and, with effect from such date, any reference in any Law to the former title of such office or department, branch, agency or organ of Government shall be read and construed as a reference to that office or department, branch, agency or organ of Government by such new title as the Governor may declare in such notice.

Appointment to statutory public office

52. Notwithstanding the provisions of this or any other Law, where provision is made in a law for a public officer to be appointed to an office under that Law which involves the exercise of functions, powers or duties pursuant to any Law or regulations and where no such appointment of such person has been made under that Law prior to the date when an appointment was made to such public office, the person appointed to such public office shall, for the purposes of any such Law or regulations, be deemed to have been appointed under that Law on the date when he was appointed to such public office.

Meaning of service by post.

53. Where any Law authorises or requires any document to be served by post, whether the expression "serve", "give", "send" or any other expression is used, then, unless a contrary intention appears, the service shall be deemed to be effected by properly addressing, prepaying and posting a letter containing the document, and, unless the contrary is proved, to have been effected at the time at which the letter would be delivered in the ordinary course of post.

Signification of orders of Governor

54. Where power is given to the Governor or Governor in Council to make regulations, it shall be sufficient, unless it is otherwise expressed, for such regulations to be signified under the hand of the Clerk of the Executive Council:

Provided that any proclamation, warrant, or other instrument issued under the Public Seal shall be issued under the hand of the Governor himself.

Power of majority

55. Save as is otherwise expressly provided by any Law, whenever any act or thing is required to be done by more than two persons, a majority of them may do it.

Division of Law into Parts

56. Where any Law is divided into Parts, Titles or other divisions, the fact and particulars of such division shall with or without express mention thereof in any Law, be taken notice of in all courts and for all other purposes whatsoever.

Construction of preamble and Schedules to Law

57. (1) The preamble of any Law may be referred to for assistance in explaining the scope and object of the Law.

(2) Every Schedule or Table to any Law, or part of any Law, shall, together with any notes thereto, be construed and have effect as part of the Law.

Deviations in forms

58. Whenever forms are prescribed in any Law, slight deviations therefrom, not affecting the substance or calculated to mislead, shall not invalidate them.

Construction of amending Law with amended Law

59. Where one Law amends another Law the amending Law shall, so far as it is consistent with the tenor thereof, and unless the contrary intention appears, be construed as one with the amended Law.

Reprint of amended Laws

60. When any Law is amended it shall be lawful for any person with the authority of the Governor to print copies of the Law with all the necessary additions, omissions, substitutions and amendments effected by the amending Law or Laws and such copies shall be deemed to be authentic copies of the Law so amended.

Notification of enactment and sale of regulations, etc.

61. Where any regulation or other instrument of a public character is required either expressly or by implication to be published or notified in the Gazette, a Government Notice that such regulation or other instrument has been made and of the place where copies thereof can be purchased or perused shall be sufficient compliance with such requirement.

Evidence of signature of Governor

62. Whenever the fiat of the Governor is necessary before any prosecution or action is commenced, any document purporting to bear the fiat of the Governor shall be received as prima facie evidence in any proceeding without proof being given that the signature to such fiat is that of the Governor.

Saving of rights of the Crown

63. No Law shall in any manner whatsoever affect the right of the Crown, unless it is therein expressly stated, or unless it appears by necessary implication, that the Crown is bound thereby.

Law binding on Crown

64. This Law shall be binding on the Crown.

(4) If two or more qualified insolvency practitioners have been appointed as joint restructuring officers, provided that at least one qualified insolvency practitioner remains in office, one or more of them may resign by giving notice to the Court without the need to prepare any report (unless required to do so either by the Court or the continuing restructuring officer). The company may apply to the Court for the appointment of a successor.

The company may apply to the Court for the appointment of a successor.

(6) If a restructuring officer, wishing to resign, is acting in the restructuring officer's capacity as a partner or employee of a firm, the Court may make an order that:

(2) Alternatively, if a restructuring officer was a partner or employee of a firm, the restructuring officer's firm may give notice of the restructuring officer's death.

(3) Following the death of a restructuring officer (where that person was acting as sole restructuring officer or jointly with a foreign practitioner), the company shall, within 7 days of the notification of the restructuring officer's death, apply to the Court for an order appointing a new restructuring officer, failing which the firm of which the deceased restructuring officer was a partner or employee may apply to the Court for an order appointing a new restructuring officer.

(5) The restructuring officer and company shall be entitled to at least 14 days' notice of a removal and replacement summons.

(3) In calculating the amount of damages, the official liquidator shall assume that the creditor has taken all such steps as may be reasonable to mitigate that

(3) A contributory or creditor who is dissatisfied with the official liquidator's decision to admit the whole or part of a creditor's proof for an amount exceeding $100,000 (or its equivalent in the currency of the liquidation) or 5% of the company's total liabilities (whichever is the less) may apply to expunge the proof on the ground that it should not have been admitted.

ORDER 17

SECURED CREDITORS

Introduction (O.17, r.1)

1. (1) A creditor who has security over the whole or part of the assets of a company is entitled to enforce that creditor's security without the leave of the Court and without reference to its liquidator.

(2) A secured creditor whose debt is more than the value of that secured creditor's security may prove in the liquidation for the unsecured balance.

(3) A proof of debt submitted by a secured creditor shall state particulars of the security held by the creditor and the value which the secured creditor puts on the security.

(4) A secured creditor may, with the agreement of the liquidator or the leave of the Court, alter the value which the secured creditor has put on the secured creditor's security in the secured creditor's proof of debt.

(5) If a secured creditor omits to disclose their security in their proof of debt, that secured creditor shall surrender their security for the general benefit of creditors, unless the Court relieves that secured creditor from the effect of this Rule on the ground that that secured creditor's omission was inadvertent or the result of an honest mistake.

Redemption of security by the liquidator (O.17, r.2)

2. (1) The liquidator may at any time give notice to a creditor whose debt is secured that the liquidator proposes, at the expiration of 28 days from the date of the notice, to redeem the security at the value put upon it in the creditor's proof.

(2) The creditor then has 21 days in which (if the creditor so wishes) to apply to the Court for leave to alter the value of the creditor's security.

(3) If the liquidator redeems the security, the costs incurred in doing so are payable out of the assets of the company as an expense of the liquidation.

(4) A secured creditor may at any time give notice to the liquidator requiring the liquidator to elect whether or not the liquidator will exercise the liquidator's right to redeem the security at the value put on it in the creditor's proof of debt and the liquidator shall make the liquidator's election within 90 days, failing which the liquidator shall lose the liquidator's right to redeem the security.

Valuation of security (O.17, r.3)

3. (1) If the liquidator is dissatisfied with the value which a secured creditor has put on the secured creditor's security, the liquidator may require that the property comprised in the security be offered for sale.

(2) The method and terms of sale shall be such as may be agreed between the liquidator and the creditor or, failing agreement, as may be directed by the Court.

(3) In the event that the method of sale is by auction, the creditor shall be entitled to bid and the liquidator shall be entitled to bid on behalf of the company.

Realisation of security (O.17, r.4)

4. (1) If a secured creditor who has submitted a proof of debt and valued that secured creditor's security subsequently realises it, the net proceeds of sale shall be substituted for the value previously put on the security by the creditor in that creditor's proof of debt.

(2) The creditor shall be entitled to prove for the balance of that creditor's debt.

ORDER 18

COLLECTION AND DISTRIBUTION OF COMPANY'S ASSETS BY ITS OFFICIAL LIQUIDATOR

Powers of Official Liquidator (O.18, r.1)

1. (1) The official liquidator is an officer of the Court.

(2) The official liquidator is empowered, as agent of the company, to collect, take possession, retain, manage and realise the company's property.

Manner of Distributing the Assets (O. 18, r. 2)

2. (1) When the official liquidator has sufficient funds in hand for the purpose the official liquidator shall, subject to the retention of such sums as may be necessary for the expenses of the winding up, declare and distribute dividends among the creditors in respect of the debts which they have respectively proved.

(2) The official liquidator shall give notice of the official liquidator's intention to declare and distribute a dividend.

(3) Where the official liquidator has declared a dividend, the official liquidator shall give 21 days' notice of it to the creditors, stating how the dividend is proposed to be distributed. The notice shall contain such particulars with respect to the company, and its assets and affairs, as will enable the creditors to comprehend the calculation of the amount of the dividend and the manner of its distribution.

Debts of Insolvent Company to Rank Equally (O.18, r.3)

3. Debts other than preferential debts rank equally between themselves in the winding up and, after the preferential debts, shall be paid in full unless the assets are insufficient for meeting them, in which case they shall abate in equal proportions between themselves.

Calculation of Dividend (O.18, r.4)

4. (1) In the calculation and distribution of a dividend the official liquidator shall make provision for —

(a) any debts which appear to the official liquidator to be due to persons who, for whatever reason, may not have had sufficient time in which to tender and establish their proofs;

(b) any debts which are the subject of claims which have not yet been determined;

(c) disputed proofs and claims; and

(d) expenses of the liquidation which are anticipated but not yet incurred.

(2) A creditor who has not proved that creditor's debt before the declaration of any dividend is not entitled to disturb, by reason that that creditor has not participated in it, the distribution of that dividend or any other dividend declared before that creditor's debt was proved, but when that creditor has proved that debt, that creditor is entitled to be paid out of any money available for the payment of any further dividend.

(3) No action lies against an official liquidator for a dividend, but if an official liquidator has improperly refused to pay a dividend, the Court may order the official liquidator to pay it with interest at the prescribed rate.

Distribution of Assets in Specie (O.18, r.5)

5. (1) The official liquidator has power to divide the whole or part of the company's property in its existing form, according to its estimated value, amongst the company's creditors or members.

(2) In the case of an insolvent company, the official liquidator may apply to the Court for a direction authorising the official liquidator to divide the whole or part of the company's assets amongst the creditors on the grounds that —

(a) the property in question cannot be readily or advantageously sold; or

(b) there is some other special reason why it would be advantageous to creditors for the property in question to be distributed in specie.

(3) In the case of a solvent company, the official liquidator may divide the whole or part of the company's property (after having paid its debts in full) amongst the members in the following manner —

(a) in accordance with any specific provision in this regard contained in the company's articles of association; or

(b) in the absence of any relevant provision in the company's articles of association, with the authority of an ordinary resolution passed by the company's members; or

(c) in accordance with a direction of the Court made upon the application of any member or the voluntary liquidator.

(4) Property of a company which comprises a cause of action or other contingent asset which is incapable of being readily realised, may be distributed to creditors or members by means of transferring it to a new company, established for the purpose, and whose shares will be issued to the creditors or members in proportion to their respective rights against the company.

Interim Distribution to Creditors (O.18, r.6)

6. (1) As soon as the official liquidator determines that the official liquidator has realised sufficient assets to be able to pay a dividend, the official liquidator shall give notice of the official liquidator's intention to declare an interim or final dividend, as the case may be.

(2) A notice of intention to declare an interim dividend shall be in CWR Form No. 32 and shall —

(a) fix a date (being not less than 30 days from the date of publication of the notice) by which proofs of debt must be lodged with the official liquidator; and

(b) state that any creditor who lodges that creditor's proof of debt after the date specified in the notice will be excluded from the interim distribution but will not be excluded from any subsequent interim distribution or from the final distribution.

Final Distribution to Creditors (O.18, r.7)

7. (1) When the official liquidator has —

(a) realised all the company's assets, or so much of the assets as can, in the official liquidator's opinion, be realised without needlessly protracting the liquidation; and

(b) divided any unrealised assets amongst the creditors in specie, if and to the extent that it was practical to do so, the official liquidator shall give notice of the official liquidator's intention to declare a final dividend in CWR Form 33.

(2) The notice of intention to declare a final dividend shall —

(a) fix the date (being not less than 60 days from date of publication of the notice) by which proofs must be lodged with the official liquidator (referred to as "the final date for proving"); and

(b) state that any proof of debt lodged after the final date for proving may be excluded from the final dividend.

(3) Within 14 days from the final date for proving, the official liquidator shall deal with every creditor's proof (to the extent that the official liquidator has not already done so) by admitting it, rejecting it (in whole or in part) or by making a provision for it.

(4) The official liquidator may, but shall not be obliged, to deal with any proof of debt received after the final date for proving.

(5) Having dealt with every creditor's proof, the official liquidator shall give notice of final dividend in Form 34 to all creditors who have proved their debts.

(6) Every notice of final dividend shall specify —

(a) the amount realised from the sale of the company's assets;

(b) the value attributed to any assets distributed in specie;

(c) the amount of the expenses of the liquidation;

(d) the amount of any provisions made for unpaid claims;

(e) the amount of any funds retained for specific purposes;

(f) the total amount of any interim distributions; and

(g) the amount to be distributed and the overall rate of dividend.

(7) A dividend may be distributed simultaneously with the notice declaring it.

Payment of Dividends (O.18, r.8)

8. (1) Dividends shall only be paid in the currency of the liquidation.

(2) Dividends shall be paid by cheque or by such other method as the official liquidator may agree with individual creditors.

(3) Dividend cheques shall be sent to creditors by post, or by such other method as the official liquidator may agree with individual creditors.

Assignment of Right to Receive a Dividend (O.18, r.9)

9. (1) A creditor or member may assign that creditor's or member's right to receive a dividend or instruct the official liquidator to pay that creditor's or member's dividend to some other person.

(2) If a creditor entitled to receive a dividend has given notice of assignment to the official liquidator, the official liquidator shall pay the dividend to the assignee.

(3) If a creditor entitled to receive a dividend has given written instructions to the official liquidator that the dividend be paid to some other person, the official liquidator shall pay it in accordance with those instructions.

PARTNERSHIP ACT

(2025 Revision)

PART 1 - Introductory

Short title

1. This Act may be cited as the Partnership Act (2025 Revision).

Interpretation

2. In this Act —

"business" includes every trade, occupation or profession;

"court" means the Grand Court;

"general partner", in relation to a limited partnership, means a partner who is not a limited partner as defined by section 46(2);

"registered office provider" means, in relation to a limited partnership registered under section 49, the person who provides the registered office for that limited partnership;

"Registrar" means the Registrar of Limited Partnerships appointed under section 48; and

"regulatory laws" has the meaning assigned by section 2(1) of the Companies Act (2025 Revision).

PART 2 - Nature of Partnership

Definition of partnership

3. (1) Partnership is the relation which subsists between persons carrying on a business in common with a view to profit.

(2) The relation between members of any company or association which is —

(a) registered as a company under the Companies Act (2025 Revision) or any other law for the time being in force and relating to the registration of companies; or

(b) formed or incorporated by or in pursuance of any other law, letters patent or Royal Charter, is not a partnership within the meaning of this Act.

Rules for determining existence of partnership

4. In determining whether a partnership does or does not exist, regard shall be had to the following rules —

(a) joint tenancy, tenancy in common, joint property, common property or part ownership does not of itself create a partnership as to anything so held or owned, whether the tenants or owners do or do not share any profits made by the use thereof;

(b) the sharing of gross returns does not of itself create a partnership, whether the persons sharing such returns have or have not a joint or common right or interest in any property from which or from the use of which the returns are derived; and

(c) the receipt by a person of a share of the profits of a business is prima facie evidence that that person is a partner in the business, but the receipt of such a share, or of a payment contingent on or varying with the profits of a business, does not of itself make that person a partner in the business; and in particular —

(i) the receipt by a person of a debt or other liquidated amount by instalments or otherwise not of the accruing profits of a business does not of itself make that person a partner in the business or liable as such;

(ii) a contract for the remuneration of a servant or agent of a person engaged in a business by a share of the profits of the business does not of itself make the servant or agent a partner in the business or liable as such;

(iii) a person being the widow or child of a deceased partner, and receiving by way of annuity a portion of the profits made in the business in which the deceased person was a partner, is not by reason only of such receipt a partner in the business or liable as such;

(iv) the advance of money by way of loan to a person engaged or about to engage in any business on a contract in writing with that person, signed by or on behalf of all the parties thereto, that the lender shall receive a rate of interest varying with the profits arising from carrying on the business, does not of itself make the lender a partner with the person or persons carrying on the business or liable as such; and

(v) a person receiving by way of annuity or otherwise a portion of the profits of a business in consideration of the sale by that person of the goodwill of the business is not by reason only of such receipt a partner in the business or liable as such.

Meaning of firm

5. Persons who have entered into partnership with one another are for the purposes of this Act called collectively a firm, and the name under which their business is carried on is called the firm-name.

PART 3 - Relations of Partners to Persons Dealing With Them

Power of partner to bind the firm

6. Every partner is an agent of the firm and of the co-partners of the firm for the purpose of the business of the partnership; and the acts of every partner who does any act for carrying on in the usual way business of the kind carried on by the firm of which that partner is a member bind the firm and the co-partners of the firm, unless the partner so acting has in fact no authority to act for the firm in the particular matter, and the person with whom that partner is dealing either knows that that partner has no authority, or does not know or believe the said partner to be a partner.

Partners bound by acts on behalf of firm

7. An act or instrument relating to the business of the firm done or executed in the firm-name, or in any other manner showing an intention to bind the firm, by any person thereto authorised, whether a partner or not, is binding on the firm and all the partners:

Provided that this section shall not affect any general rule of law relating to the execution of deeds or negotiable instruments.

Partner using credit of firm for private purposes

8. Where one partner pledges the credit of the firm for a purpose apparently not connected with the firm's ordinary course of business, the firm is not bound, unless that partner is in fact specially authorised by the other partners; but this section does not affect any personal liability incurred by an individual partner.

Effect of notice that firm will not be bound by acts of partner

9. If it has been agreed between the partners that any restriction shall be placed on the power of any one or more of them to bind the firm, no act done in contravention of the agreement is binding on the firm with respect to persons having notice of the agreement.

Liability of partners

10. Every partner in a firm is liable jointly with the other partners for all debts and obligations of the firm incurred while that person is a partner; and after that person's death that person's estate is also severally liable in the due course of administration for such debts and obligations, so far as they remain unsatisfied, but subject to the prior payment of that person's separate debts.

Liability of the firm for wrongs

11. Where, by any wrongful act or omission of any partner acting in the ordinary course of the business of the firm, or with the authority of that partner's co-partners, loss or injury is caused to any person not being a partner in the firm, or any penalty is incurred, the firm is liable therefor to the same extent as the partner so acting or omitting to act.

Misapplication of money or property received for or in custody of the firm

12. In the following cases —

(a) where one partner acting within the scope of that partner's apparent authority receives the money or property of a third person and misapplies it; and

(b) where a firm in the course of its business receives money or property of a third person, and the money or property so received is misapplied by one or more of the partners while it is in the custody of the firm, the firm is liable to make good the loss.

Liability for wrongs joint and several

13. Every partner is liable jointly with that partner's co-partners and also severally for everything for which the firm while that person is a partner therein becomes liable under either section 11 or 12.

Improper employment of trust property for partnership purposes

14. If a partner, being a trustee, improperly employs trust property in the business or on the account of the partnership, no other partner is liable for the trust property to the persons beneficially interested therein:

Provided that this section shall not —

(a) affect any liability incurred by any partner by reason of that partner having notice of a breach of trust; or

(b) prevent trust money from being followed and recovered from the firm if still in its possession or under its control.

Persons liable by "holding out"

15. Everyone who by words spoken or written or by conduct represents themselves, or who knowingly suffers themselves to be represented, as a partner in a particular firm is liable as a partner to any one who has on the faith of any such representation given credit to the firm, whether the representation has or has not been made or communicated to the person so giving credit by or with the knowledge of the apparent partner making the representation or suffering it to be made:

Provided that where after a partner's death the partnership business is continued in the old firm's name, the continued use of that name or of the deceased partner's name as part thereof shall not of itself make that deceased partner's executors or administrators or that deceased partner's estate liable for any partnership debts contracted after that partner's death.

Admission or representation of partner

16. An admission or representation made by any partner concerning the partnership affairs, and in the ordinary course of its business, is evidence against the firm.

Notice to acting partner to be notice to the firm

17. Notice to any partner who habitually acts in the partnership business of any matter relating to partnership affairs operates as notice to the firm, except in the case of a fraud on the firm committed by or with the consent of that partner.

Liabilities of incoming and outgoing partners

18. (1) A person who is admitted as a partner into an existing firm does not thereby become liable to the creditors of the firm for anything done before that person became a partner.

(2) A partner who retires from a firm does not thereby cease to be liable for partnership debts or obligations incurred before that partner's retirement.

(3) A retiring partner may be discharged from any existing liabilities by an agreement to that effect between themselves and the members of the firm as newly constituted and the creditors, and this agreement may be either expressed or inferred as a fact from the course of dealing between the creditors and the firm as newly constituted.

Revocation of continuing guarantee by change in firm

19. A continuing guarantee given either to a firm or to a third person in respect of the transactions of a firm is, in the absence of agreement to the contrary, revoked as to future transactions by any change in the constitution of the firm to which, or of the firm in respect of the transactions of which, the guarantee was given.

PART 4 - Relations of Partners to One Another`

Variation by consent of terms of partnership

20. The mutual rights and duties of partners, whether ascertained by agreement or defined by this Act, may be varied by the consent of all the partners, and such consent may be either expressed or inferred from a course of dealing.

Partnership property

21. (1) All property and rights and interests in property originally brought into the partnership stock or acquired, whether by purchase or otherwise, on account of the firm, or for the purposes and in the course of the partnership business, are called in this Act partnership property, and must be held and applied by the partners exclusively for the purposes of the partnership and in accordance with the partnership agreement:

Provided that the legal estate or interest in any land which belongs to the partnership shall devolve according to the general rules of law thereto applicable, but in trust, so far as necessary, for the persons beneficially interested in the land under this section.

(2) Where co-owners of an estate or interest in any land, not being itself partnership property, are partners as to profits made by the use of that land, and purchase other land out of the profits to be used in like manner, the land so purchased belongs to them, in the absence of an agreement to the contrary, not as partners, but as co-owners for the same respective estates and interests as are held by them in the land first mentioned at the date of the purchase.

Property bought with partnership money

22. Unless the contrary intention appears, property bought with money belonging to the firm is deemed to have been bought on account of the firm.

Procedure against partnership property for a partner's separate judgment debt

23. (1) A writ of execution shall not issue against any partnership property except on a judgment against the firm.

(2) A court may, on the application by summons of any judgment creditor of a partner, make an order charging that partner's interest in the partnership property and profits with payment of the amount of the judgment debt and interest thereon, and may, by the same or a subsequent order, appoint a receiver of that partner's share of profits (whether already declared or accruing) and of any other money which may be coming to that partner in respect of the partnership, and direct all accounts and inquiries, and give all other orders and directions which might have been directed or given if the charge had been made in favour of the judgment creditor by the partner, or which the circumstances of the case may require.

(3) The other partner or partners shall be at liberty at any time to redeem the interest charged, or in case of a sale being directed, to purchase the same.

Rules as to interest and duties of partners subject to special agreement

24. The interests of partners in the partnership property and their rights and duties in relation to the partnership shall be determined, subject to any agreement express or implied between the partners, by the following rules —

(a) all the partners are entitled to share equally in the capital and profits of the business and must contribute equally towards the losses whether of capital or otherwise sustained by the firm;

(b) the firm must indemnify every partner in respect of payments made and personal liabilities incurred by that partner —

(i) in the ordinary and proper conduct of the business of the firm; or

(ii) in or about anything necessarily done for the preservation of the business or property of the firm;

(c) a partner making, for the purpose of the partnership, any actual payment or advance beyond the amount of capital which that person has agreed to subscribe, is entitled to interest at the rate of ten per centum per annum from the date of the payment or advance;

(d) a partner is not entitled, before the ascertainment of profits, to interest on the capital subscribed by that partner;

(e) every partner may take part in the management of the partnership business;

(f) no partner shall be entitled to remuneration for acting in the partnership business;

(g) no person may be introduced as a partner without the consent of all existing partners;

(h) any difference arising as to ordinary matters connected with the partnership business may be decided by a majority of the partners, but no change may be made in the nature of the partnership business without the consent of all existing partners; and

(i) the partnership books are to be kept at the place of business of the partnership (or the principal place, if there is more than one); and every partner may, when that partner thinks fit, have access to and inspect and copy any of them.

Expulsion of partners

25. No majority of the partners can expel any partner unless a power to do so has been conferred by express agreement between the partners.

Retirement from partnership at will

26. (1) Where no fixed term has been agreed upon for the duration of the partnership, any partner may determine the partnership at any time on giving notice of that partner's intention so to do to all the other partners.

(2) Where the partnership has originally been constituted by deed, a notice in writing, signed by the partner giving it, shall be sufficient for this purpose.

Where partnership for term is continued over continuance on old terms presumed

27. (1) Where a partnership entered into for a fixed term is continued after the term has expired, and without any express new agreement, the rights and duties of the partners remain the same as they were at the expiration of the term, so far as is consistent with the incidents of a partnership at will.

(2) A continuance of the business by the partners or such of them as habitually acted therein during the term, without any settlement or liquidation of the partnership affairs, is presumed to be a continuance of the partnership.

(2A) In the case of a limited partnership registered under section 49, the general partner which keeps the books of account described in subsection 28(2) at any place other than at the registered office of the limited partnership or at any other place within the Islands shall, upon service of an order or notice by the Tax Information Authority pursuant to the Tax Information Authority Act (2021 Revision), make available, in electronic form or any other medium, at its registered office copies of its books of account, or any part or parts thereof, as are specified in such order or notice; and if the general partner fails to comply with the order or notice without reasonable excuse, the general partner shall incur a penalty of five hundred dollars and a further penalty of one hundred dollars for every day during which such non-compliance continues.

Accounts

28. (1) Partners are bound to render true accounts and full information of all things affecting the partnership to any partner or the agents of any partner.

(2) A partner, other than a limited partner, shall keep or cause to be kept proper books of account including, where applicable, material underlying documentation including contracts and invoices, with respect to —

(a) all sums of money received and expended by the partnership and matters in respect of which the receipt of expenditure takes place;

(b) all sales and purchases of goods by the partnership; and

(c) the assets and liabilities of the partnership.

(3) For the purposes of subsection (2), proper books of account shall not be deemed to be kept if there are not kept such books as are necessary to give a true and fair view of the business and financial condition of the partnership and to explain its transactions.

(4) A partner, other than a limited partner, shall cause all books of account required to be kept under subsection (2) to be retained for a minimum period of five years from the date on which they are prepared.

(5) A partner who knowingly and willfully contravenes subsection (2) or (4) shall be subject to a penalty of five thousand dollars.

Accountability of partners for private profits

29. (1) Every partner must account to the firm for any benefit derived by that partner without the consent of the other partners from any transaction concerning the partnership, or from any use by that partner of the partnership property, name or business connection.

(2) This section applies also to transactions undertaken after a partnership has been dissolved by the death of a partner, and before the affairs thereof have been completely wound up, either by any surviving partner or by the executors.

Duty of partner not to compete with firm

30. If a partner, without the consent of the other partners, carries on any business of the same nature as and competing with that of the firm, that partner must account for and pay over to the firm all profits made by the said partner in that business.

Rights of assignee of share in partnership

31. (1) An assignment by any partner of that partner's share in the partnership, either absolute or by way of mortgage or redeemable charge, does not, as against the other partners, entitle the assignee, during the continuance of the partnership, to interfere in the management or administration of the partnership business or affairs, or to require any accounts of the partnership transactions, or to inspect the partnership books, but entitles the assignee only to receive the share of profits to which the assigning partner would otherwise be entitled, and the assignee must accept the account of profits agreed to by the partners.

(2) In case of a dissolution of the partnership, whether as respects all the partners or as respects the assigning partner, the assignee is entitled to receive the share of the partnership assets to which the assigning partner is entitled as between themselves and the other partners, and, for the purpose of ascertaining that share, to an account as from the date of the dissolution.

PART 5 - Dissolution of Partnership and Its Consequences

Dissolution by expiration or notice

32. Subject to any agreement between the partners, a partnership is dissolved —

(a) if entered into for a fixed term, by the expiration of that term;

(b) if entered into for a single adventure or undertaking, by the termination of that adventure or undertaking; or

(c) if entered into for an undefined time, by any partner giving notice to the other partner or partners of that partner's intention to dissolve the partnership:

Provided that in this case the partnership is dissolved as from the date mentioned in the notice as the date of dissolution, or, if no date is so mentioned, as from the date of the communication of the notice.

Dissolution by bankruptcy, death or charge

33. (1) Subject to any agreement between the partners, every partnership is dissolved as regards all the partners by the death or bankruptcy of any partner.

(2) A partnership may, at the option of the other partners, be dissolved if any partner suffers that partner's share of the partnership property to be charged under this Act for that partner's separate debt.

Dissolution by illegality of partnership

34. A partnership is in every case dissolved by the happening of any event which makes it unlawful for the business of the firm to be carried on or for the members of the firm to carry it on in partnership.

Dissolution by the court

35. On application by a partner the court may decree a dissolution of the partnership in any of the following cases —

(a) when a partner, other than the partner suing, becomes in any way permanently incapable of performing that partner's part of the partnership contract;

(b) when a partner, other than the partner suing, has been guilty of such conduct as, in the opinion of the court, regard being had to the nature of the business, is calculated to affect prejudicially the carrying on of the business;

(c) when a partner, other than the partner suing, wilfully or persistently commits a breach of the partnership agreement, or otherwise so conducts themselves in matters relating to the partnership business that it is not reasonably practicable for the other partner or partners to carry on the business in partnership with that partner;

(d) when the business of the partnership can only be carried on at a loss; or

(e) whenever in any case circumstances have arisen which, in the opinion of the court, render it just and equitable that the partnership be dissolved.

Rights of persons dealing with firm against apparent members of firm

36. (1) Where a person deals with a firm after a change in its constitution that person is entitled to treat all apparent members of the old firm as still being members of the firm until that person has notice of the change.

(2) An advertisement in the Gazette shall be notice as to persons who had no dealings with the firm before the date of the dissolution or change so advertised.

(3) The estate of a partner who dies, or who becomes bankrupt, or of a partner who, not having been known to the person dealing with the firm to be a partner, retires from the firm, is not liable for partnership debts contracted after the date of such death, bankruptcy or retirement.

Right of partners to notify dissolution

37. On the dissolution of a partnership or retirement of a partner any partner may publicly notify the same, and may require the other partner or partners to concur for that purpose in all necessary or proper acts, if any, which cannot be done without that partner's or their concurrence.

Continuing authority of partners for purposes of winding up

38. After the dissolution of a partnership the authority of each partner to bind the firm, and the other rights and obligations of the partners, continue notwithstanding the dissolution so far as may be necessary to wind up the affairs of the partnership, and to complete transactions begun but unfinished at the time of the dissolution, but not otherwise:

Provided that the firm is in no case bound by the acts of a partner who has become bankrupt; but this proviso does not affect the liability of any person who has after the bankruptcy represented themselves or knowingly suffered themselves to be represented as a partner of the bankrupt.

Rights of partners as to application of partnership property

39. On the dissolution of a partnership every partner is entitled, as against the other partners in the firm and all persons claiming through them in respect of their interests as partners, to have the property of the partnership applied in payment of the debts and liabilities of the firm, and to have the surplus assets after such payment applied in payment of what may be due to the partners respectively after deducting what may be due from them as partners to the firm; and for that purpose any partner or that partner's executors or administrators may, on the termination of the partnership, apply to the court to wind up the business and affairs of the firm.

Apportionment of premium where partnership prematurely dissolved

40. Where one partner has paid a premium to another on entering into a partnership for a fixed term, and the partnership is dissolved before the expiration of that term otherwise than by the death of a partner, the court may order the repayment of the premium, or of such part thereof as it thinks just, having regard to the terms of the partnership contract and to the length of time during which the partnership has continued, unless —

(a) the dissolution is, in the judgment of the court, wholly or chiefly due to the misconduct of the partner who paid the premium; or

(b) the partnership has been dissolved by an agreement containing no provision for a return of any part of the premium.

Rights where partnership dissolved for fraud or misrepresentation

41. Where a partnership contract is rescinded on the ground of the fraud or misrepresentation of one of the parties thereto, the party entitled to rescind, is, without prejudice to any other right, entitled —

(a) to a lien on, or right of retention of, the surplus of the partnership assets after satisfying the partnership liabilities, for any sum of money paid by that partner for the purchase of a share in the partnership and for any capital contributed by that partner;

(b) to stand in the place of the creditors of the firm for any payments made by that partner in respect of the partnership liabilities; and

(c) to be indemnified by the person guilty of the fraud or making the representation against all the debts and liabilities of the firm.

Right of outgoing partner in certain cases to share profits made after dissolution

42. (1) Where any member of a firm has died or otherwise ceased to be a partner, and the surviving or continuing partners carry on the business of the firm with its capital or assets without any final settlement of accounts as between the firm and the outgoing partner or that partner's estate, then, in the absence of any agreement to the contrary, the outgoing partner or that partner's estate is entitled at that partner's option or at the option of that partner's executors or administrators to such share of the profits made since the dissolution as the court may find to be attributable to the use of that partner's share of the partnership assets, or to interest at the rate of ten per centum per annum on the amount of that partner's share of the partnership assets.

(2) Provided that where by the partnership contract an option is given to surviving or continuing partners to purchase the interest of a deceased or outgoing partner, and that option is duly exercised, the estate of the deceased partner or the outgoing partner or that partner's estate(as the case may be) is not entitled to any further share of profits; but if the partner assuming to act in exercise of the option does not in all material respects comply with the terms thereof, that partner is liable to account under subsection (1).

Retiring or deceased partner's share to be a debt

43. Subject to any agreement between the partners, the amount due from surviving or continuing partners to an outgoing partner or the executors or administrators of a deceased partner in respect of the outgoing or deceased partner's share is a debt accruing at the date of the dissolution or death.

Rule for distribution of assets on final settlement of accounts

44. In settling accounts between the partners after a dissolution of partnership, the following rules shall, subject to any agreement, be observed —

(a) losses, including losses and deficiencies of capital, shall be paid first out of profits, next out of capital, and lastly if necessary, by the partners individually in the proportion in which they were entitled to share profits; and

(b) the assets of the firm including the sums, if any, contributed by the partners to make up losses or deficiencies of capital, shall be applied in the following manner and order —

(i) in paying the debts and liabilities of the firm to persons who are not partners therein;

(ii) in paying to each partner rateably what is due from the firm to that partner for advances as distinguished from capital;

(iii) in paying to each partner rateably what is due from the firm to that partner in respect of capital; and

(iv) the ultimate residue (if any) shall be divided among the partners in the proportion in which profits are divisible.

PART 6 - Limited Partnerships

Law to apply to limited partnerships

45. Subject to this Part, the preceding Parts shall apply to a limited partnership.

Definition and constitution of limited partnership

46. (1) A limited partnership may be established in the Islands for any lawful purpose or purposes, to be carried on either within the Islands or elsewhere by two or more persons upon the terms, with the rights and powers, and subject to the conditions, limitations, restrictions and liabilities herein mentioned.

(2) A limited partnership may consist of any number of persons but shall include —

(a) one or more persons called general partners, who shall be liable for all debts and obligations of the firm; and

(b) one or more persons called limited partners, who shall at the time of entering into such partnership contribute thereto in actual cash payments, a specific sum as capital and who shall not be liable for the debts or obligations of the firm beyond the amount so contributed.

(3) A limited partner shall not during the continuance of the partnership, either directly or indirectly, draw out or receive back any part of that limited partner‘s contribution in the shape of dividends, profits or otherwise, and if that limited partner does so that limited partner shall forthwith repay the same and until that limited partner does so that limited partner shall be liable for the debts and obligations of the firm up to the amount so drawn out or received back:

Provided that a limited partner may receive lawful interest annually on the sum contributed by that limited partner if the payment of such interest does not reduce the original amount of that limited partner’s capital.

(4) A body corporate may be a general or a limited partner.

Registration of limited partnership

47. A limited partnership shall be registered as such in accordance with section 49, and in default thereof, it shall be deemed to be a general partnership and every partner shall be deemed to be a general partner.

Registrar

48. The Registrar of Companies appointed under the Companies Act (2025 Revision) shall be the Registrar of Limited Partnerships.

(1A) Every limited partnership shall have a registered office situate in the Islands for the service of process and to which all notices and communications may be addressed but a limited partnership which, at 10th January, 2013, the date of commencement of the Partnership (Amendment) Law, 2013 [Law 2 of 2013], is registered under this Part shall comply with this requirement within ninety days of that date.

(2) The Registrar shall maintain a record of all limited partnerships registered under this Act, and all the statements filed in relation to such partnerships, which records and statements shall be kept open to public inspection.

(b) the information listed in the said declaration has been published in the Gazette.

(4) The Registrar shall, on payment to that Registrar of a registration fee of eight hundred and fifty dollars, issue a certificate of registration under that Registrar's hand and seal of office as soon as the registration of a limited partnership has been effected.

(5) A certificate issued under subsection (4) shall be conclusive evidence that compliance has been made with all the requirements of this Act in respect of registration.

(b) contains any word that a company incorporated under the Companies Act (2025 Revision) would not be permitted to use in its name, with or without the consent of the Registrar of Companies; or

(c) in the opinion of the Registrar, suggests that the limited partnership is licensed, whether in the Islands or elsewhere, to carry on business that is subject to the regulatory laws of the Islands when it is not so licensed or, for any other reason, is likely to mislead as to whether it is so licensed.

(3) A person may apply to reserve a specified name by —

(a) filing with the Registrar (including by permitted electronic means) an application executed by the applicant specifying the name to be reserved and the name and address of the applicant; and

(c) the registered office;

(d) the partners or the name of any partner;

(h) the capital or shares thereof; or

(i) any other matter specified in the declaration filed under section 49(1), a declaration under the Voluntary Declarations Act (1998 Revision) by all the general partners specifying the nature of the change, shall within seven days of such change be filed with the Registrar.

(2) If the declaration referred to in subsection (1) is not so filed, every partner shall thereafter and until it is filed be deemed to be a general partner.

(3) If default is made in compliance with the requirements of this section, each of the partners commits an offence and is liable on conviction to a fine of five hundred dollars and a further fine of fifty dollars for each day during which the default continues.

Modifications of general law

52. (1) A limited partner shall not take part in the management of the partnership business, and shall not have power or authority to transact the business of, and sign for and bind, the firm:

Provided that that limited partner may, at any time, inspect the books of the firm and examine into the state and progress of the partnership business, and may advise as with the partners thereon.

(2) A limited partner, in whatsoever capacity, who transacts any business in the name of or for the partnership business or if that limited partner's name is used in the firm name with that limited partner's privity or consent shall be deemed to be a general partner in respect of all debts and obligations of the firm incurred while that limited partner so takes part in the management.

(3) Legal proceedings relating to the business of the firm may be instituted by or against the general partners only, as if there were no limited partners.

(4) Notwithstanding section 33(1) and paragraph (a) of section 35 —

(a) a limited partnership shall not be dissolved by the death or bankruptcy of a limited partner; and

(b) the permanent incapacity of a limited partner in performing that limited partner's part of the partnership contract shall not be a ground for dissolution of the partnership by the court unless that limited partner's share cannot be otherwise ascertained and realised.

(5) In the event of the dissolution of a limited partnership its affairs shall, unless the court otherwise orders, be wound up by the general partners; and no limited partner shall, under any circumstances, be allowed to withdraw any part of that limited partner's capital, or to claim as a creditor, until the claims of all the other creditors of the partnership, and all charges thereon, have been fully paid or satisfied.

(6) A limited partnership shall not be dissolved by an act of the parties before the time specified in paragraph (e) of section 51(1), and not in any case until after a notice of dissolution has been filed with the Registrar and published in the Gazette.

CAYMAN ISLANDS

PRACTICE DIRECTION NO. 1 OF 2018

CAYMAN ISLANDS

PRACTICE DIRECTION No: 1 of 2018

Court-to-court Communications and cooperation in cross-border insolvency and restructuring cases

The Guidelines – what they cover and when they should be used.

1. This practice direction deals with the use and adoption in cases pending before the Grand Court of the Cayman Islands (Court) of published guidelines relating to court-to-court communications and cooperation in cross-border insolvency and restructuring proceedings.

2. There are two main sets of guidelines (Guidelines) for court-to-court communications and co-operation which might be adopted in this jurisdiction, with appropriate modifications. These are the American Law Institute/International Insolvency Institute Guidelines Applicable to Court-to-Court Communications in Cross-Border Cases and The Judicial Insolvency Network Guidelines for Communication and Cooperation between Courts in Cross-Border Insolvency Matters. Copies of the current versions of both sets of Guidelines are attached to this Practice Direction.

3. The Guidelines primarily cover the procedural rules that may be adopted and applied in particular cross-border cases for regulating the manner of communications between the courts involved, the appearance of counsel in each court, notification to parties in parallel proceedings, the acceptance as authentic of official documents or orders made in the foreign jurisdiction or court and joint hearings. They are to be applied either by being incorporated in a protocol between the respective officeholders which protocol is then approved by the Court (and other courts involved as required) or by a separate order of the Court without a protocol (and orders of the other courts involved as required), in each case subject to such modifications as may be required in the circumstances.

4. The Guidelines are relevant where the insolvency or restructuring proceedings are being supervised by, or involve related applications to, courts in more than one jurisdiction. Such proceedings will include liquidation (including provisional and voluntary liquidation) and other insolvency or restructuring proceedings involving applications to court. Accordingly, the Guidelines will be relevant to schemes of arrangement relating to a company being supervised by the Court which also involve a parallel scheme (or debt adjustment proceeding) or ancillary proceedings in another jurisdiction (and may also be relevant in cases in which the Court has appointed a receiver or other officer of the Court and where the Cayman Islands Monetary Authority has appointed a controller pursuant to the Cayman Islands regulatory laws). The Guidelines can apply whether the officeholder is appointed by the Court or is appointed out of Court and whether the person is appointed in respect of a company (incorporated in the Cayman Islands or abroad) other legal entity (established in the Cayman Islands or abroad) or an individual.

5. Officeholders appointed in the Cayman Islands, companies subject to restructuring proceedings supervised by the Court and other interested parties involved in cross-border insolvency cases should consider, at the earliest opportunity, whether to incorporate some or all of the Guidelines with suitable modifications either into an international protocol to be approved by the Court or an order of the Court adopting the Guidelines.

Official liquidators of Cayman Islands companies

6. Official liquidators of Cayman Islands incorporated companies subject to an official liquidation under Part V of the Companies Law (2016 Revision) are already under a duty, pursuant to Order 21, r.2(1) of the Companies Winding Up Rules (CWRs), to consider whether or not it is appropriate to enter into an international protocol with any foreign officeholder (in a case in which the company in liquidation is subject to a concurrent bankruptcy proceeding under the law of a foreign country or has assets located in a foreign country which are the subject of a bankruptcy proceeding or receivership under the law of that country).

   The purpose of such a protocol is to promote the orderly administration of the estate of the company to avoid duplication of work and conflict between the official liquidator and the foreign officeholder (CWR 0.21, r.2(2)) and the protocol only takes effect when approved both by the Court and the foreign court (CWR 0.21, r.2(3)). The CWRs provide that the protocol may define and allocate responsibilities between the official liquidator and the foreign officeholder in respect of the various matters set out in CWR 0.21, r.3. These include procedures for the exchange of information between the officeholders; procedures for reporting to creditors and/or contributories and procedures for coordinating sanction applications made to the Grand Court and the foreign court.

   Consideration should be given by official liquidators to the incorporation of the Guidelines into the international protocol.

7. While Official liquidators of Cayman Islands incorporated companies are required to consider whether to enter into an international protocol which deals with the matters set out in CWR 0.21, r.3 they are not required to limit any protocol they enter into to such matters. The protocol may, subject to the approval of the Court, cover other matters including court-to-court communications and cooperation as provided for in the Guidelines. In addition, even if official liquidators conclude that a protocol is not appropriate (or that it is not appropriate to incorporate the Guidelines into such a protocol) the Guidelines with suitable modifications may be adopted by an order of the Court which gives directions with respect to the procedures to be followed.

Other Cayman Islands officeholders

8. While it is only official liquidators of Cayman Islands incorporated companies subject to an official liquidation who have a duty under the CWR to consider entering into an international protocol, other Cayman Islands officeholders or companies subject to restructuring proceedings supervised by the Court may enter into a protocol incorporating the Guidelines or may apply for an order adopting the Guidelines and this Practice Direction will apply in such cases.

9. To the extent that Cayman Islands officeholders or companies subject to restructuring proceedings supervised by the Court are unclear as to the manner in which to use and apply the Guidelines in any particular case, they may apply to the Court at any early stage in the proceedings for directions.

ITEM NO. 150

[482] HARRISON v. TENNANT. Jan. 18, 19, 21, 28, 1856.

This Court will dissolve a partnership before the expiration of the term, where the circumstances have so changed, and the conduct of the parties is such, as to render it impossible to carry it on without injury to all the partners.

The Court dissolved a partnership entered into for a term of years, when, without any breach of the partnership articles, circumstances had so altered that it could not be carried on upon the footing originally contemplated, and the confidence mutually reposed having ceased, and given place to mistrust, so that it was apparent that the partnership could not go on without mutual injury.

A. and B., who had been partners for some time, entered into a new partnership with C. At the same time B. took all the assets of the old firm, and covenanted to indemnify A. from the liabilities. The Court held that the partnership between the three might be determined by the Court, for due cause, without setting aside the deed of indemnity, which might be the subject of another suit.

The bill, in this case, prayed for the dissolution of a partnership existing between Harrison and Finch (the Plaintiffs) and the Defendant Tennant, and for consequential accounts, under the following circumstances:—

In the year 1851 the Plaintiff Harrison, and Tennant, who had for twenty years previous carried on an old-established business as solicitors, took the Plaintiff Finch into partnership. The terms were regulated by an agreement dated the 8th of November 1851, by which Harrison, Tennant and Finch, "agreed to enter into co-partnership together, as attornies, solicitors and conveyancers, for the term of twenty- one years, to commence on the 1st of January 1852." The agreement then regulated the shares and capital, and provided that Harrison and Tennant should devote only so much time and attention to the business as they, in their discretion, should think reasonable, but that Finch should devote his whole time, attention and energies thereto. If Harrison or Tennant should die in the life of Finch, the survivor was to be at liberty, without the consent of Finch, to introduce a lineal descendant into the firm. If [483] both Harrison and Tennant should die in the life of Finch, without having exercised that power, whereby the whole business should devolve on Finch, he was to pay to the widow or children of Tennant an annuity of £500 a year for the remainder of the twenty-one years. The articles then provided as follows:—"That Harrison and Tennant, or the survivor of them, shall have power to determine and make void these articles of partnership at any time, on giving notice in writing to that effect, the party receiving such notice to cease to be a partner," on receiving £500 for his profits for the current year, and his capital. "In case of any dispute between the said parties, the same to be referred to arbitration in the usual way. Any partner hereafter to be appointed acting in wilful breach of these articles or misconducting himself, to be liable to be dismissed in the usual way by the other partners, or partner if only one partner."

By an indenture of even date, and made between the same parties, it was agreed that Tennant should hold the estate of the preceding firms for his own benefit, and in consideration thereof, he covenanted to indemnify Harrison from all debts and liabilities of the preceding firms.

The partnership was accordingly carried on, but disputes arose between them, which gave rise to this suit, under the following circumstances:—The Earl of Jersey had been a client of the preceding firms from the year 1813 until 1845, when he retained other solicitors. The firm had sold the Britton Ferry estate for the earl, and the father of the Defendant Tennant (who was then a partner, but had died in 1832) principally attended to the earl's affairs. These were of great magnitude, and it was stated that about a million sterling had passed through his hands from first to last, for purchase-[484]-money, rents, &c., but no account had been settled during the whole time. Disagreements had arisen between the earl and the firm as to these extensive and complicated transactions, and in May 1845 Mr. Tennant delivered accounts of the sales, the general accounts and the bills of costs. These were not satisfactory, and after communications, explanations and controversy between the earl's solicitors and Tennant, the earl filed his bill in October 1852 against Harrison and Tennant, impeaching some sales made to the Defendant's father, and praying accounts. Counsel suggested a compromise, but Tennant refused to accede to this, and put in his answer, without the concurrence of his partners. Amongst other charges, the earl had complained of the amount of commission of £5 per cent. on the sales of the estate down to 1822, which exceeded £13,000, and was in addition to office bills. In answer to this, Tennant in his answer said that the charge had been made with the earl's concurrence, that it had been charged in an account book now in his possession, which he had frequently seen his father hand to the earl, who examined the same. Upon production of this book, however, the paper of which it was composed bore the water-mark of 1830. This matter being introduced by amendment, the Defendant adhered to the statement, but said that the book must be a copy made by his father of the original, but that he could not find it.

Again, the Defendant, in his original answer, in order to enhance the value of the services of his father, stated that the earl had been willing to sell the estate for £200,000, and that his father, by his judicious arrangements, had obtained £300,000 for part only, and in one of the books there was, in the writing of the firm, an entry of an offer by a gentleman of £200,000 for the whole estate, which [485] had been refused. It appeared that the first figure (20) had been written on an erasure, and from other sources it appeared that £350,000 had really been offered. There was another charge against the Defendant of having charged £7560, as received by his father for deposits on sales, when they had been received for reserved rents, and that he had made a claim for £16,000, which was not entered in the books, and one or two minor matters, which it is not necessary to state.

The earl had introduced these matters into his bill by amendment, but he did not require any further answer. The Defendant insisted, however, on putting in a further answer. His partners interfered and wished it to be settled in consultation, whereupon the Defendant made himself the sole solicitor on the record in lieu of the firm, and put in his answer without further consulting his partners thereon.

The present bill, filed in May 1855, after detailing these matters of complaint, stated as follows:—"In addition to the several circumstances hereinbefore stated, the Plaintiffs have grave cause of complaint against the Defendant Tennant, in respect of the general character and conduct of the defence adopted by him, in and by his answer and further answer" to the bill, and in the said suit instituted against him by the Earl of Jersey, and they submit that his conduct "was and is inconsistent with his duty as a partner of the Plaintiffs in their profession," and, as evidence of such conduct, the Plaintiffs refer to the said several answers of the said Defendant to the said original and amended bills. That in consequence of the several matters the Plaintiffs were advised that they ought to effect a dissolution of their said co-partnership with Tennant.

[486] The bill prayed a dissolution of the partnership and for accounts.

It appeared that Harrison and Finch had, soon after instituting this suit, sent a circular to the clients of the firm, stating that they had instituted proceedings to dissolve the partnership in consequence of the "grave charges" made against Mr. Tennant in the suit of Earl of Jersey v. Tennant, and the manner in which he had met them, and trusting that this "would not impair the confidence hitherto reposed in them."

Mr. Lloyd and Mr. Fleming, for the Plaintiffs, argued that in the present state of circumstances and feelings, it was impossible that the partnership could continue to be carried on, and that the authorities embodied a general principle that a contract of partnership would not be continued to the injury of all concerned in it, when it was clear, from violent causes of dissension, that they could not work in harmony together.

They cited Collyer on Partnership (2d ed.) (page 193); Baring v. Dix (1 Cox, 213); Waters v. Taylor (2 Ves. & B. 299); De Berenger v. Hammel (7 Jarm. Conv. 26), and commented on the acts complained of.

Mr. Roupell and Mr. Shapter, for the Defendant. There must be some breach of the express or implied contract between partners to justify the Court in setting aside and terminating a partnership which the parties have expressly engaged to carry on for a fixed number of years. Here there is not even an allegation of any breach of the partnership articles, or of any misconduct in the manage-[487]-ment of the present partnership, nor is there any interruption of intercourse between the partners. As to Harrison, it was more his duty to have seen that the affairs of Lord Jersey were regularly entered than the Defendant, who did not become a partner until 1832; besides, the Defendant has engaged to indemnify Harrison, who, therefore, cannot be damnified by the result of that suit. The Plaintiffs have shewn an undue haste in filing the present bill, which is founded on charges made in another suit, which not only still remain unproved, but are positively denied on oath; the Defendant must be assumed to be innocent until judicially found to be guilty. The existence of charges in another suit, instituted by another party, cannot be a ground for dissolving this partnership; for if a decree were made for the Plaintiffs in this suit, it must be based on the unproved charges in the other.

They commented on and explained the several charges which were denied or explained, and insisted that the mere erroneous statements of ancient transactions, in which the Defendant's father, and not the Defendant, had been engaged, were not of the serious character to justify the rescinding of a partnership contract; besides which, they did not really affect the merits of the other suit. They argued that the conduct of the Plaintiffs was highly improper, in sending a circular to the clients of the firm, with the object of supplanting the Defendant, and depriving him of his clients, and they insisted that the law was not that a partnership was to be dissolved if it were impracticable for it to go on, where the difficulty arose from the conduct of the person seeking the dissolution. They argued that the partnership could not be dissolved without setting aside the contemporaneous deed of indemnity, and urged that Finch had purposely picked a quarrel with the Defendant, in order, upon the [488] death of Harrison, who was now seventy-eight years of age, to secure to himself the whole of an old-established business.

They cited Goodman v. Whitcomb (1 Jac. & W. 589); Marshall v. Colman (2 Jac. & W. 266); Wray v. Hutchinson (2 Myl. & K. 235); Smith v. Jeyes (4 Beav. 503); Hall v. Hall (20 Beav. 139, and 3 M. & Gor. 79-86); Ogilvie v. Gregory (V.-C. Wood, 17 Jan. 1856).

THE MASTER OF THE ROLLS said he would consider the case before he called for a reply.

Jan. 28. THE MASTER OF THE ROLLS [Sir John Romilly]. The perusal, which I have had the opportunity of making very carefully since this case was heard, has convinced me that it is impossible for this partnership to continue.

There are two principles on which the Court will dissolve a partnership contract, both of which, to some extent, exist in the present case; they combine and co-operate together, and lead me to the conclusion to which I think it necessary to come. One is, the alteration of circumstances, subsequently to the entering into the partnership; and next, the conduct of the partners themselves.

I will, in the first instance, look at this case so far as Mr. Finch is concerned, because this is clear, that if there be no partnership so far as he is concerned, there can be none so far as regards Mr. Harrison; it must be put an end to altogether.

[489] With respect to the alteration of the circumstances, I have to consider, whether the partnership can be carried on as it was originally contemplated by the persons who contracted to become partners. The partnership contract was in November 1851, and the position of the parties, at that time, was as follows:—Mr. Harrison was of an advanced age, and Mr. Tennant was engaged in a contest with Lord Jersey, the character of which, as I infer from the evidence before me, had not been fully ascertained. Previous attempts had been made to compromise, and it might reasonably have been expected that this might have been settled. The letter of the 5th of December 1851, of Messrs. Frere & Co., to Mr. Tennant, which shewed the serious character of the contest, was subsequent to the entering into these articles of partnership, although previous to the commencement of the partnership, on the 1st of January 1852. These negociations came to nothing, and in October 1852 the bill of Lord Jersey v. Tennant was filed, which was certainly of a very serious character, and then, for the first time, Mr. Finch must have become acquainted with the full extent of the matters involved in that suit, though, no doubt, he had a general knowledge of them before, because he had, for ten years, been managing clerk to the firm, and must have known generally what was taking place; though Mr. Tennant says that Mr. Finch knew nothing about them. However, matters gradually became more serious, the answer was not put in until December 1853, so that it required upwards of two years to put in a sufficient and proper answer; this again shews the serious character of the suit. The anxiety of Mr. Harrison and Mr. Finch as to these matters is shewn by their consulting counsel, without the knowledge of Mr. Tennant, which is one of the matters he complains of. It became at once apparent that Mr. Tennant's whole time would be [490] necessarily occupied in preparing the defence, and thus withdrawn from the partnership. It has been urged, no doubt with great truth, that the partnership articles provided for this very thing, by stipulating that Mr. Harrison and Mr. Tennant should only be obliged to give such time and attendance to the affairs of the partnership as they might think fit; but still Mr. Finch, knowing the ability and anxiety with which Mr. Tennant had previously carried on this business for a great number of years, might reasonably have expected to receive very great assistance from him in carrying on the partnership business, though he had not a right positively to demand it, but the nature and continuance of this suit shewed but little prospect of his obtaining any, and any expectation so formed would undoubtedly have been fallacious. Now, undoubtedly, this alone would be nothing, but I mention it merely in the outset as a part of the substance, which combines with the rest of what I am going to state.

The suit of Lord Jersey v. Tennant became more serious, the bill was amended and the amendments undoubtedly contain matter which might reasonably have occasioned great and painful surprise to the partners of Mr. Tennant. The bill before me contains six distinct charges against Mr. Tennant, but it is only necessary for me to refer, for instance, to the two most serious ones.

Mr. Tennant, in his answer to Lord Jersey's bill, states that he saw a particular book, which he describes, handed to Lord Jersey in June 1826, and that Lord Jersey admitted the propriety of an item contained in it, and that he authorized or made a payment of £5000 upon the strength of that admission and in consequence of the entry in that book. On the production of the [491] book itself, it appears that it could not have existed before the year 1830. Now, Mr. Tennant, in answer to this charge, says that it must have been a copy of this book which he saw shewn to Lord Jersey, but that he has not been able to find the original of that book; but no proof of its existence is given, nor any explanation why a copy should have been made of this book in particular.

The other instance is the alteration of an item in one of the books kept by Mr. Tennant, containing the accounts of the Earl of Jersey, by changing the two first figures of a sum, which appears now to be £200,000, but which, from the corresponding entry in another book, which I think is the office attendance book, it is pretty clear, must have been originally £350,000. This alteration is admitted by Mr. Tennant to have been made by him, he is unable to remember when it was made, or under what circumstances; but he has no doubt it was made for the purpose of making the book what he believed to be correct. It is contended, undoubtedly, that that alteration is of no moment, because, so far as the charge by the firm is made, the charge would be exactly the same whether the offer made for the estate was £200,000 or £350,000. On the other hand, it is contended that this is a matter of some moment, because, in the defence to the suit of the Earl of Jersey, Mr. Tennant enhances the value of the services of his father in this matter, by the fact that Lord Jersey was willing to have sold the property for a small sum, comparatively speaking, to that which it afterwards produced; and that if he was willing to have sold the property for £200,000 or £250,000, it is somewhat hard to take harsh proceedings against a solicitor who had sold a portion of the property for £450,000, and left the remainder of the property producing upwards [492] of £10,000 a year. I think it unnecessary to state these things further for the purpose of what I am about to mention.

Now these circumstances might, in my opinion, naturally alarm both Mr. Harrison and Mr. Finch, and accordingly they seem thereupon to have resolved that as this was a matter which, as it might involve the character of one of the partners of the firm in which they were materially interested, and thereby might affect them, it was important that the sole conduct of the defence of Mr. Tennant to the suit of Earl Jersey v. Tennant ought not to be exclusively entrusted to Mr. Tennant, but that they ought to be allowed to take a part in it; and they thereupon instructed Mr. Shapter not to settle the answer until he had had a consultation with Queen's Counsel. Upon this, Mr. Tennant, as he was entitled to do, being the Defendant upon the record, changed the solicitors, by making himself the sole solicitor on the record for himself, and he instructed Mr. Shapter to complete the answer, which he did immediately, on his own responsibility. There are, no doubt, many very good reasons given for that step; in the first place, the time for answering was very short, and it was a matter of great importance that it should be done very speedily.

In this state of things, the result appears to me to be that the confidence mutually reposed in each other, when the partnership was originally formed, must have ceased, and that it is now impossible that the business can be conducted as it was originally contemplated, and, although the parties to this suit being gentlemen, no outbreak of any sort has occurred between them, yet nevertheless the attempt to compel them to act as partners for the future would, as against them all, be [493] to compel them to inflict irreparable injury upon each other. Nay, I should infer from the evidence that the continuation of the partnership by itself is not desired by Mr. Tennant, but that what he resists is, the attempt to dissolve it, if such dissolution is to be based on his individual acts, or in respect of any alleged misconduct on his part. Now, I say, I draw this inference from the evidence which he gives, for he states that Mr. Finch was an artful and designing person, that he early formed an unfavourable opinion of him, from the manner in which he endeavoured to wheedle himself into Mr. Tennant's good opinion, and to supplant Mr. Harrison, and this long before the partnership was formed; and that when he did enter into the partnership, it was at the request and at the earnest desire of Mr. Harrison, and that, on that ground alone, he admitted him into the partnership, and that he would never have consented even then to have done so, unless it had been under the express condition that he might reserve to himself the power of excluding Mr. Finch from the partnership at any time upon the decease of Mr. Harrison taking place.

Now it is not necessary, nor would it be proper with this view, to refer to what has since taken place, further than this, that it convinces me that the breach is irreparable on both sides, and confirms the view of the feelings and the want of confidence which must necessarily exist between these parties, rendering the conduct of the business together impossible. [His Honor next referred to a circular by Mr. Harrison and Mr. Finch to the clients, and expressed his strong disapproval of it.]

It is true, as has been very justly observed, that no party is entitled to act improperly, and then to say the [494] conduct of the partners, and their feelings towards each other, are such that the partnership can no longer be continued, and certainly this Court would not allow any person so to act, and thus to take advantage of his own wrong. But this is not that simple case, and the circumstances I have already referred to shew that the conduct on both sides has produced this state of things.

It is urged that the animus with which this suit is instituted is obvious, from the haste in which it has been instituted and hurried on, so as to obtain a priority over the suit of The Earl of Jersey v. Tennant, and that the Plaintiffs ought not to have assumed that the truth of the charges made by that bill, and which are repeated by the present, would be established in the case of The Earl of Jersey v. Tennant, but that they ought to have waited until, at the hearing of the cause, the truth or untruth of the charges had been determined; that this is, in truth, an attempt to prejudice Mr. Tennant in that suit, in which the solicitors of Lord Jersey are, in fact, concurring and assisting; and that everyone must be treated to be innocent until he is proved to be guilty. This, undoubtedly, was urged with great vigour and ability before me in the argument. I expressly state that I intend in the present case, and in the observations I am now making, neither to say nor to do anything which can, in the slightest degree, affect the suit of The Earl of Jersey v. Tennant, either directly or indirectly; and I shall certainly not express, even if I had formed, which I have abstained from doing, any opinion as to whether any degree of credit is justly attributable to the charges against that gentleman, the Defendant in this suit.

But it is reasonably obvious to anyone versed in the course which a cause of that nature takes in [495] this Court, that in all probability the validity or invalidity of the personal charges against Mr. Tennant will never be determined or possibly discussed in that suit. The Court will, in all probability, direct some account to be taken, with or without special directions, and except in the discussion of the items, and in taking the accounts, and then partially and incidentally, if at all, no matter of conduct can ever come into question. I repeat that I express no opinion whatever on these charges, and that I have not the means of accurately forming one; still I cannot but feel that these charges, and the circumstances connected with them, and the mode in which they are brought before me, may reasonably, to some minds, have produced that mistrust which exists in the present case between the parties, and which has led to the hostility of feeling on both sides, which, in my opinion, exists, and which, in my opinion, has made it impossible that this partnership could longer be continued, with advantage to any of the persons concerned.

It is asked, is Mr. Finch to have the benefit of the whole business? Is he to come in under the wing of Mr. Harrison, and on his early death or retirement, which is probable, he being a gentleman of an advanced age and infirm, to take the whole of the business of a great and distinguished firm to himself, and thus supplant the very persons to whom he owes everything in connection with this partnership. Now, undoubtedly, if my decree could lead to that result, I should pause considerably before I attempted to do anything of that description, whatever might be the difficulties of the position in which I was placed; and I have endeavoured to state this argument as strongly as it was pressed upon me. But it is impossible for me to speculate that such would be the result of the decree I have [496] to make. I am not to suppose that the clients of a long and well-established firm, which has, for many years, been entirely dependent on the exertions of Mr. Tennant and his abilities alone, which is shewn by Mr. Finch's own letters, will abandon him in consequence of the dissensions between himself and his present partners, in which, in my opinion, it is impossible to say that either party is wholly free from blame.

It has been further observed that a deed was executed contemporaneously with the partnership articles, by which the assets of the old firm, together with its liabilities, were exclusively taken upon himself, by Mr. Tennant, that this was a part of the same transaction, and that this cannot be allowed to stand if the partnership be dissolved. Upon this part of the case I express no opinion; it does not and it cannot properly form part of the case before me. If, as its date would seem to infer, the fact be that this deed was a part of the same arrangement, it ought, if the partnership fall, to fall with it; but unless this matter be settled, by arrangement out of Court, it must be the subject of a separate suit. I cannot, in this suit, order that deed to be cancelled, nor can I make any declaration respecting it.

All that I can do and all that I profess to do is to say that in the existing state of circumstances, feelings and conduct of the partners, the partnership cannot be conducted without ruin to all the persons concerned in it, and that it ought to be dissolved.

I do not base my decision upon any particular reported case, but upon the principle that the circumstances under which the parties entered into the partnership have, by matters over which they have no control, [497] materially altered, that these altered circumstances have, combined with the conduct of the parties themselves, produced a mistrust which the Court cannot say is unreasonable; and that, taking all these things together, it is impossible that the partnership can be conducted upon the footing on which it was originally contemplated, without injury to all these persons concerned, and that taking all these matters together, it makes this a case in which, in my opinion, it is the duty of the Court to pronounce a decree for the dissolution of the partnership.

Olive Mill Ltd. (the holding company) carried on the business of cotton spinning. In 1953 Olive Mill Spinners Ltd. (Spinners), in consideration of an issue to the holding company of shares in Spinners, acquired that business, the holding company becoming thenceforth an investment company. In 1956 the holding company, pursuant to section 22 of the Finance Act, 1922, gave a grouping notice whereunder Spinners' profits fell to be treated for tax purposes as the holding company's profits.[1] On December 12, 1957, after difficulties in the cotton-spinning trade, both companies were voluntarily wound up. Until then the holding company was chargeable to profits tax in respect of its own and of Spinners' profits. In January, 1958, the liquidator sold the holding company's investments except the shares in Spinners and also Spinners' mill and machinery but by agreement with the purchasers Spinners still processed yarn at the factory with its own employees. The liquidator last sold yarn in October 1958. For the chargeable accounting period January 27, 1957, to December 12, 1957, the holding company was assessed to £2,142 18s. 0d. profits tax and £30,644 distribution charge and appealed to the special commissioners against that assessment. The holding company contended that its functions were the same after December 12, 1957, as they had been before that date, namely, the holding of investments, so that it continued to be chargeable to profits tax, i.e., to come within section 19 (4) of the Finance Act, 1937. The Crown contended that the period from January 27 to December 12, 1957, was the holding company's last chargeable accounting period. Were that so the distribution charge would have been justified. In 1958 and 1959 the liquidator, as liquidator of Spinners, made certain distributions to the holding company and also made certain distributions as liquidator of the holding company. The Inland Revenue Commissioners under their statutory powers determined that January 27, 1957, to December 12, 1957, should be an accounting period for the relevant purposes of the holding company. That company contended before the special commissioners that the period ending December 12, 1957, was not its last chargeable accounting period, because it remained chargeable to profits tax under section 19 (4). The Crown contended that its trade or business ceased at the latest on December 12, 1957, and that that date ended its last chargeable accounting period. The special commissioners found that its functions (the holding of investments) continued to be after the voluntary winding up of that date what they had been before it and that that chargeable accounting period was not the last. The Crown appealed. For the chargeable accounting period December 13, 1957, to January 25, 1958, Spinners were assessed to £193 16s. 0d. tax and £71 4s. 0d. distribution charge, on the footing that on December 12, 1957, the grouping notice ceased to operate. The special commissioners discharged the assessment.

The Crown appealed:—

Held, allowing both appeals: (1) that from the winding up the holding company's objective was not to hold investments to obtain a benefit, but to realise its assets and distribute the proceeds among creditors and members: and that the special commissioners had misdirected themselves in their view of the proper interpretation of section 19 (4) and had arrived at the wrong conclusions.

(2) That on the passing of the winding-up resolution the grouping notice became inoperative, first, because the holding company's last accounting period then ended and secondly, because that company then ceased to be the beneficial owner within section 42 of the Finance Act, 1938, of the shares in Spinners.

period January 27, 1957, to December 12, 1957, in the sum of £2,142 18s. 0d. (tax) and a distribution charge for that period in the sum of £30,644.

The question for determination was whether the said accounting period to December 12, 1957, was the last chargeable accounting period of the holding company (as the Crown alleged), in which case the distribution charge was admitted to be justified by virtue of various statutory enactments and particularly section 35 (1) of the Finance Act, 1947; or whether (as the holding company contended) its functions continued after December 12, 1957, to be what they were before that date, namely, the holding of investments, so that it continued after December 12, 1957, to be chargeable to profits tax.

The commissioners heard evidence from a director of the holding company and from the liquidator, and various letters and other documents were put in evidence.

On the evidence they found the following facts proved or admitted.

The holding company was incorporated on March 19, 1920, to carry on the business of cotton spinning.

In 1953 a reconstruction took place owing to the difficulties then prevalent in the cotton industry. A new company, Olive Mill Spinners Ltd. (hereinafter called "Spinners"), was formed and took over from the holding company the spinning business. The holding company thenceforth held all the shares in Spinners.

Both Spinners and the holding company were liable to profits tax, the former because it carried on the trade of cotton spinning and so was chargeable under section 19 (2) of the Finance Act, 1937, the latter because its functions consisted in holding investments or other property (i.e., the shares in Spinners and other investments) and so was chargeable under section 19 (4) of that Act.

A "grouping" notice in accordance with section 22 of the Finance Act, 1937, was given by the holding company with respect to the profits of its subsidiary Spinners, with the result that the profits or losses of Spinners fell to be treated as the profits or losses of the holding company for the chargeable accounting periods ended January 28, 1956, onwards.

The holding company and Spinners had common boards of directors, board meetings taking place consecutively on the same day. The board meetings of Spinners as the trading company were regarded as the important ones: the meetings of the holding company were usually little more than formal, except for the discussion of what investments to hold (other than the shares in Spinners). The accounts of both companies were normally made up to various dates at the end of January, i.e., the last Saturday in the month.

The holding company was a public company with numerous shareholders, and its shares were at the material times and up to the date of the appeal hearing quoted on the Oldham Stock Exchange. The directors did not have a controlling interest.

After the reconstruction in 1953 the cotton trade and in particular the trade of Spinners recovered somewhat, but by 1957 things were bad again: Spinners' production of yarn was down; with the falling demand most of it had to be kept as stock; and its storage presented great difficulties.

In consequence of the difficulties that had arisen the directors in their dual capacity as directors of both the holding company and Spinners were minded to dispose of their assets to the best advantage before the anticipated losses in trading were incurred. They realised that they could either dispose of their mill, machinery, stock and other assets and distribute the proceeds in a liquidation, or they could recommend to their shareholders a sale of their shares in the company. It became apparent that prospective purchasers of the shares were not interested in the assets, but in the value to them of the " shell " of the company minus its assets. Various offers were received for the shares but not accepted, the first being in April, 1957. In September, 1957, the directors resolved to recommend a liquidation, but this was dropped in view of several other offers which were received.

The directors eventually called a meeting of members of the company for December 12, 1957, at which the various offers made were put before the meeting. They were, however, rejected, and a resolution was passed for the voluntary winding up of the holding company, that company's auditor being appointed liquidator. A similar resolution for the voluntary winding up of Spinners was passed on the same day, December 12, 1957, and he was appointed liquidator of that company also. The liquidator continued the efforts to dispose to the best advantage of the assets of Spinners, or of the shares of members of the holding company.

In January, 1958, the holding company's investments other than shares in Spinners, consisting of Government stock, were sold by the liquidator at prices less than their cost to the holding company. In the same month the liquidator sold Spinners' mill and machinery, but by agreement with the purchasers Spinners continued to process yarn at the factory with its own employees and to have the use of the offices and warehouse. The liquidator sold the stock of yarn as quickly as he could, retaining the salesmen for the purpose. The processing did not continue for long, but the last sale of yarn did not take place until October, 1958.

Further tentative offers to buy the holding company's shares were received early in 1958. None of them became effective.

On May 21, 1958, the liquidator of Spinners made a first distribution to the company as shareholder of 15s. 6d. per share, amounting to £124,000; and on March 17, 1959, a further distribution of 2s. 6d. per share amounting to £18,000. It was expected that a further distribution would be made. On May 21, 1958, the liquidator of the company made a first distribution of 2s. 6d. per share, amounting to £180,764, and on March 24, 1959, a further payment of 3d. per share, amounting to £18,076. The period January 27, 1957, to December 12, 1957, was not a period for which the accounts of the company had been made up, but the Inland Revenue Commissioners, in accordance with section 20 (2) of the Finance Act, 1937, determined it to be an accounting period.

It was contended for the holding company that its function of holding investments continued after as before December 12, 1957, and that accordingly that date was not its last chargeable accounting period for the purposes of profits tax, and that the distribution charge was accordingly invalid. It was contended for the Inland Revenue Commissioners that the holding company's trade or business ceased at the latest on December 12, 1957, and that, accordingly, that date was the end of the last chargeable accounting period, and that the distribution charge was therefore in order. The Special Commissioners found that the functions of the holding company, namely, the holding of investments, continued to be the same before and after the resolution to wind up passed on December 12, 1957, and that, accordingly, the chargeable accounting period ending on December 12, 1957, was not the last chargeable accounting period of that company and that the appeal must succeed. Figures having been agreed on November 24, 1961, the Special Commissioners reduced the assessment to £611 9s. 2d. (tax) and discharged the distribution charge on December 12, 1961.

The facts in the case stated with regard to Olive Mill Spinners Ltd., so far as relevant, were as follows. On July 11 and 12, 1961, Olive Mill Spinners Ltd. (hereinafter called " Spinners "), appealed against an assessment to profits tax for the chargeable accounting period December 13, 1957, to January 25, 1958, in the sum of £193 16s. 0d. (tax) and a distribution charge for the same period in the sum of £71 4s. 0d. (tax). The relevant facts in the two cases were the same. The decision in the case of Spinners was agreed to be dependent on that in the holding company's case: if they decided (as they did) in that case that the period to December 12, 1957, was not the last chargeable accounting period of the holding company then by reason of the " grouping " notice the profits of Spinners continued to be treated as the profits of the holding company and the assessment under appeal made on Spinners fell to be discharged. In view of their decision in the holding company's case they discharged the assessment on Spinners. No argument took place on what was the position if their decision in the holding company's case were held to be incorrect, and they came to no conclusion on that question.

The Crown appealed.

INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. OLIVE MILL LTD. (IN LIQUIDATION).

The following case, in addition to the cases referred to in the judgment, was cited in argument: In re Farrow's Bank Ltd.[2]

BUCKLEY J. These are two appeals from decisions of the Special Commissioners of Income Tax relating to assessments to the profits tax made on two companies, Olive Mill Ltd., the holding company, and Olive Mill Spinners Ltd., "Spinners"

Before 1953 the holding company had carried on the trade of cotton spinning. In 1953 Spinners was incorporated and acquired from the holding company its business of spinning cotton in consideration of an issue to the holding company of shares of Spinners credited as fully paid. From that time forward the holding company held shares in the capital of Spinners and also owned and held certain other investments. In fact, it became an investment company. Spinners continued to carry on the trade of spinning cotton.

That state of affairs continued until December 12, 1957, when both companies passed appropriate resolutions to go into members' voluntary winding up.

In the course of the year 1956 the holding company gave a grouping notice pursuant to section 22 of the Finance Act, 1937, as a result of which, so long as that notice remained effective, the profits of Spinners fell to be treated as the profits of the holding company for profits tax purposes. It is not disputed that until the date of the resolution to wind up the holding company was chargeable to profits tax in respect of both its own profits and of the profits of Spinners in consequence of the grouping notice. The major question in this case is whether as a result of the resolution to wind up the holding company the chargeable accounting period for profits tax purposes applicable to the holding company which was then current and which then came to an end was the last chargeable accounting period of that company, or whether the company remained chargeable to profits tax so that the period ended December 12, 1957, was not the last chargeable accounting period.

Section 19 (1) of the Finance Act, 1937, creates the charge to the profits tax in respect of each chargeable accounting period of the liable company. Subsection (2) provides: "(2) Subject as "hereafter provided, the trades and businesses to which this "section applies are all trades or businesses of any description "carried on in the United Kingdom, or carried on, whether per- "sonally or through an agent, by persons ordinarily resident in "the United Kingdom." Subsection (4) is in the following terms: "(4) Where the functions of a company or society incorporated by "or under any enactment consist wholly or mainly in the holding "of investments or other property, the holding of the investments "or property shall be deemed for the purpose of this section to "be a business carried on by the company or society."

Whether in the absence of subsection (4) the business of an investment company would be held to be a trade or business within subsection (2) is perhaps now not very relevant because the section does in fact include subsection (4). Subsection (4) may perhaps have been included in the section ex majore cautela to make sure that the business of an investment company would be caught by the section; but as the section stands it is, I think, clear that the business of an investment company is chargeable if it falls within subsection (4) but not otherwise; in other words, the business of an investment company is not within subsection (2). That view was shared by Harman J., who in Carpet Agencies Ltd. v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue,[1] said: "This clearly means that, in the view of the legislature, in the "absence of the subsection" (Subsection (4)) "the mere holding "of investments or property would not constitute the carrying on "of a business."

Section 30 of the Finance Act, 1947, contains provisions which are relevant to this case, but which I need not read, relating to reliefs in respect of profits which are not distributed and distribution charges which fall to be made when retained profits are distributed in a later accounting period.

The holding company was assessed to the profits tax for the chargeable accounting period January 27, 1957, to December 12, 1957, in the sum of £2,142 18s. 0d., and a distribution charge for the same period in the sum of £30,644. The company appealed to the special commissioners against that assessment. The propriety of that assessment depends on the proper view of the question whether the accounting period ended December 12, 1957, was or was not the last chargeable accounting period of the company or whether, as the company contended before the Special Commissioners, its functions continued after December 12, 1957, to be what they were before that date, namely, the holding of investments, so that it continued after that date to be chargeable to the profits tax; that is to say, so that it continued after that date to fall within the terms of section 19 (4) of he Act of 1937.

Among the facts found by the Special Commissioners in their case stated in the holding company's appeal was that in the year 1957, in consequence of the difficulties that had then arisen in the cotton spinning trade, the directors of both companies were minded to dispose of their assets to the best advantage before losses, which they anticipated, might be incurred. Various courses of action were considered and investigated, but eventually the two companies were put into liquidation by the resolutions of December 12, 1957. The liquidator who then came into the saddle continued the efforts which the directors had theretofore been making to dispose of the assets of Spinners to the best advantage or to dispose of the shares of members of the holding company. The liquidator for a time continued to hold the shares of Spinners and also continued to hold the other investments of the holding company. Those other investments were sold in January, 1958, and in the same month the liquidator sold the mill and machinery which belonged to Spinners, but by arrangement with the purchasers he continued to process yarn which belonged to Spinners at the mill and to have the use of the offices and warehouse there. The yarn so processed was sold as occasion offered. The last sale of yarn did not take place until October, 1958. The secretary of the holding company was retained in the employment of that company until that date because, as the commissioners find, he had a very good knowledge of the cotton industry which, presumably, was of value to the liquidator.

During this period there were negotiations for the sale of the shares of the holding company on terms which contemplated that the liquidation might be stayed, but these came to nothing.

On May 21, 1958, the liquidator, as liquidator of Spinners, made a first distribution to the holding company as a shareholder in Spinners of a sum of £124,000, and on March 17, 1959, in the same capacity he made a further distribution to the holding company of £18,000. On those same dates as liquidator of the holding company he made a first distribution of sums amounting to £180,764, and on March 24, 1959, a further distribution amounting to £18,076. The Inland Revenue Commissioners under their statutory powers determined that the period from January 27, 1957, to December 12, 1957, should be an accounting period for the relevant purposes of the holding company.

The contention of the company before the special commissioners was that its function of holding investments continued after December 12, 1957, in the same way as it had existed before that date, and that accordingly the period ending on December 12, 1957, was not its last chargeable accounting period because it remained a company chargeable to profits tax under section 19 (4) of the Act of 1937. On the other hand, the Crown contended that the company's trade or business ceased for the relevant purposes on December 12, 1957, at the latest, and that that date was the end of the last chargeable accounting period.

In paragraph 6 of the case stated the special commissioners state: "We, the Commissioners who heard the appeal, found "that the functions of the company, namely, the holding of "investments, continued to be the same before and after the "resolution to wind up which was passed on December 12, 1957. "Accordingly, the chargeable accounting period ending on "December 12, 1957, was not the last chargeable accounting "period of the company and the appeal must succeed." It is from that conclusion that the Crown now seek to appeal.

As regards Spinners, an assessment was made for the chargeable accounting period from December 13, 1957, to January 25,

Buckley J.

1958, in the sum of £193 16s. 0d. (tax) and a distribution charge for the same period in the sum of £71 4s. 0d. That assessment was made on the footing that on December 12, 1957, the grouping notice which had been given by the holding company ceased to operate, so that from that date Spinners was chargeable in its own right to profits tax in respect of the profits earned as the result of the carrying on of Spinners' business by the liquidator in the manner that I have already indicated. The Spinners appealed against that assessment, and before the special commissioners the matter was dealt with on the footing that the result of that appeal depended on the decision in the appeal of the holding company; that is to say, on the footing that if it could be shown that the holding company remained chargeable to the profits tax, and that the functions of the holding company remained the same after December 12, 1957, as before, the grouping notice would continue in operation so that the profits of Spinners would be treated as the profits of the holding company and Spinners would not be separately assessable.

Before me a point of law has been taken which I will explain later which was not taken before the special commissioners or brought to their notice.

The position with regard to the holding company turns on the question whether on the true interpretation of section 19 of the Act of 1937 the functions of the holding company continued after December 12, 1957, to be wholly or mainly the holding of investments or other property, and in that connection I have been referred to various authorities. There are only two to which I shall need to refer in any detail, but there are earlier decisions which are relevant and are sufficiently cited in those authorities for it to be unnecessary for me to refer to them separately.

In Carpet Agencies Ltd. v. Inland Revenue Commissioners,[2] the relevant company carried on the trade of dealing in carpets until March 31, 1953. It then ceased to deal in carpets. At that time it held certain investments and other assets but had disposed of all its trading stock. The question which arose was whether after March 31, 1953, the company was still chargeable to the profits tax. It had ceased to carry on the trade of dealing in carpets and so had ceased to come within the terms of section 19 (2). Had it, however, brought itself within the terms of section 19 (4)? In the course of his judgment Harman J. referred, among other authorities, to the decision of Atkinson J. in Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Buxton Palace Hotel Ltd.[3] In that case Atkinson J. considered the construction of section 19 (4), in relation to a company the business of which had been carrying on an hotel, but that hotel had been requisitioned so that at the relevant time the company was merely in receipt of a compensation rent. Atkinson J. had to consider whether in those circumstances the company could be said to be a company the functions of which consisted wholly or mainly in holding investments or other property. Atkinson J. said,[4] "Now what is the meaning of the word 'functions'? "The dictionary definition (I think it is a very good one "for the purposes of this case) is: 'the activities appro- "'priate to any business'; so that it ought to read: 'Where "'the "activities appropriate to any business" . . . consist "'wholly or mainly in the holding of investments or other "'property.' So read, of course, it is plain that the words "would only apply to a company whose business could be so "described. The activities appropriate to this business of hotel "proprietors certainly did not consist wholly or mainly or at all "in the holding of investments or other property, but it is in "effect argued that the words should be read as equivalent to "'activities' simpliciter during the relevant period—what, in "fact, it is asked, during the relevant chargeable period were the "activities of the company? I do not accept that interpretation "of the word. I think that subsection (4) is aimed at companies "of a particular nature and quality, companies who set out to "make profit in the way indicated or who have changed their "business into one of that character."

Harman J. said that he entirely agreed with those observations and then he for himself said[5]: "It seems to me that in "order to get within section 19 (4) you must prove not merely "that the company is one that happens to hold some income- "bearing investments but that one of its functions, that is to say "one of its purposes, has always been or has been for a con- "siderable time the making of money by the holding of "investments." In a later case he somewhat modified that statement because he said that he did not think he was justified in saying that one had to find that it had always been or had been for a considerable time one of the purposes of the company. The question was whether at the relevant time it was one of the purposes of the company.

After that reference to the Buxton Palace Hotel case,[6] Harman J. went on thus[7]: "On the facts stated in this case, "which I need not repeat, the commissioners held that this was "not a company within section 19 (4) of the 1937 Act. With "that finding I find myself entirely in agreement. I am of the "opinion that the appellants never had but one business, the "business of carpet merchants. It is true it held some invest- "ments but those were wholly ancillary to its merchanting "business and were used in fact to finance that very business," and accordingly he reached the conclusion that on the true interpretation of section 19 (4) the company, Carpet Agencies Ltd., did not come with in the terms of that subsection.

The other case to which I must refer is Briggs (Henry) Son &

Co. Ltd. v. Inland Revenue Commissioners.[8] In this case the relevant company, Briggs Collieries Ltd., had owned coal mines and had engaged in the business of coal mining. As a result of the nationalisation of the coal industry those assets, that is to say, the mine and its coal mining business, had been compulsorily acquired and the company became entitled to receive compensation under the Coal Industry (Nationalisation) Act, 1946. On the nationalisation of its colliery interests the company considered various ways of employing its resources in different fields, but after 1948 it devoted itself to securing its compensation under the nationalisation provisions and ceased to seek for fresh business. Eventually it went into liquidation. The question there under consideration was whether during the period when the company was entitled to receive compensation but not carrying on any other kind of business it could be properly described as a company the functions of which consisted wholly or mainly in the holding of property.

Upjohn J., after referring to the passage from Atkinson J., which I have already read, reached this conclusion at the end of his judgment[9]: "A company whose business "is temporarily stopped by requisition does not satisfy that "test"—that is, Atkinson J.'s test—"nor does one which "has given up trading: see the cases I have mentioned. They "do not bind me, because in this field every case depends on "its own facts once the true meaning of the word 'functions' "has been determined; and in this case it is true to say that "Briggs never could re-enter into its colliery activities. Never- "theless, on ceasing to trade as a colliery company, a company "might do one of several things. It might decide to engage in "some other trading activity, in which case, in my judgment, it "would remain a trading company. It might decide to become "an investment trust company, in which case it seems to me "clear that it would engage in a new business of holding "property. If it does neither, but resolves to wind up, it does "not seem to me to gain any new character in the sense of "carrying on an activity of holding property as being appropriate "to its business. It really has no business. It seems to me it is "carrying out a residual function as a colliery company. It can "no longer trade as such; it can only receive its compensation "and die," and on those grounds he came to the conclusion that the company was not within section 19 (4).

I do not think that I need read any part of the judgment of the Court of Appeal. Once again Atkinson J.'s interpretation of the word "functions" is referred to without disapproval—indeed, with approval—and Upjohn J.'s decision was upheld. The case went to the House of Lords, and in the House of Lords Lord Reid said[10]: "The Court of Appeal and Upjohn J. reached that " result by giving to the word ' functions ' a meaning which " is, to my mind, narrower than its ordinary meaning. I " do not at all dissent from their view but I would prefer " to lay more stress on the word ' holding.' It appears " to me that, in this context, the phrase ' the holding of invest- " ' ments or other property ' does not mean simply the owning " of investments or other property. The word ' holding ' often " involves the idea of retention permanently or for an indefinite " time, and I think that that is involved in the use of that word in " the context. I have said that the apparent purpose of sub- " section (4) is to bring within the scope of the charge companies " conducting something at least analogous to a trade or business. " From that point of view, there appears to me to be an essential " distinction between companies, whose function or purpose or " objective is to make profit by continuing to hold their assets in " the form of investments or property, and companies, which " are not trying to make profitable use of their assets, but whose " whole activities are directed to realising their assets as soon " as possible. In the former case, the company's activities are " of a business character. They will almost always involve some " degree of active management. Circumstances may for a time " require the company to remain quiescent, but it still has the " purpose of deriving profit from continuing to hold its assets in " the form of investments or property. But in the latter case " the function or purpose or objective of the company is not to " continue to hold investments or property, but to cease holding " its assets in that form as soon as they can be turned into " money." On those grounds he agreed with the view which had been taken by the lower courts.

Lord Morris of Borth-y-Gest, at the end of his speech said [11]: " It is to be observed that the subsection "—that is, subsection (4) of section 19—" does not provide that the mere ownership by " a company of investments or other property brings about the " result that such ownership is to be deemed to be a business " carried on by the company. There is only such a deeming if " the ' functions ' of the company consist wholly or mainly in " the ' holding ' of investments or other property. The con- " junction of the words ' functions ' and ' holding ' suggest to my " mind something more than a mere ownership of some property, " and certainly something more than an enforced or involuntary " ownership of rights to receive compensation money, which " ownership it is hoped will be terminated at the earliest possible " moment by the receipt of the money. The company did not " set out to acquire or to own investments or property, and just " as there was nothing intentional or purposeful in its acquisition " of its rights to compensation, so there was no intention or wish " to continue to own such rights but, on the contrary, there " was an eager wish for an early settlement followed by a

Buckley J.

" dissolution. In those circumstances I cannot think that the " company was one of which it could aptly be said that its func- " tions consisted wholly or mainly in the holding of investments " or other property."

On those authorities Mr. Magnus for the Crown submits that on the true construction of section 19 (4) the word " functions " is synonymous with the words " purposes " or " objectives." Secondly, he submits that for a company to be within section 19 (4) it must be shown not merely that it holds investments or other property but also that its purpose is to continue to hold them in order to derive advantages therefrom. Thirdly, he says that it is impossible, as a matter of law, to attribute such a purpose to a company in liquidation, for on liquidation it ceases to become the beneficial owner of its assets, and the statutory duty of the liquidator is to realise those assets as soon as is convenient for the benefit of creditors and members of the company.

In that connection I was referred to the Companies Act, 1948, s. 281, which provides: " In case of a voluntary winding up, " the company shall, from the commencement of the winding up, " cease to carry on its business, except so far as may be required " for the beneficial winding up thereof." The commencement of the winding up in the case of a voluntary winding up is, of course, the date of the resolution.

On the other hand, Mr. Borneman, for the holding company, has drawn attention to the fact that in none of the cases to which I have referred was there any earlier history of the company being what I may call a " section 19 (4) " company. The question in those cases was, had the company in each case acquired the character of being a " section 19 (4) " company? He says that it is common ground that until the date of the winding up resolution the functions of the holding company were wholly or mainly the holding of investments or other property, and he says that there was no significant change in that state of affairs at the time of the resolution to wind up.

He has contended that the question what the functions of the company are is a question of fact, and he has submitted that the commissioners in paragraph 6 of the case stated have found the fact that the functions of the company continued to be the same before and after the resolution to wind up. That finding, I think, must be at least a finding of mixed fact and law, for the propriety of the finding must depend on the proper interpretation of section 19 (4) and the application of that section to the facts of this particular case.

In my judgment, it is not possible to say that this court is precluded from considering whether the special commissioners came to the right conclusion because they have framed that paragraph in the language that I have read.

Mr. Borneman submits that one must distinguish the functions of the liquidator relating to the realisation of the company's assets and the application of the proceeds of such realisation from the functions of the company, and he submits, as I say, that the functions of the company were unaffected by the resolution to wind up.

Now, although the cases to which I have referred are certainly distinguishable from the present case on the facts, it appears to me that the decision of the House of Lords in the Briggs case [12] provides the answer to the present problem; for, from the moment of the passing of the resolution to wind up, it was no longer the objective of the company to continue to hold investments for the purpose of obtaining a benefit by doing so. From that moment the objective of the company became the realisation of its assets as soon as they could advantageously be realised and the distribution of the proceeds amongst creditors and members in accordance with their rights in a winding up. To borrow the language of Lord Reid, the function or purpose or objective of the company ceased to be to continue to hold investments or property and became the realisation of those assets or turning them into money. No doubt, in order that the assets might be realised in an orderly and advantageous manner it was right and proper that there should have been some period of time before the assets were in fact realised, but the objective of the company, from December 12, 1957, onwards was not, in my judgment, that of holding investments: its objective was to realise its investments.

In that connection it is important to bear in mind, I think, what Atkinson J. said. It is not merely the activities of the company that are relevant but the activities appropriate to its business, that is to say, appropriate to its objective. As I read his judgment in the light of the later decision of the House of Lords, that is really what he means when he uses the words "activities "appropriate to any business." He emphasises that activities simpliciter are not the test; it is necessary to see what are the activities appropriate to a business set on a particular course. From December 12, 1957, onwards, the course on which the company here was set was the realisation of its assets. No doubt it is quite true that if the liquidator had found that it would be advantageous for the members of the company to sell their shares to purchasers who might have wished to have the liquidation stayed, that course might have been adopted. That course was considered, although that idea came to no fruition. But that was not one of the liquidator's duties. The duties were those provided by the Companies Act, 1948, that is to say, to realise the assets and to distribute the proceeds among the creditors and members in accordance with their rights.

For these reasons I think that the special commissioners took a mistaken view of the proper interpretation to be put on section 19 (4) and misdirected themselves in that respect. I think the conclusions at which they arrived were wrong and that the appeal in the holding company's case succeeds.

The appeal in the Spinners' case depends on the question whether or not Spinners remained grouped with the holding company for the purpose of the Finance Act, 1937. The relevant sections for this purpose are section 22 of the Act of 1937, which, by subsection (1), enables a company of which another company is subsidiary to give a grouping notice in respect of the chargeable accounting period in which the notice is given, and that notice continues during all subsequent chargeable accounting periods throughout which the subsidiary company remains a subsidiary of the principal company. By section 42 of the Finance Act, 1938, the term "subsidiary company" is defined. Subsection (1) provides: "For the purposes of . . . section 22 of the Finance Act, "1937, . . . a body corporate shall be deemed to be a subsidiary "of another body corporate if and so long as not less than three "quarters of its ordinary share capital is owned by that other body "corporate," and subsection (3) provides that "references to "ownership shall be construed as references to beneficial owner-"ship." So that the test is whether the parent company is the beneficial owner of not less than three-quarters of the ordinary share capital of the subsidiary company. It seems to me that in fact the grouping notice ceased to be operative on December 12, 1957, on two grounds. First, on the view that I have taken on the holding company's appeal, the last accounting period of the holding company ended on that date and, therefore, that company was after that date no longer a company to which the relevant sections were applicable, and the grouping notice would on that ground have then ceased to operate so that Spinners would be assessable in its own right in respect of profits earned after that date.

The grouping notice, I think, also falls to the ground for the reason that the holding company on going into liquidation ceased to be the beneficial owner of the shares in Spinners within the meaning of the section that I have just read. In this connection I refer to the decision of the Court of Appeal in In re Oriental Inland Steam Co. Ltd.[13]. In that case James L.J. said[14]: "The English Act of Parliament has enacted that in the case of a "winding up the assets of the company so wound up are to "be collected and applied in discharge of its libilities. That "makes the property of the company clearly trust property. It "is property affected by the Act of Parliament with an obligation "to be dealt with by the proper officer in a particular way. Then "it has ceased to be beneficially the property of the company; and "being so, it has ceased to be liable to be seized by the execution "creditors of the company." Mellish L.J. expressed a similar view. He said[15]: "But, in my opinion, the beneficial interest is " clearly taken out of the company." It has not been suggested to me that there has been any subsequent decision indicating that the views of the Lords Justices are not still good law, and it therefore appears to me to be established by the authority of that case that, on the winding up resolution being passed, the beneficial interest in the Spinners' shares held by the holding company ceased to reside in the holding company. Consequently Spinners ceased to be a subsidiary of the holding company within the meaning of these statutory provisions.

For these reasons I think that the appeal of the Crown in the Spinners' case also succeeds and that the assessment on Spinners should be restored.

Basic slag, a by-product of steel manufacture, assumed on cooling a solid clinker form and could be made available as a fertiliser by very fine grinding. Several steel companies incorporated B. Ltd. as a common marketing organisation for the sale of their fertilisers (which term hereinafter includes basic slag). Each company took shares in it, appointed one nominee director to its board, and entered into ten-year agreements with it regulating the terms on which they supplied it with fertilisers. From about 1945 the appellant and N were partners in a business. In 1958 a private company was formed to take the business over. The appellant and N were its first directors. Under the articles of association the company in general meeting had an express power to remove a director by ordinary resolution. Soon afterwards, N's son G was made a director; by virtue of their shareholdings N and G had a majority of the votes in general meeting. The company made good profits all of which were distributed as directors' remuneration. No dividends were ever paid. In 1969, after disagreement between the appellant and N and G, an ordinary resolution was passed by the company in general meeting by the votes of N and G removing the appellant as director. The appellant petitioned for an order under section 210 of the Companies Act 1948 that N and G should purchase his shares in the company or sell their shares to him on such terms as the court should think fit, alternatively for an order under section 222 (f) [1] that the company be wound up. At the hearing, an assurance was given in evidence that the practice of not paying dividends would not be continued. Plowman J. refused to make an order under section 210 but held that N and G had done the appellant a wrong in that it had been an abuse of power and a breach of the good faith which partners owed to each other to exclude one of them from all participation in the business on which they had embarked on the basis that all should participate in its management, and that, accordingly, the appellant had made out a case for a winding up order under section 222 (f). The Court of Appeal allowed an appeal by the respondents, holding that in the case of a quasi-partnership company the exercise by a majority in general meeting of the power under the articles or section 184 of the Act of 1948 to remove a director from office and consequently to exclude him

[1] Companies Act 1948, s. 222: "A company may be wound up by the court if—. . . (f) the court is of the opinion that it is just and equitable that the company should be wound up."

from participation in the management and conduct of the business did not form a ground for holding that it was just and equitable that the company should be wound up unless it was shown that the power had not been exercised bona fide in the interests of the company or that the grounds for exercising the power were such that no reasonable man could think that the removal was in the interest of the company, and that, on the facts, the appellant had failed to show that his removal had not been justified and in the best interests of the company or that no man could have thought so.

On appeal by the appellant:—

Held, allowing the appeal, that a limited company was more than a mere legal entity and the rights, expectations and obligations of the individuals behind it inter se were not necessarily merged in its structure (post, p. 379B–C); that, while the "just and equitable" provision did not entitle a party to disregard the obligation which he assumed by entering a company, it enabled the court to subject the exercise of legal rights to equitable considerations of a personal character arising between individuals which might make it inequitable to insist on legal rights or to exercise them in a particular way (post, pp. 379D, 386H—387A); that, in the present case, the appellant and N had joined in the formation of the company on the basis that the character of the association, viz., inter alia, that the appellant was entitled to participate in the management, would, as a matter of personal relation and good faith, remain the same; and that, N having in effect repudiated that relationship and the appellant having lost his right to a share in the profits and being in that respect at the mercy of N and G and being unable to dispose of his interest without their consent, the proper course was to dissolve the association by winding up the company (post, pp. 380G, 381C–F, 386E—387A).

Per curiam. (1) It is wrong to create categories or headings under which cases must be brought if the "just and equitable" clause is to apply (post, p. 374H).

(2) Where the petitioner is a shareholder, the words are not confined to such circumstances as affect him in his capacity as such (post, pp. 375A–B, 385H—386A).

(3) Elements which give rise to the superimposition of equitable considerations may include one, or probably more, of the following: (i) an association formed or continued on the basis of a personal relationship involving mutual confidence; (ii) an agreement, or understanding, that all, or some, of the shareholders, shall participate in the conduct of the business; (iii) restriction on the transfer of the members' interest in the company. The fact that the company is a small one, or a private company, is not enough (post, p. 379E–G).

(4) The expressions "quasi-partnership" or "in substance partnership" may be confusing, for a company, however small, however domestic, is a company, not a partnership or even a quasi-partnership, and the members of it have accepted new obligations (post, pp. 379H—380B).

(5) The formula "bona fide in the interests of the company" should not become little more than an alibi for a refusal to consider the merits of the case; in a situation such as the present it seems to mean little more than "in the interests of the majority." To confine the application of the "just and equitable" clause to proved cases of mala fides would be to negative the generality of the words (post, pp. 381F–H, 386C–D).

Per Lord Cross of Chelsea. A petitioner who relies on the "just and equitable" clause must come to court with clean hands (post, p. 387G).

APPEAL from the Court of Appeal.

This was an appeal by Shokrollah Ebrahimi by leave of the Court of Appeal (Russell, Megaw and Buckley L.JJ.) from their decision on December 16, 1970, by which they allowed an appeal by the respondents, Westbourne Galleries Ltd. ("the company") and Asher Nazar Achoury ("Nazar") and George Alexander Nazar Achoury ("George Nazar"), directors of the company, from an order of Plowman J. on July 14, 1970 [1970] 1 W.L.R. 1378 by which, on a petition by the appellant, he wound up the respondent company.

By his petition, the appellant sought an order that Nazar and George Nazar should purchase his shares in the company, alternatively sell their shares in the company to him, on such terms as the court should think fit, alternatively that the company be wound up. Plowman J. refused to order a purchase of the appellant's shares but made an order winding up the company under section 222 (f) of the Companies Act 1948.

The Court of Appeal allowed an appeal by the respondents against that order.

The appellant appealed.

The facts are stated in the opinions of Lord Wilberforce and Lord Cross of Chelsea; further facts may be found in the judgments of Plowman J., at pp. 1380–1383, 1389–1390, and the Court of Appeal.

Raymond Walton Q.C. and Hedley Marten for the appellant. This appeal raises for the first time in this House the question of an incorporated partnership: does one apply the partnership rule or the strict company rule of majority? It is now established that the power of the court under section 222 (f) of the Companies Act 1948 is not in any way limited by the other paragraphs of the section.

The appellant submits: (1) In a partnership the utmost good faith is required from all the partners, particularly where the other partners have the right to expel a partner from the business. They may only do so after giving him the fullest notice of the charges against him and an opportunity to refute them. If it is a question of his conduct of which they are complaining, they must give him an opportunity of mending his ways. In the present case, no reasons were given for the appellant's removal. The Court of Appeal [1971] 1 Ch. 799, 810–812 said that there was nothing to back up Plowman J.'s finding of fact that there was no sufficient justification for his removal and that the onus of showing that the other partners had not behaved properly was on the person complaining of their acts. That was a wrong attribution of the onus. An " incorporated partnership " is still suffused with the duty of utmost good faith. (2) Exclusion from participation in the conduct of the business of the partnership is always a most serious breach of the partnership obligations. (3) Where the partners have used the machinery of the Companies Act for the conduct of their business organisation the same rules and duties apply as if the business had remained a partnership, so that even though under the general law and the construction of any power conferred to remove minority shareholders from participation in the firm that power may only be exercised bona fide. (4) To remove a working partner or a director from his directorship in a case such as the present, which means in practice to exclude him from participation in the bulk of the profits of the company, is a serious breach of the partnership obligations unless there is justification for such removal. (5) Plowman J. has rightly found as a fact that there was no sufficient justification. A winding up could hardly be inequitable where, if the company were a partnership, it would be wound up.

It is easy to recognise a partnership company when one sees it but difficult to formulate a test. The nub is: is it really a working partnership in the guise of a company? Alternatively, its essential character may be said to be that of a small company in which there is a relationship between the shareholders and the working directors, the basis being remuneration for work rather than investment. The company here has never paid a dividend, all the profits being paid out by way of salary. There is no factual dispute except, as a matter of emphasis, as to how far the appellant was ever really recognised as a partner.

If the House finds that this was a working partnership in the guise of a company it would be unduly restricted by matters of form if it did not take the view that the partnership rule of good faith applied. There is no suggestion that the Companies Act does not apply, but the whole of the obligations of everybody in the company is suffused by the obligations of that rule.

It is always a serious breach of partnership duties to exclude a partner from the management of the firm: see Lindley on Partnership, 13th ed. (1971), p. 331, supported by Goodman v. Whitcomb (1820) 1 J. & W. 589; Rowe v. Wood (1822) 2 J. & W. 553; and Const v. Harris (1824) Tur. & Rus. 496. Even a wholly unrestricted power of expulsion in a partnership agreement must be used fairly: see Blisset v. Daniel (1853) 10 Hare 493. The principle there was approved in, inter alia, Wood v. Woad (1874) L.R. 9 Ex. 190. If one starts with uberrimae fidei, natural justice is not far away.

Coming to the partnership company cases, Lord Dunedin in Symington v. Symington's Quarries Ltd. (1905) 8 F. 121, 129 enunciated the true and correct principle. It might have been possible to decide In re Yenidje Tobacco Co. Ltd. [1916] 2 Ch. 426 on the narrow ground that there was complete deadlock, but Lord Cozens-Hardy M.R. went out of his way to say that whether that was so or not the circumstances were such that the court should apply partnership law. Pickford L.J. agreed; Warrington L.J. perhaps took a narrower view, but he recognised clearly the application of the partnership concept. In re Yenidje Tobacco Co. Ltd. was approved by the Privy Council in Loch v. John Blackwood Ltd. [1924] A.C. 783, not

A strictly a partnership case. See, in particular, per Lord Skerrington in Thomson v. Drysdale, 1925 S.C. 311, 316, who uses the word "suffused" with the obligation of good faith, saying that the partner in question must avoid acting in such a way as to make it impossible for the other shareholder to co-operate with him. That can only be read into the Companies Act from the partnership aspect of the matter. The words of Simonds J. in In re Cuthbert Cooper & Sons Ltd. [1937] Ch. 392, 398 were in relation to
B the facts of the particular case, where the younger sons were not members of the company and therefore not within the partnership concept; even so, on the facts, the case has not commanded universal approbation: see per Danckwerts L.J. in In re Swaledale Cleaners Ltd. [1968] 1 W.L.R. 1710, 1716 and In re Lundie Brothers Ltd. [1965] 1 W.L.R. 1051.

With regard to what the Court of Appeal say in their judgment [1971]
C Ch. 799, 808B, it is difficult to think that ordinary partners converting their business into a limited company would be so suspicious of each other that they would provide for something so far from the thoughts of any of them as that one would seek to exclude the other from the management of the company. The vast majority of companies are incorporated without reference to a solicitor.

The appellant in the Court of Appeal was not really going as far as he D is represented in the judgment [1971] Ch. 797, 810B as having submitted. What he intended to say throughout was that there were really two things: (1) the excluding partner must have reasonable grounds for exclusion; (2) his action must be bona fide, which is easy to establish if there are reasonable grounds. Continual complaints might in certain circumstances be a reason for exclusion, but there would have to be something more than that the E business would get on better without the partner in question.

As to onus, one starts with Blisset v. Daniel, 10 Hare 493; see at p. 522, which puts it in the right place, as does also Witt v. Corcoran (1872) 21 W.R. 47; see also In re Lundie Brothers Ltd. [1965] 1 W.L.R. 1051, 1057. In In re Expanded Plugs Ltd. [1966] 1 W.L.R. 514, which was not a case of an attempt to exclude a partner from taking part in the business of the company but the contrary, Plowman J. said no more than that one must F bring oneself, in either case, within the just and equitable principle.

The evidence shows that neither Nazar nor George Nazar thought of their relationship with the appellant in the partnership context at all but regarded him as a mere employee. Their actions followed naturally from their view of him as an employee, but were not bona fide in the context of good faith as partners.

G As to the propositions discussed by the Court of Appeal [1971] Ch. 799, 810–812, the test whether an action is bona fide in the interests of a company as a whole was evolved with regard to special resolutions to change articles: see Buckley on the Companies Acts, 13th ed. (1957), pp. 38–39. It does not mean in the interests of the company as distinct from the corporators, but in the interests of the corporators considered as a body.
H The test comes in for the purpose of dealing with the general principles of law and equity dealing with the limitation of the powers of all majorities. It is a pure company law test, not applicable to relationships between partners who owe each other the utmost good faith. The language of the Court of Appeal at [1971] Ch. 799, 811F, comes perilously close to requiring fraud.

No doubt the same consequences as those for which the appellant contends for here in the case of a partnership company should apply in the case of a similar company where there was not actually a partnership before. One tests the partnership nature of a company by looking at the current circumstances of the company, and the previous history is irrelevant.

A. J. Balcombe Q.C. and William Stubbs for the respondents. The appellant is tied by his allegations in his petition. In this appeal he has gone beyond the facts found by Plowman J., and he is not entitled to do this. The respondents do not seek to do so.

A misapprehension underlies the appellant's approach to this appeal. There is a division between the owners of a company and the people who work in it. There is no such division in a partnership.

The respondents submit: (1) No shareholder in a company can get a winding up order unless his position as a shareholder is affected. (2) There are no special rules applicable to "quasi-partnership" companies (this point was not open to the respondents in the Court of Appeal). (3) Whether or not there is such a thing as a "quasi-partnership company," the removal of a director by itself never justifies a just and equitable winding up. "By itself" includes those consequences which necessarily flow, including the fact that the director no longer gets director's fees. (4) In any event, a person in the position of the appellant in this case must both allege and prove lack of bona fides. (5) The court will not substitute its own judgment for that of the shareholders of the company unless no reasonable man could have formed the view which the shareholders formed.

As to (1), see those classes of persons who are entitled to petition for a winding up order: Companies Act 1948, s. 224. It is notorious by its absence that a director has no such right. A contributory is only entitled to petition in right of his position as a contributory, and only if his position as a contributory is affected: see the proviso (a) to section 224 (1); In re Expanded Plugs Ltd. [1966] 1 W.L.R. 514 and Elder v. Elder & Watson, 1952 S.C. 49, parallel decisions under section 210. This is also the basis of the rule that a fully paid up shareholder petitioning for a winding up must allege and prove that there is a surplus of assets available. [Reference was made to In re Rica Gold Washing Co. (1879) 11 Ch.D. 36; In re Othery Construction Ltd. [1966] 1 W.L.R. 69; and In re Lundie Brothers Ltd. [1965] 1 W.L.R. 1051.]

As to (2), there is nothing in the Act of 1948 which talks about there being two types of company. This is odd, since the Registrar-General's figures show that there are some 519,000 private companies and only some 15,000 public companies; the great majority of companies would thus inferentially fall under the quasi-partnership head. When normal adult people choose to associate themselves together under one of the heads of company or partnership they do so with their eyes open. There are advantages and disadvantages either way. [Reference was made to the Partnership Act 1890, ss. 24 (5) and 25.] It is not right to say that there is some sort of association halfway between the two to which the rules of partnership as opposed to company law are applicable. One can on the just and equitable ground take into account the domestic nature of a small company, but one cannot apply the law of partnership. This would be an unwarranted gloss on the Companies Act. One should simply look at the Companies Act and ask whether, in all the circumstances, it is just and equitable to wind the company up.

In re Yenidje Tobacco Co. Ltd. [1916] Ch. 426 was a case of deadlock and it would in any case have been just and equitable to wind up the company there. In the present case, difficulties of cooperation and so on can be solved simply by getting rid of the director involved. It is conceded that a lack of probity is always regarded as a ground for winding up.

The very difficulty in deciding what is a quasi-partnership supports the view that no such animal exists. One should consider the difficulty which Brightman J. found in In re Leadenhall General Hardware Stores Ltd. (unreported), February 4, 1971, of finding a suitable test for determining what was a quasi-partnership. One should have a reasonably certain test. The test which Brightman J. applied of whether the directors were working directors would produce astonishing results. Often there are sleeping partners in companies which would otherwise be partnership companies.

Although all the cases cited by the appellant refer to quasi-partnership principles, they can all be justified on the just and equitable principle without reference to partnership at all. Symington v. Symington's Quarries Ltd., 8 F. 121 was decided on the just and equitable principle, alternatively the deadlock principle. Loch v. John Blackwood Ltd. [1924] A.C. 783 was a case of lack of probity. So was Thomson v. Drysdale, 1925 S.C. 311, decided under the Loch v. John Blackwood principle: see especially at p. 324, where reference is made to the fact that the partners go into a company knowing that there is power under the Companies Acts to remove directors. In In re Cuthbert Cooper & Sons Ltd. [1937] Ch. 392 no order was made and the petition was dismissed, so no great reliance can be placed on the case. The appellant says that In re Cuthbert Cooper & Sons Ltd. did not have the approval of Danckwerts L.J. in In re Swaledale Cleaners Ltd. [1968] 1 W.L.R. 1710, but see Charles Forte Investments Ltd. v. Amanda [1964] Ch. 240 where the Court of Appeal of which he was a member expressly followed it: Danckwerts L.J. must have forgotten that. The decision of Plowman J. in In re Lundie Brothers Ltd. [1965] 1 W.L.R. 1051 was wrong. He does not seem to have appreciated the problem, and seems to have assumed that a winding up order could be made under section 222 even where the director was not affected in his position qua shareholder. It is wrong to assume that because the appellant was removed as a director of the company he will also be prejudiced as a shareholder by not receiving dividend.

As to (3), a gloss should not be put on section 184 of the Act of 1948. In the vast majority of cases this section would not be taken literally at all. It would have been easy for Parliament to say that section 184 should not apply to exempt private companies (introduced by the Act of 1947, s. 54) if it had wanted to do that; the fact that it did not indicates that section 184 was intended to be of universal application.

On points (2) and (3), a further essential difference between a partnership and a company is that the proprietary interest in a company is transmis-sible. A partnership is characterised by the fact that it is dissolved by the death or bankruptcy of any of the partners. This highlights the essential difference between a company and a partnership: that in a company the ownership and the management are separate.

If the members of a company join together in the context of the constitution of the company to remove a director under section 184 it is prima facie neither unfair nor inequitable that the power is exercised. If it got as far as being simply a desire to ruin the director in question one might get into the field where one would commit a legal wrong by deliberately harming him.

Further on (3), see Bushell v. Faith [1970] A.C. 1099, per Lord Upjohn, at p. 1108E. The converse question may be posed: is there an obligation. when a director retires by rotation according to the articles, to re-elect him? See Lindley on Partnership, at p. 331: an agreement not to continue him as director is perfectly competent within partnership law. See also In re Cuthbert Cooper & Sons Ltd. [1937] Ch. 392, 398: the bargain in the present case was that there should be the right to remove a director; see also In re Expanded Plugs Ltd. [1966] 1 W.L.R. 514, per Plowman J., at p. 522D. A shareholder can vote his shares as he wishes: North-West Transportation Co. Ltd. v. Beatty (1887) 12 App.Cas. 589 and Burland v. Earle [1902] A.C. 83; his motive is irrelevant unless it amounts to fraud or oppression, etc. Where, therefore, partners enter into an association on the basis of articles, the question of bona fides becomes irrelevant. Lewis v. Haas, 1970 S.L.T. (Notes) 67 stresses the point about association on the terms of the articles and also refers to the refusal to reappoint a director when he retires by rotation. [Reference was made to Elder v. Elder & Watson, 1952 S.C. 49.]

As to (4), see Wood v. Woad, L.R. 9 Ex. 190 and In re Cuthbert Cooper & Sons Ltd. [1937] Ch. 392. The point that, if it was not exercised in good faith, the removal might have been invalid has not been taken before. It was not taken in the petition, so it is neither alleged nor proved, and it must be proved, the onus being on the appellant. The right test is found in In re Expanded Plugs Ltd. [1966] 1 W.L.R. 514. Plowman J.'s finding of fact in the present case [1970] 1 W.L.R. 1378, 1389F, cannot be interfered with: see also the judgment of the Court of Appeal [1971] Ch. 799, 811G. In Blisset v. Daniel, 10 Hare 493 Page Wood V.-C. was not directing himself to the onus of proof. In Witt v. Corcoran, 21 W.R. 47 Bacon V.-C. was considering the case as if the defendant had to establish something; he was looking at it the wrong way round. Again, that was a partnership case and again the court was not being asked to deal with the question of onus of proof: see at p. 50. In In re Cuthbert Cooper & Sons Ltd. [1937] Ch. 392, Wood v. Woad, L.R. 9 Ex. 190 and In re Expanded Plugs Ltd. [1966] 1 W.L.R. 514 onus was in issue.

On (5), see Shuttleworth v. Cox Brothers & Co. (Maidenhead) Ltd. [1927] 2 K.B. 9, followed by the Court of Appeal in Greenhalgh v. Arderne Cinemas Ltd. [1951] Ch. 286 (not cited). The mere fact that there is a difference of opinion as to whether the removal is for the benefit of the company is not a ground for a just and equitable winding up. In In re Yenidje Tobacco Co. Ltd. [1916] Ch. 426 the machinery of the company provided no way out of the deadlock; that distinguishes that case from the present. See also In re Langham Skating Rink Co. (1877) 5 Ch.D. 669 and In re Furriers' Alliance (1906) 51 S.J. 172.

This has been extremely expensive litigation. No dividend has been declared by the company for some years, and the company itself may have to pay a considerable sum by way of costs. The House might think that a good reason for not paying any dividend.

Stubbs following. The words of section 222 (f) are ex facie unlimited in scope. There are five considerations which should be borne in mind in construing it. (1) The court's jurisdiction under section 222 (f) has always been cautiously applied when invoked at the instance of a shareholder. (2) Particularly in view of the historical context in which section 184 of the Act was enacted it is inconceivable, reading section 184 in conjunction with section 222 (f), that the intention of the legislature can have been that a company like that in the present case should be wound up as a result of the exercise of the statutory power under section 184. (3) It is an accepted principle of our law that pacta sunt servanda, and when one is construing even words as wide as " just and equitable " that principle should be borne in mind; it would follow that, certainly in the absence of bad faith, the majority of the shareholders should not be punished for carrying out a power which, as well as being in the Act, is part of the express contract between the parties. (4) It is a basic principle of company law that where a general meeting acts in good faith the shareholder does not have any cause of action consequent upon that. (5) If this appeal should succeed the result on the commercial community will not merely be something which the legislature never intended but will have effects which will be disastrous.

As to (1), see Buckley on the Companies Acts, 13th ed., p. 454. The courts initially held that they should apply the ejusdem generis rule to 222. This is no longer the law; nevertheless, at the instance of the shareholder the jurisdiction has in practice been exercised under specific heads. The present case does not fall under any specific head.

As to (2), see the arguments for counsel for the respondent in Bushell v. Faith [1970] A.C. 1099, 1103, in substance accepted by Lord Upjohn, at p. 1108E. The loss of income suffered by a director removed from office is expressly provided for by section 184 (6). If the director wishes to protect himself against loss of income on removal from office, he will insist on a service agreement which gives him security of tenure. In such a case nothing in section 184 will take away the right to damages which he will have on removal from office.

As to (3), in the absence of agreement to the contrary the tenure of a director's office is determined by reference to the company's articles of association. The director may resign merely by giving notice in writing to the company, and in such event neither the company nor the other directors will have any legal ground for complaint. This is inconsistent with any suggestion that there is any breach of faith or duty or that it is unjust or inequitable if a director is removed under section 184 or not re-elected.

As to (4) this applies whether the company be small or large. There is no reported case to the contrary. The principle binds together many of the authorities cited, e.g., Shuttleworth v. Cox Brothers & Co. (Maiden- head) Ltd. [1927] 2 K.B. 9 and North-West Transportation Co. Ltd. v. Beatty, 12 App.Cas. 589. The judgment of the Court of Appeal in the present case is in accordance with that long-standing principle and body of authority.

As to (5), this company is not particularly untypical. There are many thousands of small, three-, four-, five-men companies where the shareholders also constitute the board. It is a frequent occurrence in such companies that members of the board fall out. There may well be faults not only on one side, as Plowman J. said in the present case, but if the majority shareholders are not entitled to restore harmony to the board without raising the spectre of litigation this will have the most extraordinary result. Each time a director is removed or not re-elected there will be a winding up, or, at the very least, depending on how the House frames its opinions in the present case, every removal from office would be reviewed by the Companies Court in the context of a winding up petition. That would not only be contrary to the principle that the courts will not interfere with the bona fide decisions of business men but will be positively disastrous to many thousands of small companies. [Reference was made to In re Leadenhall General Hardware Stores Ltd. (unreported).]

Walton Q.C. in reply. That the appellant made life impossible for the second and third respondents is not what Plowman J. found: see especially [1970] 1 W.L.R. 1378, 1381B–D.

As to the respondents' submission (1), this does not mean that so long as the appellant holds shares in the company he cannot get a winding up order. The court must in all these matters be entitled to look at all the circumstances. It cannot do that against the settled pattern of distribution of the profits of the company and say that this is irrelevant. The respondents submitted that there were a large number of cases where it was decided that there should be no winding up where there was insolvency on the part of the shareholder. The answer to that is simply that it would be a pointless exercise. Of course, this contrasts with partnership, where there has to be a winding up because the partners are personally liable.

The parallel which the respondents sought to draw with section 210, where undoubtedly only the shareholder can petition, is not exact or proper because the language of section 210 is different: see per Lord Keith in Elder v. Elder & Watson, 1952 S.C. 49, 58–59. Under section 210 the shareholder is petitioning qua shareholder; under section 222 the petition is on a wider basis.

As to the respondents' submission (2), the distinction between owners and managers which does not occur in the case of a partnership is interesting and provides a clue to the nature of the "quasi-partnership company." It is the test which should be applied and is what Warrington L.J. meant in In re Yenidje Tobacco Co. Ltd. [1916] 2 Ch. 426. The appellant is not suggesting that any special principles are applicable to quasi-partnership companies, but when considering what is just and equitable in the context of a small domestic company the owners and managers of which are the same persons the court can find in the partnership concept a much better guide than that provided by the articles.

As the company in In re Cuthbert Cooper & Sons Ltd. [1937] Ch.

392 was a private company there had to be restrictions on transfers—one of the essential conditions of private companies—and on new members being allowed in. The court could not simply rely on the fact that new members were not allowed in for making a winding up order. The appellant only cited In re Swaledale Cleaners Ltd. [1968] 1 W.L.R. 1710 to show that In re Cuthbert Cooper & Sons Ltd. had not escaped without criticism; they were not saying that it had been overruled.

As to the respondents' submission (3), equally part of the contract was that there should be the power under section 122 (f) to wind the company up if it became just and equitable to do so. So far as voluntary resignation is concerned, shareholders are entitled to cast their votes as they think fit, but the court can look and see whether what they have done is not just and equitable so that a winding up order should be made. No doubt a director can resign, but if he does so it may be in circumstances which it would be just and equitable to have the company wound up. He could not successfully oppose the winding up of the company if his resignation resulted virtually in the repudiation of his obligation; he might, of course, want to resign as director but be prepared to continue his work. As to rotation, if nothing is done a director is automatically re-elected. There is therefore no onus on the other shareholders to do anything except refrain from opposing the re-election. As to Bushell v. Faith [1970] A.C. 1099 and the background to section 184 of the Act of 1948, a typical case to which section 184 was directed was the case where the director had little or no real interest in the company. It was that that was thought to be an injustice.

In re Expanded Plugs Ltd. [1966] 1 W.L.R. 514 was a very special case. It was not a case of expulsion. All the acts were for the benefit of the company. The case does not, however, get one very far at all: all that Plowman J. said has to be read against the background of the case: that there was no expulsion or serious breach of partnership obligation.

The appellant does not challenge such cases as North-West Transportation Co. Ltd. v. Beatty, 12 App.Cas. 589 or Burland v. Earle [1902] A.C. 83: they go not to the validity of the shareholder exercising his votes but to the consequences in law of the exercise; not to the validity of the resolution but to its consequences. The maxim is not that a person is presumed to know the law but that ignorance of the law is no excuse. Lewis v. Haas, 1970 S.L.T. (Notes) 67 is distinguishable in that there was there no question of expulsion.

As to the respondents' submission (4), a person must be presumed to intend the consequences of his own acts, and in the present case Nazar must be presumed to have intended the consequences of his acts in excluding the appellant from any share in the conduct of the business or taking an effective share in its profits. There is no doubt at all that the Nazars were determined to get the appellant out of the company. There was no good reason for removing him apart from that. What the Court of Appeal say [1971] Ch. 799, 811G is based on the test of what no reasonable man could have considered. It is important to note Plowman J.'s finding [1970] 1 W.L.R. 1378, 1389 that "the faults were not all on one side." If the faults had all been on the appellant's side he could not have obtained a winding up order. There is no difference here between the interests of the company and the interests of the remaining shareholders. It is difficult really to see what bona fide in the interests of the company means in this context.

One must see what the findings of fact of Brightman J. in In re Leadenhall General Hardware Stores Ltd. (unreported) were to see the basis on which he was proceeding, right or wrong. He said that it was not a case where he ought to apply the quasi-partnership concept, so the case is not of great force. The appellant accepts, however, that one does not know from the transcript of the judgment without going into the evidence what was behind Brightman J.'s statement that the petitioner was appointed as manager. There, there was no previous partnership.

What the appellant had to allege and prove here were facts rendering the making of a winding up order just and equitable. He has done this by pointing to acts done to him and the serious financial consequences, those acts being done in the context of a small domestic company in which he and Nazar were working in equal partnership within the framework of a company. The suggestion that he must allege and prove lack of bona fides is misplaced. He must allege and prove the facts on which he relies. "Bona fide in the interests of the company," in relation to special resolutions, has a meaning in the context of a large company, but not in a case such as the present where "the company" for practical purposes means "the majority." The gravamen of the appellant's charge is the damage done to him. [Reference was made to In re Lundie Brothers Ltd. [1965] 1 W.L.R. 1051.] A variety of views were expressed in Wood v. Woad, L.R. 9 Ex. 190, but at least two judges thought that it was sufficient for the plaintiff to plead the facts on which he relied.

The respondents said that the Court of Appeal put a correct gloss on the facts here when they said [1971] Ch. 799, 811G that it could not be said that no reasonable men could have considered the appellant's removal justified. That cannot conceivably be the test, because: (a) it has always been put forward as the test for the validity of a special resolution: see Shuttleworth v. Cox Brothers & Co. (Maidenhead) Ltd. [1927] 2 K.B. 9. That being so, naturally the test is a very stringent one because the question is whether the resolution has been properly passed. The test is in no way directed to the consequences of the special resolution, and a petition based on the just and equitable principle is put forward on the basis of the consequences of what happens when the resolution is passed. It is not seen through the eyes of reasonable men, but from the point of view of the person affected. (b) The test ignores the question of where the blame lies. The Court of Appeal makes no differentiation on this question. The just and equitable test must make allowance for it. (c) The true test must depend on all the circumstances of the case, including the pacta sunt servanda principle and conduct of the parties generally.

As to the respondents' submission (5), that principle being directed to the validity of a special resolution, the court does not, indeed, substitute its own judgment. What the respondents are really trying to do under the guise of it is to do the reverse: to substitute the judgment of Nazar and George Nazar as to whether the appellant should be removed for the judgment of the court as to whether it is just and equitable to wind up the company. The cases cited do not carry the matter any further. In In re Langham Skating Rink Co., 5 Ch.D. 669 where the shareholders were apprehending insolvency—a different case from the present—all that the Court of Appeal decided was that the minority were not entitled to opt out. The basis of the petition in In re Furriers' Alliance, 51 S.J. 172 was absolute deadlock.

As to junior counsel's submission (1), the jurisdiction will be exercised whenever the court finds it just and equitable to do so. In Symington v. Symington's Quarries Ltd., 8 F. 121 a winding up order was made.

As to (2), this is pure assertion without any logic to support it.

As to (3), all that pacta sunt servanda means is that if a person goes blindly into a private company the less the court safeguards him. It must be read in the light of section 222, which provides a longstop. Section 184 (6) covers the case where one has a service contract as managing director and so the service comes to an end before the end of the period for which it was initially fixed. That does not give the appellant here—who had no service contract—any rights at all.

As to (4), this was a wide proposition. Shuttleworth v. Cox Brothers & Co. (Maidenhead) Ltd. [1927] 2 K.B. 9 simply laid down a test with regard to the validity of a special resolution, and North-West Transportation Co. Ltd. v. Beatty, 12 App.Cas. 589 merely said that in ordinary circumstances if a contract which a director was seeking to foist on the company was fair then a resolution might be passed by the majority ratifying it.

As to (5), the proof of the pudding is in the eating. In re Lundie Brothers Ltd. [1965] 1 W.L.R. 1051 was decided in 1965. It was the first case in which the simple exclusion of a director as a working partner was held sufficient to justify a winding up. It stood until the present case. There was no flood of cases. Normally one side buys the other out at a fair price—a desirable practice which ought to be encouraged.

A winding up order can, if necessary, be stayed.

Balcombe Q.C. If the House were to consider reaching a decision of fact other than that found by Plowman J. it should first read the whole of the affidavits and the transcript of evidence. With regard to the suggestion that the appellant should be bought out, in practice such negotiations are common, and they took place here.

Their Lordships took time for consideration.

May 3. LORD WILBERFORCE. My Lords, the issue in this appeal is whether the respondent company Westbourne Galleries Ltd. should be wound up by the court on the petition of the appellant who is one of the three shareholders, the personal respondents being the other two. The company is a private company which carries on business as dealers in Persian and other carpets. It was formed in 1958 to take over a business founded by the second respondent (Mr. Nazar). It is a fact of cardinal importance that since about 1945 the business had been carried on by the appellant and Mr. Nazar as partners, equally sharing the management and the profits. When the company was formed, the signatories to its memorandum were the appellant and Mr. Nazar and they were appointed its first directors. Of its issued share capital, 500 shares of £1 each were issued to each subscriber and it was found by the learned judge, after the point had been contested by Mr. Nazar, that Mr. Ebrahimi paid up his shares out of his own money. Soon after the company's formation the third respondent (Mr. George Nazar) was made a director, and each of the two original shareholders transferred to him 100 shares, so that at all material times Mr. Ebrahimi held 400 shares, Mr. Nazar 400 and Mr. George Nazar 200. The Nazars, father and son, thus had a majority of the votes in general meeting. Until the dispute all three gentlemen remained directors.

The company made good profits, all of which were distributed as directors' remuneration. No dividends have ever been paid, before or after the petition was presented.

On August 12, 1969, an ordinary resolution was passed by the company in general meeting, by the votes of Mr. Nazar and Mr. George Nazar, removing Mr. Ebrahimi from the office of director, a resolution which was effective in law by virtue of section 184 of the Companies Act 1948 and article 96 of Part I of Table A. Shortly afterwards the appellant presented his petition to the court.

This petition was based in the first place upon section 210 of the Companies Act 1948, the relief sought under this section being an order that Mr. Nazar and his son be ordered to purchase the appellant's shares in the company. In the alternative it sought an order for the winding up of the company. The petition contained allegations of oppression and misconduct against Mr. Nazar which were fully explored at the hearing before Plowman J. [1970] 1 W.L.R. 1378. The learned judge found that some were unfounded and others unproved and that such complaint as was made out did not amount to such a course of oppressive conduct as to justify an order under section 210. However, he made an order for the winding up of the company under the " just and equitable " provision. I shall later specify the grounds on which he did so. The appellant did not appeal against the rejection of his case under section 210 and this House is not concerned with it. The company and the individual respondents appealed against the order for winding up and this was set aside by the Court of Appeal. The appellant now seeks to have it restored.

My Lords, the petition was brought under section 222 (f) of the Companies Act 1948, which enables a winding up order to be made if " the court is of the opinion that it is just and equitable that the company should be wound up." This power has existed in our company law in unaltered form since the first major Act, the Companies Act 1862. Indeed, it antedates that statute since it existed in the Joint Stock Companies Winding up Act 1848. For some 50 years, following a pronouncement by Lord Cottenham L.C. [Ex parte Spackman (1849) 1 Mac. & G. 170, 174] in 1849, the words " just and equitable " were interpreted so as only to include matters ejusdem generis as the preceding clauses of the section, but there is now ample authority for discarding this limitation. There are two other restrictive interpretations which I mention to reject. First, there has been a tendency to create categories or headings under which cases must be brought if the clause is to apply. This is wrong. Illustrations may be used, but general words should remain general and not be reduced to the sum of particular instances. Secondly, it has been suggested, and urged upon us, that (assuming the petitioner is a shareholder and not a creditor) the words must be confined to such circumstances as affect him in his capacity as shareholder. I see no warrant for this either. No doubt, in order to present a petition, he must qualify as a shareholder, but I see no reason for preventing him from relying upon any circumstances of justice or equity which affect him in his relations with the company, or, in a case such as the present, with the other shareholders.

One other signpost is significant. The same words " just and equitable " appear in the Partnership Act 1892, section 25, as a ground for dissolution of a partnership and no doubt the considerations which they reflect formed part of the common law of partnership before its codification. The importance of this is to provide a bridge between cases under section 222 (f) of the Act of 1948 and the principles of equity developed in relation to partnerships.

The winding up order was made following a doctrine which has developed in the courts since the beginning of this century. As presented by the appellant, and in substance accepted by the learned judge, this was that in a case such as this the members of the company are in substance partners, or quasi-partners, and that a winding up may be ordered if such facts are shown as could justify a dissolution of partnership between them. The common use of the words " just and equitable " in the company and partnership law supports this approach. Your Lordships were invited by the respondents' counsel to restate the principle on which this provision ought to be used; it has not previously been considered by this House. The main line of his submission was to suggest that too great a use of the partnership analogy had been made; that a limited company, however small, essentially differs from a partnership; that in the case of a company, the rights of its members are governed by the articles of association which have contractual force; that the court has no power or at least ought not to dispense parties from observing their contracts; that, in particular, when one member has been excluded from the directorate, or management, under powers expressly conferred by the Companies Act and the articles, an order for winding up, whether on the partnership analogy or under the just and equitable provision, should not be made. Alternatively, it was argued that before the making of such an order could be considered the petitioner must show and prove that the exclusion was not made bona fide in the interests of the company.

My Lords, I must first make some examination of the authorities in order to see how far they support the respondents' propositions and, if they do not, how far they rest upon a principle of which this House should disapprove. I will say at once that, over a period of some 60 years, they show a considerable degree of consistency, and that such criticism as may be made relates rather to the application of accepted principle to the facts than to the statements of principles themselves.

The real starting point is the Scottish decision in Symington v. Symington's Quarries Ltd. (1905) 8 F. 121. There had been a partnership business carried on by two brothers who decided to transfer it to a private limited company. Each brother was to hold half the shares except for a small holding for a third brother to hold balance for voting. A resolution was passed in general meeting by the votes of one brother together with other members having nominal interests that he should be sole director. The other two brothers petitioned for a winding up under the just and equitable provision and the court so ordered. The reasons for so doing, given by some of their Lordships of the First Division, are expressed in terms of lost substratum or deadlock—words clearly used in a general rather than a technical sense. The judgment of Lord M'Laren, which has proved to be the most influential as regards later cases, puts the ground more generally. He points out, at p. 130, that the company was not formed by appeal to the public: it was a domestic company, the only real partners being the three brothers:

> "In such a case it is quite obvious that all the reasons that apply to the dissolution of private companies, on the grounds of incompatibility between the views or methods of the partners, would be applicable in terms to the division amongst the shareholders of this company, . . . "

In England, the leading authority is the Court of Appeal's decision in In re Yenidje Tobacco Co. Ltd. [1916] 2 Ch. 426. This was a case of two equal director shareholders, with an arbitration provision in the articles, between whom a state of deadlock came into existence. It has often been argued, and was so in this House, that its authority is limited to true deadlock cases. I could, in any case, not be persuaded that the words " just and equitable " need or can be confined to such situations. But Lord Cozens-Hardy M.R. clearly puts his judgment on wider grounds. Whether there is deadlock or not, he says, at p. 432, the circumstances

> "are such that we ought to apply, if necessary, the analogy of the partnership law and to say that this company is now in a state which could not have been contemplated by the parties when the company was formed . . . "

Warrington L.J. adopts the same principle, treating deadlock as an example only of the reasons why it would be just and equitable to wind the company up.

In 1924, these authorities were reviewed, approved and extended overseas by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in an appeal from the West Indian Court of Appeal (Barbados), Loch v. John Blackwood Ltd. [1924] A.C. 783. The judgment of the Board delivered by Lord Shaw of Dunfermline clearly endorses, if not enlarges, the width to be given to the just and equitable clause. The case itself was one of a domestic company and was not one of deadlock. One of the directors had given grounds for loss of confidence in his probity and (a matter echoed in the present case) had shown that he regarded the business as his own. His Lordship quotes with approval from the judgments of Lord M'Laren in Symington v. Symington's Quarries Ltd., 8 F. 121 and of Lord Cozens-Hardy M.R. in In re Yenidje Tobacco Co. Ltd. [1916] 2 Ch. 426.

I note in passing the Scottish case of Thomson v. Drysdale, 1925 S.C. 311 where a winding up was ordered under the just and equitable clause at the instance of a holder of one share against the only other shareholder who held 1,501 shares, clearly not a case of deadlock, and come to In re Cuthbert Cooper & Sons Ltd. [1937] Ch. 392, a case which your Lordships must consider. The respondents relied on this case which carries the authority of Simonds J. as restricting the force of the just and equitable provision. The company was clearly a family company, the capital in which belonged to a father and his two elder sons. After the death of the father leaving his shares to his younger sons and appointing them his executors, his elder sons, exercising the powers given to directors by the articles, refused to register the executors as shareholders and dismissed them from employment. The executors' petition for winding up of the company was dismissed. My Lords, with respect for the eminent judge who decided it, I must doubt the correctness of this. Whether on the facts stated a case of justice and equity was made out is no doubt partly a question of fact on which, even though my own view is clear enough, I should respect the opinion of the trial judge; but, this matter apart, I am unable to agree as to the undue emphasis he puts on the contractual rights arising from the articles, over the equitable principles which might be derived from partnership law, for in the result the latter seem to have been entirely excluded in the former's favour. I think that the case should no longer be regarded as of authority.

There are three recent cases which I should mention since they have figured in the judgments below. In re Lundie Brothers Ltd. [1965] 1 W.L.R. 1051 was, like the present, a decision of Plowman J. This was a case where the petitioner, one of three shareholders and directors, was excluded from participation in the management and from directors' remuneration. Plowman J. applying partnership principles made a winding up order under the just and equitable clause. If that decision was right it assists the present appellant. The Court of Appeal in the present case disagreed with it and overruled it, in so far as it related to a winding up. The respondent argues that this was the first case where exclusion of a working director, valid under the articles, had been treated as a ground for winding up under the just and equitable clause and that as such it was an unjustifiable innovation.

In re Expanded Plugs Ltd. [1966] 1 W.L.R. 514 was, on the other hand, approved by the Court of Appeal in the present case. The case itself is a paradigm of obscure forensic tactics and, as such, of merely curious interest; its only importance lies in the statement, contained in the judgment, at p. 523, that since the relevant decisions were carried out within the framework of the articles the petitioner must show that they were not carried out bona fide in the interests of the company. I shall return, in so far as it limits the scope of the just and equitable provision, to this principle but I should say at once that I disagree with it.

In In re K/9 Meat Supplies (Guildford) Ltd. [1966] 1 W.L.R. 1112 there was a company of three shareholder/directors one of whom became bankrupt; the petitioner was his trustee in bankruptcy. It was contended that the company was a quasi-partnership and that since section 33 of the Partnership Act 1890 provides for dissolution on the bankruptcy of one of the partners a winding up order on this ground should be made. Pennycuick J. rejected this argument on the ground that, since the "partnership" had been transformed into a company and since the articles gave no automatic right to a winding up on bankruptcy, bankruptcy of one member was not a ground for winding up of itself. He then proceeded to consider whether the just and equitable provision should be applied. In my opinion, this procedure was correct and I need not express an opinion whether, on the facts, it was right to refuse an order.

Finally I should refer to the Scottish case of Lewis v. Haas, 1970 S.L.T. (Notes) 67 where the two main shareholder/directors each held 49 per cent. of the shares, the remaining 2 per cent. being held by a solicitor. Lord Fraser, in the Outer House, while accepting the principle that exclusion from management might be a ground for ordering a winding up, did not find the facts sufficient to support the use of the just and equitable clause.

This series of cases (and there are others: In re Davis & Collett Ltd. [1935] Ch. 693; Baird v. Lees, 1924 S.C. 83; Elder v. Elder & Watson, 1952 S.C. 49; In re Swaledale Cleaners Ltd. [1968] 1 W.L.R. 1710; In re Fildes Bros. Ltd. [1970] 1 W.L.R. 592; In re Leadenhall General Hardware Stores Ltd. (unreported), February 4, 1971), amounts to a considerable body of authority in favour of the use of the just and equitable provision in a wide variety of situations, including those of expulsion from office. The principle has found acceptance in a number of Commonwealth jurisdictions. Though these were not cited at the Bar I refer to some of them since they usefully illustrate the principle which has been held to underlie this jurisdiction and show it applicable to exclusion cases.

In In re Straw Products Pty. Ltd. [1942] V.L.R. 222 Mann C.J. said, at p. 223:

> " All that Hinds has done in the past in exercise of his control has been within his legal powers. The question is whether he has used those powers in such a way as to make it just and equitable that Robertson should be allowed by the court to retire from the partnership. The analogy of a partnership seems to me to clarify discussion."

In re Wondoflex Textiles Pty. Ltd. [1951] V.L.R. 458 was a case where again the company was held to resemble a partnership. The petitioner, owner of a quarter share, was removed from office as director by the governing director exercising powers under the articles. Thus the issue, and the argument, closely resembled those in the present case. The judgment of Smith J. contains the following passage, at p. 467:

> " It is also true, I think, that, generally speaking, a petition for winding up, based upon the partnership analogy, cannot succeed if what is complained of is merely a valid exercise of powers conferred in terms by the articles: . . . To hold otherwise would enable a member to be relieved from the consequences of a bargain knowingly entered into by him: . . . But this, I think, is subject to an important qualification. Acts which, in law, are a valid exercise of powers conferred by the articles may nevertheless be entirely outside what can fairly be regarded as having been in the contemplation of the parties when they became members of the company; and in such cases the fact that what has been done is not in excess of power will not necessarily be an answer to a claim for winding up. Indeed, it may be said that one purpose of [the just and equitable provision] is to enable the court to relieve a party from his bargain in such cases."

The whole judgment is of value. In New Zealand, the Court of Appeal has endorsed the potential application of the principle to exclusion cases: Tench v. Tench Bros. Ltd. [1930] N.Z.L.R. 403; see also In re Modern Retreading Co. Ltd. [1962] E.A. 57, also a case of exclusion from management, and cf. In re Sydney and Whitney Pier Bus Service Ltd. [1944] 3 D.L.R. 468 and In re Concrete Column Clamps Ltd. [1953] 4 D.L.R. 60 (Quebec).

My Lords, in my opinion these authorities represent a sound and rational development of the law which should be endorsed. The foundation of it all lies in the words "just and equitable" and, if there is any respect in which some of the cases may be open to criticism, it is that the courts may sometimes have been too timorous in giving them full force. The words are a recognition of the fact that a limited company is more than a mere legal entity, with a personality in law of its own: that there is room in company law for recognition of the fact that behind it, or amongst it, there are individuals, with rights, expectations and obligations inter se which are not necessarily submerged in the company structure. That structure is defined by the Companies Act and by the articles of association by which shareholders agree to be bound. In most companies and in most contexts, this definition is sufficient and exhaustive, equally so whether the company is large or small. The "just and equitable" provision does not, as the respondents suggest, entitle one party to disregard the obligation he assumes by entering a company, nor the court to dispense him from it. It does, as equity always does, enable the court to subject the exercise of legal rights to equitable considerations; considerations, that is, of a personal character arising between one individual and another, which may make it unjust, or inequitable, to insist on legal rights, or to exercise them in a particular way.

It would be impossible, and wholly undesirable, to define the circumstances in which these considerations may arise. Certainly the fact that a company is a small one, or a private company, is not enough. There are very many of these where the association is a purely commercial one, of which it can safely be said that the basis of association is adequately and exhaustively laid down in the articles. The superimposition of equitable considerations requires something more, which typically may include one, or probably more, of the following elements: (i) an association formed or continued on the basis of a personal relationship, involving mutual confidence—this element will often be found where a pre-existing partnership has been converted into a limited company; (ii) an agreement, or understanding, that all, or some (for there may be "sleeping" members), of the shareholders shall participate in the conduct of the business; (iii) restriction upon the transfer of the members' interest in the company—so that if confidence is lost, or one member is removed from management, he cannot take out his stake and go elsewhere.

It is these, and analogous, factors which may bring into play the just and equitable clause, and they do so directly, through the force of the words themselves. To refer, as so many of the cases do, to "quasi-partnerships" or "in substance partnerships" may be convenient but may also be confusing. It may be convenient because it is the law of partnership which has developed the conceptions of probity, good faith and mutual confidence, and the remedies where these are absent, which become relevant once such factors as I have mentioned are found to exist: the words "just and equitable" sum these up in the law of partnership itself. And in many, but not necessarily all, cases there has been a pre-existing partnership the obligations of which it is reasonable to suppose continue to underlie the new company structure. But the expressions may be confusing if they obscure, or deny, the fact that the parties (possibly former partners) are now co-members in a company, who have accepted, in law, new obligations. A company, however small, however domestic, is a company not a partnership or even a quasi-partnership and it is through the just and equitable clause that obligations, common to partnership relations, may come in.

My Lords, this is an expulsion case, and I must briefly justify the application in such cases of the just and equitable clause. The question is, as always, whether it is equitable to allow one (or two) to make use of his legal rights to the prejudice of his associate(s). The law of companies recognises the right, in many ways, to remove a director from the board. Section 184 of the Companies Act 1948 confers this right upon the company in general meeting whatever the articles may say. Some articles may prescribe other methods: for example, a governing director may have the power to remove (compare In re Wondoflex Textiles Pty. Ltd. [1951] V.L.R. 458). And quite apart from removal powers, there are normally provisions for retirement of directors by rotation so that their re-election can be opposed and defeated by a majority, or even by a casting vote. In all these ways a particular director-member may find himself no longer a director, through removal, or non-re-election: this situation he must normally accept, unless he undertakes the burden of proving fraud or mala fides. The just and equitable provision nevertheless comes to his assistance if he can point to, and prove, some special underlying obligation of his fellow member(s) in good faith, or confidence, that so long as the business continues he shall be entitled to management participation, an obligation so basic that, if broken, the conclusion must be that the association must be dissolved. And the principles on which he may do so are those worked out by the courts in partnership cases where there has been exclusion from management (see Const v. Harris (1824) Tur. & Rus. 496, 525) even where under the partnership agreement there is a power of expulsion (see Blisset v. Daniel (1853) 10 Hare 493; Lindley on Partnership, 13th ed. (1971), pp. 331, 595).

I come to the facts of this case. It is apparent enough that a potential basis for a winding up order under the just and equitable clause existed. The appellant after a long association in partnership, during which he had an equal share in the management, joined in the formation of the company. The inference must be indisputable that he, and Mr. Nazar, did so on the basis that the character of the association would, as a matter of personal relation and good faith, remain the same. He was removed from his directorship under a power valid in law. Did he establish a case which, if he had remained in a partnership with a term providing for expulsion, would have justified an order for dissolution? This was the essential question for the judge. Plowman J. dealt with the issue in a brief paragraph in which he said [1970] 1 W.L.R. 1378, 1389:

> ". . . while no doubt the petitioner was lawfully removed, in the sense that he ceased in law to be a director, it does not follow that in A removing him the respondents did not do him a wrong. In my judgment, they did do him a wrong, in the sense that it was an abuse of power and a breach of the good faith which partners owe to each other to exclude one of them from all participation in the business upon which they have embarked on the basis that all should participate in its management. The main justification put forward for removing him was that he was perpetually complaining, but the faults were not B all on one side and, in my judgment, this is not sufficient justification. For these reasons, in my judgment, the petitioner, therefore, has made out a case for a winding up order."

Reading this in the context of the judgment as a whole, which had dealt with the specific complaints of one side against the other, I take it as a finding that the respondents were not entitled, in justice and equity, to C make use of their legal powers of expulsion and that, in accordance with the principles of such cases as Blisset v. Daniel, 10 Hare 493, the only just and equitable course was to dissolve the association. To my mind, two factors strongly support this. First, Mr. Nazar made it perfectly clear that he did not regard Mr. Ebrahimi as a partner, but did regard him as an employee. But there was no possible doubt as to Mr. Ebrahimi's status throughout, so that Mr. Nazar's refusal to recognise it amounted, in effect, D to a repudiation of the relationship. Secondly, Mr. Ebrahimi, through ceasing to be a director, lost his right to share in the profits through directors' remuneration, retaining only the chance of receiving dividends as a minority shareholder. It is true that an assurance was given in evidence that the previous practice (of not paying dividends) would not be continued, but the fact remains that Mr. Ebrahimi was thenceforth at the mercy E of the Messrs. Nazar as to what he should receive out of the profits and when. He was, moreover, unable to dispose of his interest without the consent of the Nazars. All these matters lead only to the conclusion that the right course was to dissolve the association by winding up.

I must deal with one final point which was much relied on by the Court of Appeal. It was said that the removal was, according to the evidence of Mr. Nazar, bona fide in the interests of the company; that Mr. Ebrahimi F had not shown the contrary; that he ought to do so or to demonstrate that no reasonable man could think that his removal was in the company's interest. This formula " bona fide in the interests of the company " is one that is relevant in certain contexts of company law and I do not doubt that in many cases decisions have to be left to majorities or directors to take which the courts must assume had this basis. It may, on the other hand, G become little more than an alibi for a refusal to consider the merits of the case, and in a situation such as this it seems to have little meaning other than " in the interests of the majority." Mr. Nazar may well have persuaded himself, quite genuinely, that the company would be better off without Mr. Ebrahimi, but if Mr. Ebrahimi disputed this, or thought the same with reference to Mr. Nazar, what prevails is simply the majority H view. To confine the application of the just and equitable clause to proved cases of mala fides would be to negative the generality of the words. It is because I do not accept this that I feel myself obliged to differ from the Court of Appeal.

I would allow the appeal and restore the judgment of Plowman J. I propose that the individual respondents pay the appellant's costs here and in the Court of Appeal.

VISCOUNT DILHORNE. My Lords, I have had the advantage of reading the opinion of my noble and learned friend, Lord Wilberforce. I agree with all he has said, and he has dealt with the matter so comprehensively that there is nothing I wish to add.

I agree that the appeal should be allowed and that the individual respondents should be ordered to pay the appellant's costs here and in the Court of Appeal.

LORD PEARSON. My Lords, I have had the advantage of reading the opinion of my noble and learned friend Lord Wilberforce, and for the reasons given by him I would allow the appeal and restore the judgment of Plowman J.

I agree that the individual respondents should be ordered to pay the appellant's costs here and in the Court of Appeal.

LORD CROSS OF CHELSEA. My Lords, the "just and equitable" clause first appeared in section 5 of the Joint Stock Companies Winding Up Act 1848. Subsections (1) to (6) of that section gave the court jurisdiction to wind up a company in various circumstances indicative of insolvency; subsection (7) gave jurisdiction if the company had been dissolved or should have ceased to carry on business or should be carrying on business only for the purpose of winding up its affairs; and subsection (8) added: "or if any other matter or thing shall be shown which, in the opinion of the court, shall render it just and equitable that the company should be dissolved." The meaning of the subsection was considered by Lord Cottenham L.C. in 1849 in Ex parte Spackman, 1 Mac. & G. 170. In that case the company, which was a cattle insurance company, was not insolvent and was carrying on business; but the petitioners who held shares which were not fully paid up considered that its prospects were bad and that it might well become insolvent. The fact that some shareholders in a company take a pessimistic view of its prospects does not make it "just and equitable" to wind it up against the wishes of the majority who take a more optimistic view and it is not surprising that the petition was dismissed; but in the course of his judgment Lord Cottenham L.C. expressed an opinion as to the scope of the subsection which had for many years an unfortunate influence on the practice of the Companies Court. He said, at p. 174:

> "This clause, was, no doubt, thus worded in order to include all cases not before mentioned; but of course it cannot mean that it should be interpreted otherwise than in reference to matters ejusdem generis, as those in the previous clauses. There must be something in the management and conduct of the company which shows the court that it should be no longer allowed to continue, and that the concern ought to be wound up."

It is not in fact easy to see what precisely Lord Cottenham L.C. had in mind—for there may well be matters arising in the management of a company's affairs which make it "just and equitable" that it should be wound up but which have no relation whatever either to insolvency or a cessation of business. Nevertheless, when the subsection reappeared as section 79 (5) of the Companies Act 1862 the courts, with Lord Cottenham L.C.'s words "ejusdem generis" in mind, for many years interpreted it very narrowly and only made orders under it if the substratum of the company had disappeared or it was a "bubble" company which had never had a genuine substratum at all. Towards the end of the century the idea that the "just and equitable" clause only covered situations which could be said to be somehow "ejusdem generis" with the situations envisaged in the preceding subsections was gradually given up, but even in recent times judges have displayed a certain unwillingness to take the words at their face value and to apply them to new situations, which may well be an unconscious reflection of the restrictive interpretation which was put on them for so many years. In the present century, when the subsection became in turn section 129 (6) of the Companies (Consolidation) Act 1908, section 168 (6) of the Companies Act 1929 and section 228 (f) of the Act of 1948, petitions brought under it have generally related to disputes between rival shareholders or groups of shareholders in private companies; and in many cases the parties to the dispute have stood to one another in a relationship analogous to that of partners in an unincorporated business. In some of the reported cases in which winding up orders have been made those who opposed the petition have been held by the court to have been guilty of a "lack of probity" in their dealings with the petitioners. Thus in Loch v. John Blackwood Ltd. [1924] A.C. 783 the managing director and majority shareholder was deliberately keeping the minority in ignorance of the company's financial position in order to acquire their shares at an undervalue, and in In re Davis & Collett Ltd. [1935] Ch. 693 the holder of half the shares had used his casting vote as chairman in order to bring in an additional director who would vote as he wished and then proceeded to oust the owner of the other half of the shares from any participation in the management of the company's business. But it is not a condition precedent to the making of an order under the subsection that the conduct of those who oppose its making should have been unjust or inequitable. This was made clear as early as 1905 by Lord M'Laren in his judgment in Symington v. Symington's Quarries Ltd., 8 F. 121, 130. To the same effect is the judgment of Lord Cozens-Hardy M.R. in In re Yenidje Tobacco Co. Ltd. [1916] 2 Ch. 426, 431–432. It is sometimes said that the order in that case was made on the ground of "deadlock." That is not so. As Mr. Frank Russell K.C., who was counsel for the appellant, pointed out, although Mr. Rothman and Mr. Weinberg were not on speaking terms they communicated through third parties, the company's business was flourishing and the articles contained a provision for arbitration to which resort could be had in the event of their failing to agree on any point. The reason why the petitioner succeeded was that the court thought it right to make the order which it would have made had Mr. Rothman and Mr. Weinberg been carrying on business under articles of partnership which contained no provision for dissolution at the instance of either of them. People do not become partners unless they have confidence in one another and it is of the essence of the relationship that mutual confidence is maintained. If neither has any longer confidence in the other so that they cannot work together in the way originally contemplated then the relationship should be ended—unless, indeed, the party who wishes to end it has been solely responsible for the situation which has arisen. The relationship between Mr. Rothman and Mr. Weinberg was not, of course, in form that of partners; they were equal shareholders in a limited company. But the court considered that it would be unduly fettered by matters of form if it did not deal with the situation as it would have dealt with it had the parties been partners in form as well as in substance.

The " just and equitable " clause is, as I see it, an equitable supplement to the common law of the company which is to be found in the memorandum and articles; but there are some reported decisions which I find difficult, if not impossible, to square with this view. The most notable of these is that of Simonds J. in In re Cuthbert Cooper & Sons Ltd. [1937] Ch. 392. The company there was a private company founded in 1913 to take over the business then being carried on by a father and his two elder sons. The capital was £10,000 divided into £1 shares of which 5,000 were held by the father and 2,500 each by the two sons. The three of them were the directors of the company. In 1930 the father died having appointed his three younger sons who were employed by the company his executors and having bequeathed them his shares equally. The articles gave the directors an absolute discretion to refuse to register as members any person to whom a member executed a transfer of shares or any person who became entitled to shares by transmission on the death of a member. Such a person had a right to receive any dividends declared on his shares and a right to share in the surplus assets on a winding up, but no right to attend meetings or to receive accounts. No share could be transferred either by a member or by a person entitled by transmission to a person not a member so long as a member was prepared to buy them at a price based on the average rate of dividends over the preceding three years. After the father's death the younger sons asked their brothers—now the sole directors—to register them as members but they refused to do so. Dividends were, however, declared and the younger sons—though not entitled to them as of right—received copies of the accounts. In 1936 dissensions arose. The younger sons were dismissed from their employment; the dividend payable for the year ending June 30, 1936, was reduced; and the directors refused to supply them with the balance sheet for that year. The directors offered to buy their brothers' shares but only at a price which, so the younger brothers alleged, was far below their real value. In view of the right of the directors to refuse to register transfers a sale to an outsider was not possible. In these circumstances the younger sons petitioned to have the company wound up. They complained not that they had no share in the management of the company but simply that they were not put on the register, the suggestion being that the directors were trying to force them to sell their half interest in the company at an undervalue by reducing the rate of dividend and refusing to let them see the accounts. In dismissing the petition the judge said that, although he must be guided by the principles applied by the court in deciding whether or not to dissolve a partnership, even in a partnership case the court would be guided by the partnership articles which one must in this case assume to correspond—mutatis mutandis—with the articles of the company. He also said that he was not prepared to assume that the directors were not acting in good faith in refusing to register the executors as shareholders and he refused to order them to attend for cross-examination. In effect he simply applied the common law, as laid down in the company's constitution and told the petitioners that if they wished to impugn their brothers' good faith they must prove their case by bringing an action against them. One naturally hesitates to dissent from any decision of Lord Simonds; but I cannot help thinking that on this occasion he took too narrow a view. It is not right to say that in a partnership case the court is tied by the terms of the partnership articles, for it will decree a dissolution of a partnership for a fixed term if it is "just and equitable" to do so. Further, he appears to have taken no account of the fact that the petitioners had made out a prima facie case against their brothers. Of course, the directors might have been able to show that they had respectable reasons for refusing to register their brothers as members and were not in the least influenced by any wish to induce them to sell their shares to them at a price which might be less than their true value; but on the undisputed facts it was for them to establish their good faith. The proper way to deal with the case would, I venture to think, have been to say that if the directors did not wish to give evidence and submit to cross-examination the company would have to be wound up. It is to be observed that the judge himself said that he had found the case a difficult one and in In re Swaledale Cleaners Ltd. [1968] 1 W.L.R. 1710 Danckwerts L.J. expressed the view that it was wrongly decided. It is true that in the earlier case of Charles Forte Investments Ltd. v. Amanda [1964] Ch. 240 the Court of Appeal—of which Danckwerts L.J. and I myself were members—had accepted the Cuthbert Cooper decision as correct, but it was not in any way necessary for our decision in that case to approve it and I think that we were wrong to do so.

What the minority shareholder in cases of this sort really wants is not to have the company wound up—which may prove an unsatisfactory remedy—but to be paid a proper price for his shareholding. With this in mind Parliament provided by section 210 of the Companies Act 1948 that if a member of a company could show that the company's affairs were being conducted in a manner oppressive to some of the members including himself, that the facts proved would justify the making of a winding up order under the "just and equitable" clause but that to wind up the company would unfairly prejudice the "oppressed" members the court could (inter alia) make an order for the purchase of the shares of those members by other members or by the company. To give the court jurisdiction under this section the petitioner must show both that the conduct of the majority is "oppressive" and also that it affects him in his capacity as a shareholder. Mr. Ebrahimi was unable to establish either of these preconditions. But the jurisdiction to wind up under section 222 (f) continues to exist as an independent remedy and I have no doubt that the Court of Appeal was right in rejecting the submission of the respondents to the effect that a petitioner cannot obtain an order under that subsection any more than under section 210 unless he can show that his position as a shareholder has been worsened by the action of which he complains. The facts of this case are set out in detail in the judgment of Plowman J. and I need not repeat them. The essence of the matter is that Mr. Nazar and Mr. Ebrahimi had been carrying on business as partners at will in equal shares; that the business was transferred to the company in which each had 40 per cent. of the capital and Nazar's son George the remaining 20 per cent.; that it was not contemplated that any dividends would be paid but was contemplated that the profits of the company should be distributed by way of director's fees; and that the result of Mr. Ebrahimi's removal from the directorship was that instead of his having a share in the management of the business and an income of some £3,000 a year he was excluded from the management and deprived of any share in the profits save such dividend as might be paid on his shares if the Nazars thought fit to declare a dividend. The Court of Appeal held that Mr. Ebrahimi could not obtain a winding up order under the "just and equitable" clause unless he could show that the Nazars had not exercised the power to remove him from his directorship "bona fide in the interests of the company" or that their grounds for exercising the power were such that no reasonable man could think that the removal was in the interest of the company. With all respect to them I cannot agree that this is an appropriate test to apply. If one assumes that the company is going to remain in existence it may very well be that a reasonable man would say that it was in the interest of the company that Mr. Ebrahimi should cease to be a director. "These two men," he might say, "are hopelessly at loggerheads. If the business is to prosper one or other must go and the company is likely to do better without Mr. Ebrahimi than without Mr. Nazar." But these considerations have not, to my mind, anything to do with the question whether in the circumstances it is right that the company should continue in existence if Mr. Ebrahimi wishes it to be wound up. The argument upon which counsel for the respondent chiefly relied in support of the decision of the Court of Appeal was quite different. Mr. Ebrahimi, he said, consented to the conversion of the partnership into a limited company. Even though he became, because George Nazar was taken in, only a minority shareholder he could have safeguarded his position by procuring the insertion in the articles of a provision "weighting" the voting power of his shares on any question touching his retention of office as director: see Bushell v. Faith [1970] A.C. 1099. He must, therefore, be taken to have accepted the risk that if he and Mr. Nazar fell out he would be at Mr. Nazar's mercy. There might be force in this argument if there was any evidence to show that the minds of the parties were directed to the point; but there is no such evidence and the probability is that no one gave a moment's thought to the change in relative strength of their respective positions brought about by the conversion of the partnership into a company. It was not suggested that Mr. Ebrahimi had been guilty of any misconduct such as would justify one partner in expelling another under an expulsion clause contained in partnership articles. All that happened was that without one being more to blame than the other the two could no longer work together in harmony. Had no company been formed Mr. Ebrahimi could have had the partnership wound up and though Mr. Nazar and his son were entitled in law to oust him from his directorship and deprive him of his income they could only do so subject to Mr. Ebrahimi's right to obtain equitable relief in the form of a winding up order under section 222 (f). I would, therefore, allow the appeal.

In conclusion, I would refer briefly to three recent decisions under paragraph (f). In re Lundie Brothers Ltd. [1965] 1 W.L.R. 1051 was, like this, an "exclusion" case. Plowman J. was I think right in that case, as in this, to make a winding up order. In In re K/9 Meat Supplies (Guildford) Ltd. [1966] 1 W.L.R. 1112 the company had an issued share capital of 11,001 shares 3667 of which were held by each of three men who were the sole directors and each of whom took part in the running of the business. It was arranged between them that the profits should be divided equally by way of directors' fees. One of the three, a Mr. Darrington, got into financial difficulties. He resigned his directorship in January 1965, and in April was adjudicated bankrupt. Shortly afterwards the two remaining directors sold the business for £18,000 and placed the purchase price on deposit. They offered to buy Mr. Darrington's shares from his trustee in bankruptcy at par but the trustee, taking the view that Mr. Darrington ought to receive a third share of the purchase price, petitioned under section 222 (f). Pennycuick J. came with regret to the conclusion that he must dismiss the petition. He thought it deplorable that the two other quasi-partners should retain in their hands assets to which Mr. Darrington's creditors were in common fairness entitled but he held that as the three had elected to trade together through the medium of a company instead of as partners there was no ground on which he could properly make the order. In coming to this conclusion he was, I think, much influenced by In re Cuthbert Cooper & Sons Ltd. [1937] Ch. 392. I think that a winding up order should have been made since in the absence of any other explanation the inevitable inference was that the two remaining directors in resisting a winding up and distribution of the surplus assets among the shareholders were putting pressure on the trustee in bankruptcy to sell them Mr. Darrington's shares at an undervalue. The last case is the decision of Brightman J. in In re Leadenhall General Hardware Stores Ltd (unreported), February 4, 1971. His decision not to make a winding up order was, I think, justifiable—though I cannot agree with the reasons which he gave for it. If the respondents were telling the truth—and the judge held that they were—the almost inevitable inference was that the petitioner had been stealing the company's money. A petitioner who relies on the "just and equitable" clause must come to court with clean hands, and if the breakdown in confidence between him and the other parties to the dispute appears to have been due to his misconduct he cannot insist on the company being wound up if they wish it to continue. But the judge dealt with the case on the footing that the respondents' loss of confidence in the petitioner might have been due to a tragic and inexplicable misunderstanding. If it was right in the light of the evidence to deal with this case on that basis then I would have thought that a winding up order should have been made.

I agree with the order proposed by my noble and learned friend Lord Wilberforce with regard to costs.

LORD SALMON. My Lords, I concur in the opinions of my noble and learned friends Lord Wilberforce and Lord Cross of Chelsea and I would accordingly allow the appeal.

I agree that the individual respondents should be ordered to pay the appellant's costs here and in the Court of Appeal.

Appeal allowed.
Second and third respondents to pay appellant's costs in House of Lords.
Legal aid taxation of appellant's costs in House of Lords.

Staughton, Millett and Otton L.JJ.

E Solicitor—Negligence—Incorrect advice or information—Mortgage transaction—Solicitor acting for borrowers and lender—Solicitor negligently giving lender incorrect information—Lender suffering loss—Whether lender merely having to prove reliance on information—Whether necessary to show loss attributable to negligence—Whether breach of trust or fiduciary duty

F In 1988 the defendant solicitor acted for a husband and wife in the purchase of a house for £73,000 and also for the plaintiff to whom the purchasers had applied for a loan of £59,000 to finance the purchase. The plaintiff offered to advance the money on the express condition that the balance of the purchase price was provided by the purchasers without resort to further borrowing, and it instructed the solicitor to report, prior to completion, any proposal that the purchasers might create a G second mortgage or otherwise borrow in order to finance part of the purchase price. The solicitor knew that the purchasers were arranging for an existing bank debt of £3,350 to be secured by a second charge on the new property but, due to an oversight, he stated in his report to the plaintiff that the balance of the purchase price was being provided by the purchasers without resort to further borrowing. The plaintiff advanced the loan and the purchase was completed. When the purchasers defaulted on H their mortgage repayments the plaintiff enforced its security and the house was sold at a loss. The plaintiff sought to recover the whole of its loss on the transaction from the solicitor, alleging breach of contract, negligence and breach of trust. The district judge gave the plaintiff summary judgment for damages to be assessed for breach of contract and negligence and for damages of £59,000 less the amount received on the sale of the property for breach of trust. The judge affirmed those decisions.

On appeal by the solicitor:—

Held, allowing the appeal, (1) that, where a client sued his solicitor for negligently giving him incorrect advice or information, the client did not have to show that he would not have acted as he did if he had been given the proper advice or correct information but merely that he had relied on the incorrect advice or information; that the evidence showed that the plaintiff had relied on the solicitor's report in advancing the loan and, therefore, the necessary causal link between the solicitor's negligence and the loan was proved; but that the plaintiff had still to establish what, if any, loss was attributable to the solicitor's negligence and, as there was an issue as to what loss was occasioned by the existence of the second charge and the purchasers' indebtedness to the bank, damages remained to be assessed (post, pp. 11D–E, F–H, 13B–C, 24E–F, 25E–F, 28A).

Banque Bruxelles Lambert S.A. v. Eagle Star Insurance Co. Ltd. [1997] A.C. 191, H.L.(E.) and Downs v. Chappell [1997] 1 W.L.R. 426, C.A. applied.

(2) That the solicitor's conduct in providing the plaintiff with the wrong information, although a breach of duty, was neither dishonest nor intentional but due to an oversight and was unconnected to the fact that he was also acting for the purchasers; that, accordingly, his conduct and subsequent application of the money advanced by the plaintiff to complete the purchase was not a breach of trust or fiduciary duty; and that the order for damages for breach of trust would therefore be set aside (post, pp. 15H–16A, 19E, 20G, 22A–C, 24E–F, 25E–F, 26C–E, 28A).

Decision of Chadwick J. reversed.

INTERLOCUTORY APPEAL from Chadwick J.

On 21 June 1995 Deputy District Judge Raskin granted the plaintiff, Bristol and West Building Society, summary judgment pursuant to R.S.C., Ord. 14 of its claims against the defendant solicitor, Anthony Paul Mothew (trading as Stapley & Co.), for damages to be assessed for breach of contract and negligence and damages for breach of trust. On 27 July 1995 Chadwick J. dismissed the defendant's appeal against that order.

Pursuant to leave granted by Nourse L.J. on 29 December 1995 and by a notice of appeal dated 5 January 1996 the defendant sought to set aside the orders and be granted unconditional leave to defend on the grounds that the judge had erred in holding (1) that money paid to the defendant by the plaintiff was impressed with a constructive trust in favour of the plaintiff; (2) that the money was paid to the defendant under a mistake of fact or had been induced by the defendant's misrepresentation, when no such allegations were made in the statement of claim; (3) that it was not necessary for the plaintiff to establish that it had sustained loss and damage as a result of the defendant's alleged breach of trust; (4) that the defendant had no arguable defence to the claim for breach of trust based upon acquiescence or affirmation by the plaintiff; and (5) that the defendant had no arguable defence to the allegation that the plaintiff had sustained loss and damage as a result of the breach of contract and negligence.

By a respondent's notice dated 25 January 1996 the plaintiff contended that it was entitled to judgment for the sum claimed in respect of its claims for breach of contract and negligence.

The facts are stated in the judgment of Millett L.J.

Jonathan Sumption Q.C. and Glenn Campbell for the defendant. A breach of a solicitor's conveyancing duty which makes no difference to the lender's decision and has no impact on the value of the security cannot result in the solicitor becoming the underwriter of the transaction when the security is later sold at a loss: see Target Holdings Ltd. v. Redferns [1996] A.C. 421. Although a solicitor has a number of fiduciary obligations to his client, not every duty which is owed in the context of a fiduciary relationship is a fiduciary duty: see Girardet v. Crease & Co. (1987) 11 B.C.L.R. (2d) 361, 362; LAC Minerals Ltd. v. International Corona Resources Ltd. (1989) 61 D.L.R. (4th) 14, 28 and In re Coomber; Coomber v. Coomber [1911] 1 Ch. 723, 728. A solicitor's duty to report to his client the outcome of conveyancing and allied inquiries is the ordinary contractual duty of a professional to comply with his instructions and to do so with reasonable skill.

Brickenden v. London Loan & Savings Co. [1934] 3 D.L.R. 465 does not assist the plaintiff as it was concerned only with a breach by a fiduciary of his obligation to disclose to his principal his own personal interest in the transaction. [Reference was also made to Nocton v. Lord Ashburton [1914] A.C. 932.] The principle that relief is granted for such a breach, without regard to what the plaintiff would have done if disclosure had been made reflects the rule of equity that where a fiduciary has dealt personally with the plaintiff without full disclosure to him the latter's relief is not compensatory at all. He has, irrespective of his loss, an absolute right to set aside the transaction or to claim an account of profits. The compensation awarded to him is simply the financial equivalent of setting aside: see Gray v. New Augarita Porcupine Mines Ltd. [1952] 3 D.L.R. 1, 12–15. Compensation cannot be awarded for breach of a duty as to the manner in which work should be carried out: see Permanent Building Society v. Wheeler (1994) 14 A.C.S.R. 109, 164–165. [Reference was also made to Canson Enterprises Ltd. v. Boughton & Co. (1991) 85 D.L.R. (4th) 129; Wan v. McDonald (1992) 105 A.L.R. 473; Witten-Hannah v. Davis [1995] 2 N.Z.L.R. 141 and Target Holdings Ltd. v. Redferns [1996] A.C. 421.]

There is no distinction between a solicitor who breaches his duty by failing to report in accordance with his instructions before the mortgage advance cheque is received and a solicitor who fails to deal with the advance in accordance with his instructions after it is received. In neither case does the breach of duty have the effect of terminating the solicitor's retainer and his authority to complete the transaction. Equally, the argument that the solicitor held the advance as soon as it was received on

A a constructive trust to return it forthwith to the plaintiff cannot be supported. There cannot be a constructive trust inconsistent with the existing express trust to apply the loan moneys in completing the transaction, unless the solicitor's authority and obligation to complete the transaction are first brought to an end. [Reference was made to Westdeutsche Landesbank Girozentrale v. Islington London Borough Council [1996] A.C. 669; Sinclair v. Brougham [1914] A.C. 398 and Lipkin Gorman B v. Karpnale Ltd. [1991] 2 A.C. 548.]

If the plaintiff is to be awarded the amount of the advance money (less actual recoveries) it must be on the basis that that money has been misapplied. If the defendant had no authority to pay out the money to the vendor the payment was a breach of trust: see Target Holdings Ltd. v. Redferns [1996] A.C. 421 and Alliance & Leicester Building Society v. C Edgestop Ltd. (unreported), 18 January 1991.

The plaintiff's loss on the loan transaction is due to the default of the purchasers and the fact that the security was not sufficient to cover the loan when it came to be realised, neither of which is the responsibility of the solicitor. The loss is not due to the existence or non-disclosure of a second mortgage.

Nicholas Patten Q.C. and Timothy Higginson for the plaintiff. The D relationship between a solicitor and his client gives rise to fiduciary obligations on the part of the solicitor in the handling of his client's affairs. A failure to perform those obligations gives rise to a remedy in equity regardless of whether the acts complained of also constitute a breach of contract with a right to damages: see Nocton v. Lord Ashburton [1914] A.C. 932, 956–957. The underlying contractual relationship between E the parties cannot dictate or limit the scope of the concurrent fiduciary duties, as the defendant was expressly required to report any proposal for further borrowing before releasing the plaintiff's mortgage advance: see Henderson v. Merrett Syndicates Ltd. [1995] 2 A.C. 145, 205–206.

A solicitor who acts for both lender and borrower in the same transaction has an unrestricted obligation to each client to act in his own best interests, including an obligation to disclose to the lender information F about the borrower which is material to the transaction: see Clark Boyce v. Mouat [1994] 1 A.C. 428, 437. [Reference was also made to Lewis v. Hillman (1852) 3 H.L.Cas. 607; Kelly v. Cooper [1993] A.C. 205; Moody v. Cox and Hatt [1917] 2 Ch. 71 and Bristol and West Building Society v. May May & Merrimans [1996] 2 All E.R. 801, 817–818.]

The non-disclosure of the proposed further borrowing was a breach of G trust. In addition, the release of the advance by the defendant when he had failed to disclose the proposed further borrowing in breach of his express instructions was made without authority and was itself a breach of trust. The right of the plaintiff to recover its advance is unaffected by Target Holdings Ltd. v. Redferns [1996] A.C. 421 because the payment of the advance to the defendant (and therefore the creation of his agency to hold the money for the purpose of the intended transaction) was the direct H result of the reliance by the plaintiff upon the contents of the defendant's report on title. Therefore the defendant's ability to utilise the payment for the benefit of the borrowers in breach of trust was caused by the report on title.

Breaches of trust or fiduciary duty must cause the loss complained of but the test of causation is not the common law test. The inquiry is not to determine what position the plaintiff would have been in had the contract been performed but rather whether the loss would have been sustained but for the breach of trust. The non-disclosure in the report on title caused the loss because it induced the plaintiff to advance the funds in reliance on the report. To inquire as to what the plaintiff would have done had disclosure been made is to apply the common law test and is wrong in principle: see Brickenden v. London Loan & Savings Co. [1934] 3 D.L.R. 465, 469; Gray v. New Augarita Porcupine Mines Ltd. [1952] 3 D.L.R. 1, 15; Commonwealth Bank of Australia v. Smith (1991) 102 A.L.R. 453 and Gemstone Corporation of Australia Ltd. v. Grasso (1994) 12 A.C.L.C. 653.

Cur. adv. vult.

July 24. The following judgments were handed down.

MILLETT L.J. This is an appeal brought by the defendant with the leave of the single Lord Justice from an order for summary judgment given initially by the district judge and affirmed (for different reasons) by Chadwick J. It raises important questions of principle in relation to a claim by a mortgagee to recover from the solicitor who was acting for both mortgagor and mortgagee the loss arising from the mortgagor's subsequent default.

The collapse in the property market which accompanied the recession at the beginning of the present decade caused mortgage lenders to suffer serious losses. Unable to recover their advances from the borrowers or by the enforcement of their security they have sought to recover them from the valuers or solicitors on whose valuations or advice they have relied. In some cases they have been the victims of a fraud to which the valuers and solicitors have been parties. In other cases, such as the present, they have been unable to accuse their solicitor of anything more serious than negligence. Believing that the common law rules of causation and remoteness of damage might not enable them to recover the whole amount of their loss they have turned to equity and alleged breach of trust or fiduciary duty. We have thus been concerned to decide just what is involved in these concepts.

The facts

The facts are not in dispute. The defendant is a solicitor. In August 1988 he acted for a Mr. and Mrs. Towers in the purchase of 17, Thameshill Avenue, Romford for £73,000. In accordance with the usual practice he also acted for the Bristol and West Building Society ("the society") to which the purchasers had applied for an advance of £59,000 in order to finance the purchase. (This was the Cheshunt Building Society, but its rights have since vested in the society.) In their application form the purchasers had stated that the balance of the purchase price of £14,000 was being provided by them personally and that they were not applying elsewhere for financial assistance towards the purchase price.

A The society offered to advance to the purchasers £59,000 on the security of a first mortgage of the property on the express condition that unless otherwise agreed in writing the balance of the purchase price was to be provided by the purchasers personally without resort to further borrowing and that no second mortgage or other loan was being arranged or contemplated in connection with the purchase. The defendant was provided with the offer of advance (but not with the purchasers' B application).

The society's standing instructions to solicitors acting for the society required them to report to the society prior to completion, inter alia:

> "(viii) Any proposal that the applicant may create a second mortgage or enter into a promissory note or otherwise borrow in order to finance part of the purchase price. (ix) Any incorrect information C given in the solicitor's instructions. (x) Any other matters which ought to be brought to the notice of the society . . ."

The solicitor was required to submit a report on title and request for advance cheque to the society at least five clear working days before the cheque was required. This was done on a form by which the solicitor was asked to confirm, inter alia, that the title was good and marketable and D might safely be accepted by the society, that to the best of his knowledge and belief the balance of the purchase money was being provided by the applicant personally without resort to further borrowing, and that the special conditions attached to the offer of advance had been, or would be, complied with.

Mr. and Mrs. Towers intended to provide the balance of the purchase E price from the net proceeds of sale of their existing property after discharging a subsisting mortgage. As it happens, they owed money to Barclays Bank which was secured by a second charge on that property. They arranged with the bank to allow a small part of the debt (£3,350) to remain outstanding after the sale of the existing property and to be secured by a second charge on the new property. The defendant was informed of these arrangements and gave an undertaking to the bank to F hold the title deeds to its order pending registration. Unfortunately, he either failed to appreciate that, although they related to old borrowing, they were a matter which he was required to report to the society, or he had forgotten or overlooked them when he made his report.

By his report dated 2 August 1988 the defendant confirmed that to the best of his knowledge and belief the balance of the purchase money was G being provided by the applicants personally without resort to further borrowing and that the special conditions attached to the offer of advance had been or would be complied with. He failed to disclose the fact that Mr. and Mrs. Towers were making arrangements for a second mortgage in connection with the purchase.

It is conceded by the defendant that his statements were untrue and that his failure to report the purchasers' arrangements for a second H mortgage was a breach of his instructions. The society alleges that the defendant acted negligently and in breach of contract, and this is admitted. There is no allegation of dishonesty or bad faith, and if any such allegation were made it would be strongly resisted. The society does not allege that the defendant made the statements in question knowing them to be untrue. It alleges only that he "knew or ought to have known" that they were untrue, and this is consistent with oversight.

Following the receipt of the report the society forwarded a cheque for the amount of the advance to the defendant in readiness for completion on 30 August. Completion took place on that date when the mortgage advance was released to the vendor's solicitors as part of the purchase price for the property. Mr. and Mrs. Towers executed a first charge in favour of the society and a second charge in favour of the bank. On 25 November the defendant applied to the society for its consent to the registration of the second charge in favour of the bank. The society granted its consent on 10 March 1989. It does not appear that the society was aware of the date of the bank's charge (and so was aware that it constituted a breach of the conditions of the advance) when it gave its consent, but it is alleged that the society must have learnt of it shortly afterwards and nevertheless took no action.

The purchasers defaulted after making only small repayments and the society enforced its security. The property was sold on 6 February 1991 and realised net proceeds of a little under £53,000. The society claimed to recover the whole of its net loss on the transaction from the defendant, alleging breach of contract, negligence and breach of trust. As I have already indicated, breach of contract and negligence are admitted; breach of trust is denied.

It has always been the defendant's case that the society would not have been concerned by the purchasers' proposal to grant a second charge to the bank if this had been disclosed to it in August 1988, that it would still have proceeded with the transaction and that it would have suffered precisely the same loss in that event. It is alleged that, in the heady days of 1988, when the property market was at its height and mortgage lenders were falling over themselves to advance money to house purchasers, the society would not have been concerned by a proposal to grant a second charge to secure a relatively trivial indebtedness which did not even represent fresh borrowing; and it is contended that this is demonstrated by the lack of concern shown by the society when it was asked to give its consent to the registration of a second charge in March 1989. Despite the submissions of the society to the contrary, I am satisfied that, if legally relevant, these allegations raise a triable issue.

The course of the proceedings below

It was common ground below that no damages would be recoverable at common law for breach of contract or tort unless the society could show that it would not have proceeded with the transaction if it had been informed of the facts. The society, however, submitted that the position was different in equity. It alleged that the defendant had committed a breach of trust or fiduciary duty, and submitted that common law principles of causation and remoteness of damage have no application in such a case so that it was not necessary for the society to show that it would not have proceeded with the transaction if it had been informed of the facts.

A The district judge accepted these arguments. In respect of the common law claims for breach of contract and negligence she gave summary judgment for damages to be assessed. This was apparently on the basis that the judgment would leave it open to the defendant to contend that no loss was caused by the breach.

The district judge also gave summary judgment for the society for breach of trust for the sum of £59,000 less the sums received by the society B on the sale of the property, and this was affirmed by the judge, who was satisfied that there was no question or issue to be tried in the action and dismissed the appeal.

The course of the appeal

C In the course of the appeal the defendant submitted that, by consenting to the registration of the second charge, the society waived the breaches of which complaint is made; and that this raises a triable issue on liability which entitles him to unconditional leave to defend in relation to all the pleaded causes of action. In the absence of any evidence or reason to suppose that the society was aware of the date of the second charge when it gave its consent to its registration, I am not persuaded that there is a D triable issue on waiver, and I would not disturb the order below on this ground.

When the appeal was first argued before us it was still conceded by the society that it could not recover damages at common law for breach of contract or negligence unless it could show that it would not have proceeded with the mortgage advance if it had been informed of the facts. E The society, however, maintained that it could escape this principle because the defendant was also guilty of a breach of trust and that common law rules of causation and remoteness of damage have no application in such a case. The critical questions, therefore, appeared to be whether the defendant was guilty of a breach of trust or fiduciary duty and if so whether the society needed to prove that it would not still have proceeded with the transaction if it had been told of the facts.

F After we had reserved judgment on the appeal, however, the society informed us that it wished to resile from its concession. Relying on the recent decision of this court in Downs v. Chappell [1997] 1 W.L.R. 426, the society submitted that it was entitled to recover the whole of its net loss on the transaction by way of damages for negligence at common law without having to establish that it would not have proceeded with the G transaction if it had been informed of the facts. If correct, it submitted, this would be determinative of the case, and it would not be necessary for the society to rely on any breach of trust or fiduciary duty. Before the defendant's advisers could respond to this, speeches were delivered in the House of Lords in Banque Bruxelles Lambert S.A. v. Eagle Star Insurance Co. Ltd. [1997] A.C. 191. These were relevant to the common law position. For the reasons given by Staughton L.J., however, we decided that it was H not necessary to restore the appeal for further argument. This was because the assessment of damages at common law is still pending. They will have to be assessed in conformity with the decision of the House of Lords in Banque Bruxelles Lambert S.A. v. Eagle Star Insurance Co. Ltd. and not with any gloss which, in the absence of argument, we may inadvertently have put upon that decision.

The claims at common law

The society has served a respondent's notice, in which it contends that it is entitled to judgment for the sum claimed, and not merely for damages to be assessed, in respect of its common law claims. If this is correct, then the society does not need to establish that the defendant was guilty of a breach of trust or fiduciary duty.

This question depends upon an alleged difference between the tests of causation and remoteness of damage at common law and in equity. In a case of the present kind, however, two different questions of causation are involved and it is necessary to distinguish between them. Where a plaintiff claims that he has suffered loss by entering into a transaction as a result of negligent advice or information provided by the defendant, the first question is whether the plaintiff can establish that the defendant's negligence caused him to enter into the transaction. If he cannot his claim must fail. But even if he can, it is not sufficient for him to establish that the transaction caused him loss. He must still show what (if any) part of his loss is attributable to the defendant's negligence. This is usually treated as a question of the measure of damages rather than causation, and for convenience I shall so treat it in this judgment, but it must be acknowledged that it involves questions of causation.

In Downs v. Chappell [1997] 1 W.L.R. 426 the plaintiffs bought a small business in reliance on trading figures contained in a letter from the vendor's accountants which was forwarded to them by the vendor. The vendor knew that the figures contained in the letter were false. The plaintiffs sued the vendor for deceit and the accountants for negligence. The judge accepted the plaintiffs' evidence that they would not have contracted to purchase the business without verification of the figures by the accountants. But he was not satisfied that they would not still have bought the business even if the correct figures had been supplied, and dismissed the action against both defendants.

This court allowed the plaintiffs' appeal against both defendants. Hobhouse L.J. gave the only reasoned judgment. In relation to the vendor, he pointed out that for a plaintiff to succeed in the tort of deceit it was necessary for him to prove (1) a fraudulent representation, (2) materiality and (3) inducement. All three elements had been proved. The judge had found that the representations did induce the plaintiffs to enter into the transaction: they would not have done so without them. This was sufficient proof of causation. Whether the plaintiffs would have entered into the transaction if they had been told the truth was irrelevant.

We are not concerned with this part of the decision, since the present case is not one of fraud. But Hobhouse L.J. held that the position was the same in relation to the accountants, who were charged with negligence only. Here the question was not inducement but reliance. The relevant question was simply whether the plaintiffs had entered into the contract in reliance upon the figures contained in the accountants' letter. The judge had answered that question in the affirmative: the plaintiffs would not have entered into the contract if they had not been provided with the letter. The causal relationship between the accountants' negligence and the plaintiffs' purchase was established. It was not necessary to consider whether the plaintiffs would have purchased the business if they had been supplied with the correct figures.

In the present case the society's claim is not for misrepresentation. Accordingly, questions of inducement and materiality are not relevant. Its claim lies in negligence, and the relevant concept is reliance. In considering the issue of causation in an action for negligence brought by a client against his solicitor it appears from Downs v. Chappell that it is necessary to distinguish between two different kinds of case.

Where a client sues his solicitor for having negligently failed to give him proper advice, he must show what advice should have been given and (on a balance of probabilities) that if such advice had been given he would not have entered into the relevant transaction or would not have entered into it on the terms he did. The same applies where the client's complaint is that the solicitor failed in his duty to give him material information. In Sykes v. Midland Bank Executor and Trustee Co. Ltd. [1971] 1 Q.B. 113, which was concerned with a failure to give proper advice, the plaintiff was unable to establish this and his claim to damages for negligence failed. In Mortgage Express Ltd. v. Bowerman & Partners [1996] 2 All E.R. 836, which was concerned with a failure to convey information, the plaintiff was able to establish that if it had been given the information it would have withdrawn from the transaction and its claim succeeded.

Where, however, a client sues his solicitor for having negligently given him incorrect advice or for having negligently given him incorrect information, the position appears to be different. In such a case it is sufficient for the plaintiff to prove that he relied on the advice or information, that is to say, that he would not have acted as he did if he had not been given such advice or information. It is not necessary for him to prove that he would not have acted as he did if he had been given the proper advice or the correct information. This was the position in Downs v. Chappell [1997] 1 W.L.R. 426.

In the present case the society makes complaints of both kinds. It alleges that the defendant negligently and in breach of his instructions failed to report the purchasers' proposed arrangements with the bank prior to completion. This is a claim of the first kind, and if it were all the society would have to establish that if it had been informed of those arrangements it would not have proceeded with the mortgage advance. But the defendant went further than this. He did not merely fail to report the arrangements to the society; he expressly represented to the society that no such arrangements existed. That brings the case within the second category. It follows from the decision of this court in Downs v. Chappell that it is sufficient for the society to prove that it relied on the representations in the report. Although the judge spoke in terms of inducement, he plainly found reliance. The society's procedures were designed to ensure that no cheque would be issued in the absence of a satisfactory report from its solicitor.

In my judgment we are bound by the decision in Downs v. Chappell to hold that the necessary causal link between the defendant's negligence and the mortgage advance was proved.

Measure of damages

A

It does not, however, follow from the fact that the defendant's negligent statements caused the society to make the mortgage advance that the whole of the society's loss is attributable to his negligence. Having regard to the date of the advance, some part at least of the society's loss may well be attributable to the fall in property values which had occurred by the time that it was able to sell the property.

B

In Banque Bruxelles Lambert S.A. v. Eagle Star Insurance Co. Ltd. [1997] A.C. 191 the House of Lords ruled definitively on the correct measure of damages for the negligent provision of information on which the plaintiff relied in entering into a transaction from which loss resulted. The only speech was delivered by Lord Hoffmann. He distinguished between the measure of damages for (1) breach of a contractual warranty and (2) breach of a duty (whether contractual or tortious) to take care (i) to give proper advice and (ii) to provide accurate information.

C

In the case of breach of warranty, the comparison is between the plaintiff's position as a result of entering into the transaction and what it would have been if the facts had been as warranted. The measure of damages is the extent to which the plaintiff would have been better off if the information had been right. In the case of a breach of duty to take care the measure of damages is the extent to which the plaintiff is worse off because the information was wrong. Since he entered into the transaction in reliance on the advice or information given to him by the defendant, the starting point is to compare his position as a result of entering into the transaction with what it would have been if he had not entered into the transaction at all.

D

But that is only the starting point. Lord Hoffmann distinguished between a duty to advise someone as to what course of action he should take and a duty to provide information for the purpose of enabling someone else to decide upon his course of action. In the former case, the defendant is liable for all the foreseeable consequences of the action being taken. In the latter case, however, he is responsible only for the consequences of the information being wrong. The measure of damages is not necessarily the full amount of the loss which the plaintiff has suffered by having entered into the transaction but only that part if any of such loss as is properly attributable to the inaccuracy of the information. If the plaintiff would have suffered the same loss even if the facts had actually been as represented the defendant is not liable.

Accordingly, in this class of case the plaintiff must prove two things: first, that he has suffered loss; and, secondly, that the loss fell within the scope of the duty he was owed. In the present case the society must prove what (if any) loss was occasioned by the arrangements which the purchasers had made with the bank.

G

The society was told that Mr. and Mrs. Towers had no other indebtedness and that no second charge was contemplated. The existence of the second charge did not affect the society's security. The absence of any indebtedness to the bank would not have put money in the purchasers' pocket; it would merely have reduced their liabilities. Whether their liability to the bank affected their ability to make mortgage repayments to the society has yet to be established, but given the smallness of the liability its effect on the purchasers' ability to meet their obligations to the society may have been negligible. It may even be, for example, that the purchasers made no payments at all to the bank at the relevant time, and if so it is difficult to see how any part of the loss suffered by the society can be attributable to the inaccuracy of the information supplied to it by the defendant. It would have occurred even if the information had been correct.

Conclusion

The society has proved the causal link between the defendant's negligence and the making of the mortgage advance but it has not yet established the amount of its loss (if any) which is properly attributable to the defendant's negligence. Damages remain to be assessed. We are bound by the decision of this court in Downs v. Chappell [1997] 1 W.L.R. 426 to hold that the society will not have to prove that it would not have made the mortgage advance if it had known the true facts; but it will be required to establish what it has lost as a result of the existence of the second charge and the purchasers' indebtedness to the bank. It can maintain the money judgment which it has obtained below only if it can invoke equitable principles.

The claims in equity

The judge's reasoning

The judge found that, in the events which happened, the defendant committed a breach of trust by applying the mortgage advance in the purchase of the property, that he was accordingly liable to restore the trust property, viz. the £59,000 with interest less receipts, that no question of damages at common law or of compensation for loss arose, and that it was irrelevant whether, had it been told of the position, the society might still have chosen to make the advance notwithstanding the arrangements which had been made with the bank. Accordingly the judge concluded that there was no question or issue to be tried in the action and gave summary judgment for the whole of the society's claim.

The judge's conclusion that the defendant had committed a breach of trust in applying the mortgage advance in the purchase of the property was based on the fact that he had obtained payment of the mortgage advance by misrepresentation. The judge said:

> "it seems to me beyond argument that [the defendant] received the cheque . . . for £59,000 as a direct result of the misleading report which he had supplied to the society on 2 August 1988. The money was paid to the defendant . . . as a result of a misrepresentation made to the society by the defendant. . . . The effect, in my judgment, was that from the moment when [the] cheque for £59,000 was received by [the defendant] he held it upon a constructive trust to return it forthwith to the society, unless authorised by the society to retain, or dispose of, it after a full knowledge of the facts had been disclosed." (My emphasis.)

In the judge's opinion it necessarily followed that the defendant's subsequent application of the mortgage money in the purchase of the property constituted a breach of trust. He said:

> "In making that payment there is, in my view, no doubt that the defendant acted in breach of the trust which had been imposed upon him by the circumstances in which he had received the society's cheque. That trust required him to return the £59,000 to the society. Any payment of that £59,000 to a third party, albeit to the vendors of the property, was a breach of that trust."

The judge dismissed the submission that the society had to establish that it would not have made the advance if it had known the facts. He said:

> "But that point affords no defence to the [society]'s claim. It is nihil ad rem that if the true position had been disclosed to the society, the society might or might not have issued an amended offer of advance. Liability to repay arises in this case because [the defendant] received money from the society as a result of his own misrepresentation. He cannot be heard to say that he could retain that money against the society, or dispose of it to the vendors, because, in other circumstances, the society might have chosen to make the advance notwithstanding the borrowing from [the bank]."

The judge did not explain why the consequence of the defendant's misrepresentation was that he held the mortgage advance on a constructive trust for the society, or why the defendant's authority to apply the money in accordance with the society's instructions was determined, but he took the opportunity to do so when he revisited these questions a few months later in Bristol and West Building Society v. May May & Merrimans [1996] 2 All E.R. 801 after two county court judges had declined to follow his decision in the present case. The later case involved a number of transactions in which the same society had made mortgage advances and suffered loss when the borrowers defaulted which it sought to recover from the solicitors who had acted for both parties to the lending transactions. In some cases the solicitor knew nothing, prior to the receipt of the cheque for the mortgage advance, which ought to have led him to qualify his report, though he discovered the facts afterwards and before he disbursed the money on completion. In other cases the solicitor's breach of his instructions preceded his receipt of the mortgage advance, as it did in the present case.

The judge distinguished between the two groups of cases. In relation to the first group he reluctantly felt compelled by the decision in Target Holdings Ltd. v. Redferns [1996] A.C. 421 to conclude that, at least for the purpose of an application for summary judgment, it was necessary for the society to show that it would not have proceeded with the transaction if it had known the facts. In relation to the second group, however, where the society paid the cheque for the mortgage advance to the solicitor in response to a request based upon a warranty or representation which (as the judge put it) the solicitor "knew or must be taken to have known" to be misleading, he confirmed his previous decision in the present case. He held that the society was entitled to succeed in such cases whether or not it would have still made the advance if it had known the facts.

In the course of his judgment the judge explained how the constructive trust in question arose. It was, he said, because the solicitor had given misleading information to his client. This constituted a breach of fiduciary duty which enabled the court to impose a constructive trust on the property acquired as a result of the breach of duty. He said [1996] 2 All E.R. 801, 818:

> "where moneys have been received by the solicitor from the society following a request based upon a warranty or representation which he knew, or must be taken to have known, to be misleading in some material respect, equity will give a remedy in respect of any loss which the society may suffer as a result of its payment in reliance upon that request. That will be a remedy based upon breach of fiduciary duty and may, where necessary, take the form of the imposition of a constructive trust on those moneys to enforce the solicitor's obligation to return them to the society forthwith. The constructive trust imposed by equity to enforce the obligation to make immediate restitution overrides any express or implied trust which might otherwise arise out of any instructions given by [the society] when the money is paid to the solicitor. No reliance can be placed on . . . those instructions, because they are vitiated by the breach of duty by which they were obtained. . . . In the absence of some fresh instructions, given by the society after full disclosure of the matters in respect of which it has been misled, the only course properly open to the solicitor is to repay the moneys to the society with interest."

The judge evidently considered himself to be imposing a remedial constructive trust as the appropriate remedy for a prior breach of fiduciary duty.

The judge's references to the solicitor having made a representation which "he knew, or must be taken as having known" to be misleading is not an accurate description of the facts of the present case. It is not alleged that the defendant "knew or must be taken to have known" the facts, but only that he "knew or ought to have known" them, which is a very different matter. In explaining his decision in the present case the judge said that the defendant's misrepresentation could not be described as innocent because he "clearly had the knowledge which made the representation false:" see [1996] 2 All E.R. 801, 832. That confuses knowledge with the means of knowledge. On the society's pleaded case the defendant must be taken to have known the facts at one time but to have forgotten or overlooked them so that they were not present to his mind when he came to complete his report to the society.

It is not alleged that the defendant deliberately concealed the arrangements which the purchasers had made with their bank from the society or that he consciously intended to mislead it. Nothing in this judgment is intended to apply to such a case. My observations are confined to the case like the present where the provision of incorrect information by a solicitor to his client must be taken to have been due to an oversight. In such a case his breach of duty is unconscious; he will ex hypothesi be unaware of the fact that he has committed a breach of his instructions; and if this means that his subsequent application of the mortgage money constitutes a breach of trust then it will be a breach of a trust of which he is unaware. I would not willingly treat such conduct as involving a breach of trust or misapplication of trust money unless compelled by authority to do so, and in my judgment neither principle nor authority compels such a conclusion.

Before us the defendant submits that, while he was guilty of negligence and breach of contract, he was not guilty of a breach of trust or fiduciary duty. It is convenient to take first the question of fiduciary duty, and then to consider the question of breach of trust.

Breach of fiduciary duty

Despite the warning given by Fletcher Moulton L.J. in In re Coomber; Coomber v. Coomber [1911] 1 Ch. 723, 728, this branch of the law has been bedevilled by unthinking resort to verbal formulae. It is therefore necessary to begin by defining one's terms. The expression "fiduciary duty" is properly confined to those duties which are peculiar to fiduciaries and the breach of which attracts legal consequences differing from those consequent upon the breach of other duties. Unless the expression is so limited it is lacking in practical utility. In this sense it is obvious that not every breach of duty by a fiduciary is a breach of fiduciary duty. I would endorse the observations of Southin J. in Girardet v. Crease & Co. (1987) 11 B.C.L.R. (2d) 361, 362:

> "The word 'fiduciary' is flung around now as if it applied to all breaches of duty by solicitors, directors of companies and so forth. . . . That a lawyer can commit a breach of the special duty [of a fiduciary] . . . by entering into a contract with the client without full disclosure . . . and so forth is clear. But to say that simple carelessness in giving advice is such a breach is a perversion of words."

These remarks were approved by La Forest J. in LAC Minerals Ltd. v. International Corona Resources Ltd. (1989) 61 D.L.R. (4th) 14, 28 where he said: "not every legal claim arising out of a relationship with fiduciary incidents will give rise to a claim for breach of fiduciary duty."

It is similarly inappropriate to apply the expression to the obligation of a trustee or other fiduciary to use proper skill and care in the discharge of his duties. If it is confined to cases where the fiduciary nature of the duty has special legal consequences, then the fact that the source of the duty is to be found in equity rather than the common law does not make it a fiduciary duty. The common law and equity each developed the duty of care, but they did so independently of each other and the standard of care required is not always the same. But they influenced each other, and today the substance of the resulting obligations is more significant than their particular historic origin. In Henderson v. Merrett Syndicates Ltd. [1995] 2 A.C. 145, 205 Lord Browne-Wilkinson said:

> "The liability of a fiduciary for the negligent transaction of his duties is not a separate head of liability but the paradigm of the general duty to act with care imposed by law on those who take it upon themselves to act for or advise others. Although the historical development of the rules of law and equity have, in the past, caused different labels to be stuck on different manifestations of the duty, in truth the duty of care imposed on bailees, carriers, trustees, directors, agents and others is the same duty: it arises from the circumstances in which the defendants were acting, not from their status or description. It is the fact that they have all assumed responsibility for the property or affairs of others which renders them liable for the careless performance of what they have undertaken to do, not the description of the trade or position which they hold."

I respectfully agree, and endorse the comment of Ipp J. in Permanent Building Society v. Wheeler (1994) 14 A.C.S.R. 109, 157:

"It is essential to bear in mind that the existence of a fiduciary relationship does not mean that every duty owed by a fiduciary to the beneficiary is a fiduciary duty. In particular, a trustee's duty to exercise reasonable care, though equitable, is not specifically a fiduciary duty . . ."

Ipp J. explained, at p. 158:

"The director's duty to exercise care and skill has nothing to do with any position of disadvantage or vulnerability on the part of the company. It is not a duty that stems from the requirements of trust and confidence imposed on a fiduciary. In my opinion, that duty is not a fiduciary duty, although it is a duty actionable in the equitable jurisdiction of this court. . . . I consider that Hamilton owed P.B.S. a duty, both in law and in equity, to exercise reasonable care and skill, and P.B.S. was able to mount a claim against him for breach of the legal duty, and, in the alternative, breach of the equitable duty. For the reasons I have expressed, in my view the equitable duty is not to be equated with or termed a 'fiduciary' duty."

I agree. Historical support for this analysis may be found in Viscount Haldane L.C.'s speech in Nocton v. Lord Ashburton [1914] A.C. 932, 956. Discussing the old bill in Chancery for equitable compensation for breach of fiduciary duty, he said that he thought it probable that a demurrer for want of equity would always have lain to a bill which did no more than seek to enforce a claim for damages for negligence against a solicitor.

In my judgment this is not just a question of semantics. It goes to the very heart of the concept of breach of fiduciary duty and the availability of equitable remedies.

Although the remedy which equity makes available for breach of the equitable duty of skill and care is equitable compensation rather than damages, this is merely the product of history and in this context is in my opinion a distinction without a difference. Equitable compensation for breach of the duty of skill and care resembles common law damages in that it is awarded by way of compensation to the plaintiff for his loss. There is no reason in principle why the common law rules of causation, remoteness of damage and measure of damages should not be applied by analogy in such a case. It should not be confused with equitable compensation for breach of fiduciary duty, which may be awarded in lieu of rescission or specific restitution.

This leaves those duties which are special to fiduciaries and which attract those remedies which are peculiar to the equitable jurisdiction and are primarily restitutionary or restorative rather than compensatory. A fiduciary is someone who has undertaken to act for or on behalf of another in a particular matter in circumstances which give rise to a relationship of trust and confidence. The distinguishing obligation of a fiduciary is the obligation of loyalty. The principal is entitled to the single-minded loyalty of his fiduciary. This core liability has several facets. A fiduciary must act in good faith; he must not make a profit out of his trust; he must not place himself in a position where his duty and his interest may conflict; he may not act for his own benefit or the benefit of a third person without the informed consent of his principal. This is not intended to be an exhaustive list, but it is sufficient to indicate the nature of fiduciary obligations. They are the defining characteristics of the fiduciary. As Dr. Finn pointed out in his classic work Fiduciary Obligations (1977), p. 2, he is not subject to fiduciary obligations because he is a fiduciary; it is because he is subject to them that he is a fiduciary.

(In this survey I have left out of account the situation where the fiduciary deals with his principal. In such a case he must prove affirmatively that the transaction is fair and that in the course of the negotiations he made full disclosure of all facts material to the transaction. Even inadvertent failure to disclose will entitle the principal to rescind the transaction. The rule is the same whether the fiduciary is acting on his own behalf or on behalf of another. The principle need not be further considered because it does not arise in the present case. The mortgage advance was negotiated directly between the society and the purchasers. The defendant had nothing to do with the negotiations. He was instructed by the society to carry out on its behalf a transaction which had already been agreed.)

The nature of the obligation determines the nature of the breach. The various obligations of a fiduciary merely reflect different aspects of his core duties of loyalty and fidelity. Breach of fiduciary obligation, therefore, connotes disloyalty or infidelity. Mere incompetence is not enough. A servant who loyally does his incompetent best for his master is not unfaithful and is not guilty of a breach of fiduciary duty.

In the present case it is clear that, if the defendant had been acting for the society alone, his admitted negligence would not have exposed him to a charge of breach of fiduciary duty. Before us counsel for the society accepted as much, but insisted that the fact that he also acted for the purchasers made all the difference. So it is necessary to ask: "Why did the fact that the defendant was acting for the purchasers as well as for the society convert the defendant's admitted breach of his duty of skill and care into a breach of fiduciary duty?" To answer this question it is necessary to identify the fiduciary obligation of which he is alleged to have been in breach.

It is at this point, in my judgment, that the society's argument runs into difficulty. A fiduciary who acts for two principals with potentially conflicting interests without the informed consent of both is in breach of the obligation of undivided loyalty; he puts himself in a position where his duty to one principal may conflict with his duty to the other: see Clark

Boyce v. Mouat [1994] 1 A.C. 428 and the cases there cited. This is sometimes described as "the double employment rule." Breach of the rule automatically constitutes a breach of fiduciary duty. But this is not something of which the society can complain. It knew that the defendant was acting for the purchasers when it instructed him. Indeed, that was the very reason why it chose the defendant to act for it. The potential conflict was of the society's own making: see Finn, Fiduciary Obligations, p. 254 and Kelly v. Cooper [1993] A.C. 205.

It was submitted on behalf of the society that this is irrelevant because the defendant misled the society. It did not know of the arrangements which the purchasers had made with their bank, and so could not be said to be "fully informed" for the purpose of absolving the defendant from the operation of the double employment rule. The submission is misconceived. The society knew all the facts relevant to its choice of solicitor. Its decision to forward the cheque for the mortgage advance to the defendant and to instruct him to proceed was based on false information, but its earlier decision to employ the defendant despite the potentially conflicting interest of his other clients was a fully informed decision.

That, of course, is not the end of the matter. Even if a fiduciary is properly acting for two principals with potentially conflicting interests he must act in good faith in the interests of each and must not act with the intention of furthering the interests of one principal to the prejudice of those of the other: see Finn, p. 48. I shall call this "the duty of good faith." But it goes further than this. He must not allow the performance of his obligations to one principal to be influenced by his relationship with the other. He must serve each as faithfully and loyally as if he were his only principal.

Conduct which is in breach of this duty need not be dishonest but it must be intentional. An unconscious omission which happens to benefit one principal at the expense of the other does not constitute a breach of fiduciary duty, though it may constitute a breach of the duty of skill and care. This is because the principle which is in play is that the fiduciary must not be inhibited by the existence of his other employment from serving the interests of his principal as faithfully and effectively as if he were the only employer. I shall call this "the no inhibition principle." Unless the fiduciary is inhibited or believes (whether rightly or wrongly) that he is inhibited in the performance of his duties to one principal by reason of his employment by the other his failure to act is not attributable to the double employment.

Finally, the fiduciary must take care not to find himself in a position where there is an actual conflict of duty so that he cannot fulfil his obligations to one principal without failing in his obligations to the other: see Moody v. Cox and Hatt [1917] 2 Ch. 71; Commonwealth Bank of Australia v. Smith (1991) 102 A.L.R. 453. If he does, he may have no alternative but to cease to act for at least one and preferably both. The fact that he cannot fulfil his obligations to one principal without being in breach of his obligations to the other will not absolve him from liability. I shall call this "the actual conflict rule."

In the present case the judge evidently thought that the defendant was in breach of both the duty of good faith and the actual conflict rule. In Bristol and West Building Society v. May May & Merrimans [1996] 2 All E.R. 801, 817–818 he said:

> "there can be no doubt that the requirement of unconscionable conduct is present where a solicitor who is acting for both borrower and lender misrepresents to the lender some fact which he knows, or must be taken to know, will or may affect the lender's decision to proceed with the loan. In those circumstances the solicitor is abusing his fiduciary relationship with one client, the lender, to obtain an advantage for his other client, the borrower. It is as much 'against the dictates of conscience' for a solicitor knowingly to prefer the interests of one client over those of another client as it is for him to prefer his own interests over those of his client." (My emphasis.)

I respectfully agree; but no such allegation is made in the present case.

As to the actual conflict rule, the judge said, at p. 832:

> "First, in Mothew, the 'agent' was a fiduciary who had put himself in a position in which his duty to the lender was in conflict with the interests of his other client, the borrower." (My emphasis.)

I do not accept this. By instructing him to act for them, the purchasers must be taken to have authorised the defendant to complete the report without which the mortgage advance would not have been forthcoming; and to complete it truthfully. The defendant was required by the society to report on the purchasers' title as well as to confirm the absence of any further borrowing. The two stood in exactly the same case. The defendant would not have been in breach of his duty to the purchasers if he had disclosed the facts to the society any more than if he had reported a defect in their title.

This proposition can be tested by considering what the defendant's position would have been if he had acted for the purchasers and another solicitor had been instructed to act for the society. He would have been required to deduce the purchasers' title to the satisfaction of the society's solicitor, and to confirm to him that no further borrowing or second charge was in contemplation. His duty to the purchasers would have required him to ascertain the facts from them and to report them to the society. Unless they told him the facts and instructed him to lie to the society, instructions which he would be bound to refuse, his duty to the purchasers would not inhibit him in providing full and truthful information to the solicitor acting for the society.

In my judgment, the defendant was never in breach of the actual conflict rule. It is not alleged that he acted in bad faith or that he deliberately withheld information because he wrongly believed that his duty to the purchasers required him to do so. He was not guilty of a breach of fiduciary duty.

The judge relied on Nocton v. Lord Ashburton [1914] A.C. 932 and Commonwealth Bank of Australia v. Smith, 102 A.L.R. 453 to hold that a party who pays money to his solicitor in reliance on a representation known by the solicitor to be false has a remedy for breach of fiduciary duty. Neither case is authority for the proposition (though its correctness is not in issue); certainly neither is authority for the proposition that a party who pays money to a solicitor in reliance on a representation which the solicitor ought to have known to be false has such a remedy.

In Nocton v. Lord Ashburton [1914] A.C. 932 a solicitor had an undisclosed personal interest in a transaction on which he gave his client advice which was to his own advantage and the disadvantage of his client. The plaintiff pleaded breach of the duty of good faith. In fact this was unnecessary; the existence of the defendant's undisclosed interest was enough: see Lewis v. Hillman (1852) 3 H.L.Cas. 607. The plaintiff was entitled to receive, and thought that he was receiving, the disinterested advice of a solicitor with no other interest in the transaction. Commonwealth Bank of Australia v. Smith, 102 A.L.R. 453 involved a breach of the actual conflict rule. The defendant, who was acting for both parties to a proposed transaction, placed himself in an impossible position by undertaking to advise one of them on the merits of the transaction.

In Moody v. Cox and Hatt [1917] 2 Ch. 71 a solicitor, who was acting for both vendor and purchaser, was in possession of valuations which showed that the property was not worth the price which the purchaser had agreed to pay. He did not disclose them to the purchaser, and claimed that his duty to the vendor precluded him from doing so. The purchaser was allowed to rescind. The case bears a superficial resemblance to the present but there are two crucial differences: (i) the vendor was under no obligation to disclose the valuations to the purchaser and did not wish his solicitor do so; and (ii) the vendor and the solicitor tacitly agreed to conceal the valuations from the purchaser. The solicitor was in breach of both the duty of good faith and the actual conflict rule; his defence fell foul of the no inhibition principle.

That was a case of deliberate concealment. Non-disclosure and concealment are two very different things. This has been a truism of the law from the time of Cicero (De Officiis, lib. 3, c. 12, 13 citing Diogenes of Babylon). It is even enshrined, like other such truisms, in a Latin tag: aliud est celare, aliud tacere.

The society placed much reliance on a dictum by Lord Jauncey of Tullichettle in Clark Boyce v. Mouat [1994] 1 A.C. 428, 437 where he said:

> "Another case of breach [of fiduciary duty] is where a solicitor acts for both parties to a transaction without disclosing this to one of them or where having disclosed it he fails, unbeknown to one party, to disclose to that party material facts relative to the other party of which he is aware." (My emphasis.)

But I do not think that Lord Jauncey meant to include an inadvertent failure which owes nothing to the double employment. Where such failure is to the advantage of the other party, the court will jealously scrutinise the facts to ensure that there has been nothing more than inadvertence, but there can be no justification for treating an unconscious failure as demonstrating a want of fidelity.

In my judgment the distinction drawn by Ipp J. in Permanent Building Society v. Wheeler, 14 A.C.S.R. 109 is sound in principle and is decisive of the present case. On the society's pleaded case the fact that the defendant was acting for the purchasers played no part in his failure to report the true state of affairs to the society. It did not inhibit him from fulfilling his obligations to the society. It is consistent with its pleaded case that the defendant would have done so but for a negligent oversight. It would have been exactly the same if he had failed to notice and report the existence of a defect in the purchasers' title. To characterise either such failure as a breach of fiduciary duty because he was acting for both parties in a situation where that fact did not contribute to his failure is, in my opinion, to substitute a verbal formula for principle.

In my judgment the judge's conclusion that the defendant was in breach of fiduciary duty cannot be supported. It follows that it cannot be sustained as a ground for holding the defendant in breach of a constructive trust of the mortgage money.

Breach of trust

It is not disputed that from the time of its receipt by the defendant the mortgage money was trust money. It was client's money which belonged to the society and was properly paid into a client account. The defendant never claimed any beneficial interest in the money which remained throughout the property of the society in equity. The defendant held it in trust for the society but with the society's authority (and instructions) to apply it in the completion of the transaction of purchase and mortgage of the property. Those instructions were revocable but, unless previously revoked, the defendant was entitled and bound to act in accordance with them.

The society's instructions were not revoked before the defendant acted on them, and in my judgment there was no ground upon which the judge could properly conclude that his authority to apply the money in completing the transaction had determined.

If his judgment in the present case is considered without the benefit of his later explanation in Bristol and West Building Society v. May May & Merrimans [1996] 2 All E.R. 801, it would appear that the judge was of opinion that the defendant's authority to deal with the money was automatically vitiated by the fact that it (and the cheque itself) was obtained by misrepresentation. But that is contrary to principle. Misrepresentation makes a transaction voidable not void. It gives the representee the right to elect whether to rescind or affirm the transaction. The representor cannot anticipate his decision. Unless and until the representee elects to rescind the representor remains fully bound. The defendant's misrepresentations merely gave the society the right to elect to withdraw from the transaction on discovering the truth. Since its instructions to the defendant were revocable in any case, this did not materially alter the position so far as he was concerned, though it may have strengthened the society's position in relation to the purchasers.

The right to rescind for misrepresentation is an equity. Until it is exercised the beneficial interest in any property transferred in reliance on the representation remains vested in the transferee. In El Ajou v. Dollar

Land Holdings Plc. [1993] 3 All E.R. 717, 734 I suggested that on rescission the equitable title might revest in the representee retrospectively at least to the extent necessary to support an equitable tracing claim. I was concerned to circumvent the supposed rule that there must be a fiduciary relationship or retained beneficial interest before resort may be had to the equitable tracing rules. The rule would have been productive of the most extraordinary anomalies in that case, and its existence continually threatens to frustrate attempts to develop a coherent law of restitution. Until the equitable tracing rules are made available in support of the ordinary common law claim for money had and received some problems will remain incapable of sensible resolution.

But all that is by the way. Whether or not there is a retrospective vesting for tracing purposes it is clear that on rescission the equitable title does not revest retrospectively so as to cause an application of trust money which was properly authorised when made to be afterwards treated as a breach of trust. In Lipkin Gorman v. Karpnale Ltd. [1991] 2 A.C. 548 Lord Goff of Chieveley said, at p. 573:

> "Of course, 'tracing' or 'following' property into its product involves a decision by the owner of the original property to assert his title to the product in place of his original property. This is sometimes referred to as ratification. I myself would not so describe it, but it has, in my opinion, at least one feature in common with ratification, that it cannot be relied upon so as to render an innocent recipient a wrongdoer (cf. Bolton Partners v. Lambert (1889) 41 Ch.D. 295, 307, per Cotton L.J.: 'an act lawful at the time of its performance [cannot] be rendered unlawful, by the application of the doctrine of ratification.')"

In Westdeutsche Landesbank Girozentrale v. Islington London Borough Council [1996] A.C. 669 Lord Browne-Wilkinson expressly rejected the possibility that a recipient of trust money could be personally liable, regardless of fault, for any subsequent payment away of the moneys to third parties even though, at the date of such payment, he was ignorant of the existence of any trust. He said, at p. 705:

> "Since the equitable jurisdiction to enforce trusts depends upon the conscience of the holder of the legal interest being affected, he cannot be a trustee of the property if and so long as he is ignorant of the facts alleged to affect his conscience, i.e. until he is aware that he is intended to hold the property for the benefit of others in the case of an express or implied trust, or, in the case of a constructive trust, of the factors which are alleged to affect his conscience."

Mutatis mutandis that passage is directly applicable in the present case. The defendant knew that he was a trustee of the money for the society; but he did not realise that he had misled the society and could not know that his authority to complete had determined (if indeed it had). He could not be bound to repay the money to the society so long as he was ignorant of the facts which had brought his authority to an end, for those are the facts which are alleged to affect his conscience and subject him to an obligation to return the money to the society.

Before us the society put forward a more sophisticated argument. The defendant's instructions, it pointed out, expressly required him to report the arrangements in question "to the society prior to completion." This, it was submitted, made it a condition of the defendant's authority to complete that he had complied with his obligation. Whether he knew it or not, he had no authority to complete. It was not necessary for the society to revoke his authority or withdraw from the transaction. I do not accept this. The society's standing instructions did not clearly make the defendant's authority to complete conditional on having complied with his instructions. Whether they did so or not is, of course, a question of construction, and it is possible that the society could adopt instructions which would have this effect. But it would in my judgment require very clear wording to produce so inconvenient and impractical a result. No solicitor could safely accept such instructions, for he could never be certain that he was entitled to complete.

In my judgment the defendant's authority to apply the mortgage money in the completion of the purchase was not conditional on his having first complied with his contractual obligations to the society, was not vitiated by the misrepresentations for which he was responsible but of which he was unaware, had not been revoked, and was effective to prevent his payment being a breach of trust. Given his state of knowledge (and, more importantly, that his authority had not been revoked), he had no choice but to complete.

Conclusion

In my judgment the defendant was not guilty of breach of trust or fiduciary duty. This makes it unnecessary to consider what the consequences of such a breach would have been. I would allow the appeal and set aside the money judgment. I would leave undisturbed the judgments for damages to be assessed for breach of contract and negligence, but make it clear that it does not follow that the society will establish any recoverable loss.

OTTON L.J. I have read with advantage the judgments of Staughton and Millett L.JJ. I agree with the analysis and reasoning regarding breach of trust and of fiduciary duty. I wish only to add a few words on the extant common law claims.

I am satisfied that there was sufficient evidence before the judge to establish negligence on the part of the defendant. There was the requisite proximity between the parties, and there was foreseeability of damage. Thus a duty of care arose. This duty included answering correctly such questions as were posed by the proposed lender and which it was reasonable for him to be required to answer. The answer sought was one of fact and not opinion. The fact sought could have been supplied accurately by information which was within his knowledge. If it was not at his fingertips the information was either on file or could easily have been obtained by direct inquiry of the intending purchaser. His breach of duty occurred when he conveyed the inaccurate information to the plaintiff. The duty was not simply a duty not to act carelessly; it was a duty not to inflict damage carelessly. Damage is the gist of the action.

A The more complex issues are whether the inaccurate information given was causative of damage, and if so what measure. To my mind it is not necessary to adopt a particular procedural path to find the answer. I appreciate that Lord Hoffmann suggests that it is first necessary to decide the kind of loss to which the plaintiff is entitled. This may be appropriate in most cases where negligence/causation is involved. From a practical point of view in some cases it may be more expedient to establish B the causal link between the negligent act or omission and the reliance by the plaintiff or the course of action which he was induced to take. The judge may find as a fact that there was no reliance or that the plaintiff would have behaved in the same or substantially the same manner if he had been given accurate information; in either event the negligence had no causative potency. That is the end of the matter. The chain is broken, C there is no loss at all and there is no need to consider or determine the kind of loss.

In other cases it may be appropriate to identify the type or particular head of damage claimed. This may identify damage which is too remote and for which no remedy lies (e.g. economic loss), and the claim in respect of it fails in limine. As I concur that the damages award must now be set aside the issue of the measure of damage, if any, is now at large. I regard D the evidence (in particular the hearsay evidence of Ms Samantha Bennett at paragraph 29 of Mr. Prees's affidavit) as falling short of resolving the issues of causation or damage. It does not (for example) address the possibility of a revised offer if the accurate and full position had been explained to the plaintiff.

I do not think it necessary to conclude whether there was a breach of E contract. This cause of action probably adds nothing to the case in negligence. It is unlikely that there is any practical difference between a breach of the duty of care and a breach of contract, or in the issues arising on causation, or the measure of damages. If there is any issue it can be determined by the trial judge. I also consider that there was no waiver.

For these reasons I consider that there are triable issues and they F should be determined by a judge at first instance.

I would therefore allow the appeal and remit the assessment of damages as proposed by Staughton L.J. and dismiss the respondent's notice.

STAUGHTON L.J. Mr. Mothew made his report to the Cheshunt G Building Society on 2 August 1988. In it he answered one of the questions asked as follows:

> "Q. Please confirm that (to the best of your knowledge and belief) the balance of the purchase money is being provided by the applicant(s) personally without resort to further borrowing. If not please give details. A. Confirmed."

H That was untrue. There were other aspects of the same error, but I need not go into them in detail. Although Mr. Mothew had the means of knowledge in his possession, which could have brought the error to his attention, it is not said that he acted fraudulently or in bad faith.

The ordinary remedy of a client who has received wrong information or advice from his solicitor is to claim damages for negligence, whether as a breach of contract or as a tort. For such a claim to give rise to substantial damages the building society would have to show that the breach of contract or negligence caused them loss. By their respondent's notice they seek to say that, if they had known the true facts, they would not have lent any money to Mr. and Mrs. Towers.

The judge regarded that point as immaterial, since the building society succeeded on other grounds. If it is material, in my opinion it raises a triable issue. According to Samantha Bennett of the society's advances department, the offer of advance would have immediately been withdrawn if the society had known that even £3,350 was being borrowed elsewhere. In the nature of things Mr. Mothew is unlikely to have evidence which directly controverts that statement. But there are grounds for supposing that it may be open to question. I would not give judgment under R.S.C., Ord. 14 on the basis that it is true. If it is critical, the case must go to trial, perhaps with the aid of interrogatories and discovery of documents.

However in this particular case the building society were not the sole clients of Mr. Mothew; he was also the solicitor acting for Mr. and Mrs. Towers. That is said to make all the difference, because Mr. Mothew then became under a fiduciary duty to the building society. And the argument is that for breach of fiduciary duty the remedy does not depend on causation or remoteness; all that is necessary is that the loss would not have occurred but for the breach of duty.

It seems to me wrong that a breach of contract or tort should become a breach of fiduciary duty in that way. I am glad to find that the authorities relied on by Millett L.J. show that it is wrong. In my judgment Mr. Mothew was in breach of a duty of care and nothing more. True he was in a situation where he owed duties to two clients, and those duties might conflict with each other. But he did not prefer the interest of one client to that of another; at most he was guilty of negligence which had that unintended effect.

Alternatively it is said that Mr. Mothew was in breach of trust because he paid away the trust fund contrary to his instructions. He did indeed hold the £59,000 in trust; it was not his own money. There was in my opinion an express or implied trust, and not (as the judge held) a constructive trust. But he did not pay it away contrary to the society's instructions. The cheque reached Mr. Mothew with a letter dated 23 August 1988, which in effect instructed him to use it for completion of the proposed purchase. That was what he did.

There being in my opinion no breach of fiduciary duty or breach of trust, it is unnecessary to consider what remedy such a breach might have afforded.

Thus far the appeal succeeds, but there remains judgment on the cause of action at common law for damages to be assessed. Mr. Sumption says that even that must go, since there is a triable issue as to waiver by the building society. The problem that he faces is that, although the building society readily agreed when they were asked to consent to the registration of the second charge, they are not shown to have known that the second charge was contemplated and intended at the time of Mr. Mothew's report. There has been ample opportunity to produce evidence that they knew, if indeed they did. In my judgment there was no waiver.

When the argument before us was concluded on 21 May that was all that we had to decide. But we have since been asked to consider the judgment of Hobhouse L.J. in Downs v. Chappell [1997] 1 W.L.R. 426 and the speech of Lord Hoffmann in Banque Bruxelles Lambert S.A. v. Eagle Star Insurance Co. Ltd. [1997] A.C. 191. Such has been the volume of litigation on the topic of loss to lenders following negligent professional advice and the collapse of the property market that judges risk being overtaken by new authority.

The Court of Appeal in the Banque Bruxelles case began with a reference to the well known principle that damages should be as nearly as possible the sum which would put the plaintiff in the position in which he would have been if he had not been injured. That would lead to two possible answers in the present case. (1) If there had been no report from Mr. Mothew to the building society, the money would not have been lent; the society would still have their £59,000. There would have been no transaction, a phrase which I use not as a label for anything but as a description of the fact. (2) If Mr. Mothew had provided an accurate report to the building society, then they might have been content to proceed on the terms previously proposed, or they might have made a revised offer, or they might have proceeded as in (1) above. There is a triable issue as to that. Left to myself, I would have ruled that (2) was the appropriate situation for the judge to consider in assessing the damages. But I have to acknowledge that Hobhouse L.J. in Downs v. Chappell [1997] 1 W.L.R. 426, with the agreement of Butler-Sloss and Roch L.JJ., preferred method (1), both for fraudulent misrepresentation and for negligence.

Lord Hoffmann, in the Banque Bruxelles case [1997] A.C. 191, 211, as it seems to me, considered that either method was the wrong place to begin:

> "Before one can consider the principle on which one should calculate the damages to which a plaintiff is entitled as compensation for loss, it is necessary to decide for what kind of loss he is entitled to compensation."

There follows an exposition of the problem and the answer to it, as set out in the judgment of Millett L.J.

For my part I feel that we should not at this stage purport to instruct the judge who has to assess the damages by a paraphrase or interpretation of that decision, for a number of reasons. First, we have not heard argument on it, and our judgment is already long delayed by intervening material. I am told it would be impractical for us to have a further hearing before October. Secondly, the judge has yet to find the facts relating to the assessment of damages. Thirdly, the judge must be guided by what Lord Hoffmann has said and not by any gloss of ours.

I would allow the appeal and remit the assessment of damages, either to Chadwick J. or to another judge of the Chancery Division as the exigencies of business may require. The cross-appeal should be dismissed.

Appeal allowed.
Cross-appeal dismissed.

TURNER v. STEVENAGE BOROUGH COUNCIL

1997 March 6 Staughton, Pill and Mummery L.JJ.

Arbitration—Arbitrator—Misconduct—Application to remove arbitrator—Lengthy correspondence and preliminary proceedings—Arbitrator proposing interim payment of fees and expenses—Payment by one party only—Subsequent return of payment—Whether misconduct—Whether arbitrator to be removed—Arbitration Act 1950 (14 & 15 Geo. 6, c. 27), s. 23

In February 1993 an arbitrator was appointed to conduct arbitration proceedings relating to a rent review between the council, as landlords of a shop, and the tenant. The arbitrator's terms of appointment contained no express provision for payment of interim fees or expenses. The parties contemplated that the arbitration would be concluded within about three months and the arbitrator stated that the award would be made by 30 June 1993. In May 1994, after lengthy correspondence and five preliminary hearings, the arbitration had still not concluded and the arbitrator wrote to both parties suggesting a timetable for the hearing and requesting payment by each party of half his interim fees and expenses. The tenant objected and asked whether, if payment were not made, the arbitrator would not hear the arbitration. The arbitrator replied that the first priority was to fix the hearing and to resolve the dispute, but that he hoped the parties would agree that it was reasonable that he should receive interim payment for time expended on the matter. The council paid the sum to the arbitrator, but three months later, after taking legal advice, he returned it. The tenant applied for the arbitrator to be removed for misconduct under section 23 of the Arbitration Act 1950[1] on the ground that he had no power to

House of Lords

Hurst v Bryk and others

2000 Jan 13; March 30

Lord Browne-Wilkinson, Lord Nicholls of Birkenhead, Lord Hope of Craighead, Lord Clyde and Lord Millett

Partnership — Dissolution — Effect — Agreement signed by partners prematurely dissolving partnership without consent of one partner — Partner treating agreement as repudiatory breach of partnership deed and accepting repudiation — Whether partner discharged from obligations under partnership deed — Whether partner obliged to contribute towards partnership liabilities — Partnership Act 1890 (53 & 54 Vict c 39), s 44[1]

The plaintiff and the 19 defendants became partners in a firm of solicitors in 1989. The partnership deed provided, inter alia, for retirement on giving not less than nine months' notice expiring on an accounting date, namely 31 May, but contained no provision as to what was to happen on the dissolution of the partnership. The firm did not prosper and in August 1990 all the partners save one, who initially intended to succeed to the other partners' shares and become sole proprietor, served retirement notices to take effect on 31 May 1991. By September 1990 the defendants decided that it would not be possible to maintain the partnership until May 1991 and sought an early termination despite the objection of the plaintiff. A dissolution agreement was signed by all the partners except the plaintiff agreeing to the cessation of the practice of the firm on 31 October 1990. The plaintiff indicated to the defendants that he regarded the dissolution agreement as a repudiation of the partnership agreement which he had no alternative but to accept and brought proceedings seeking, inter alia, a declaration that he was discharged from contributing towards the partnership liabilities accruing on or after 31 October 1990. The defendants counterclaimed for payment by the plaintiff of his share of the partnership liabilities. The judge found that the dissolution agreement was a repudiatory breach of the partnership agreement but dismissed the plaintiff's claim and declared that he was liable to pay his share of the partnership liabilities, including ongoing liabilities and losses yet to be realised. The Court of Appeal upheld that decision.

On appeal by the plaintiff—

Held, dismissing the appeal, that all partners were jointly liable for the debts of a firm incurred while they were partners; that, without agreement to the contrary, section 44 of the Partnership Act 1890 set out the rules governing the final settlement of the partnership accounts, including the requirement that where necessary losses should be paid by the partners individually in the proportion in which they were entitled to share profits, and applied to the winding up of every partnership after a dissolution whatever the ground of dissolution and regardless of the conduct of the parties; that, in any event, it would be wrong in principle to have regard to the parties' conduct when taking the dissolution account; that since an indemnity could only be obtained by agreement or by rescission of the partnership contract ab initio the contractual doctrine of repudiation was insufficient to provide the plaintiff with an indemnity against his liability for the firm's debts; that the plaintiff's liability to contribute to the accrued and accruing liabilities of the firm, and his partners' rights of contribution, arose from the fact that the liabilities were incurred or assumed by the firm when the plaintiff was a partner and those rights were not lost merely because of the plaintiff's partners' subsequent repudiation of the contract which the APPEAL from the Court of Appeal.

This was an appeal by the plaintiff, Robert Alfred Hurst, by leave of the House of Lords (Lord Lloyd of Berwick, Lord Steyn and Lord Hope of Craighead) granted on 6 January 1998 from the decision of the Court of Appeal (Simon Brown and Peter Gibson LJJ; Hobhouse LJ dissenting) delivered on 4 February 1997 dismissing the plaintiff's appeal from a decision of Carnwath J given on 11 April 1995 by which he dismissed the plaintiff's action against the defendants Raymond Alexander Bryk, John Goodacre, Iain Michael Harris, Michael David Simmons, David Geoffrey Haywood, Jeffrey Lloyd Freeman, Ronald Bernhard Norman, Duncan George Harman-Wilson, Jonathan Phillip Lewis Goldberg, Margaret Heather Bennett, Kevin Derek Bichard, Derek Bluston, Robert Danny Charon, David Mark Wingate Moont, Peter Dan Neidle, Paul James Sherren, Peter William Smith and Nicholas James Treppass, seeking, inter alia, a declaration that, as a consequence of the defendants' repudiatory breach of a partnership deed between the plaintiff and the defendants dated 3 May 1989, the plaintiff was discharged from any obligation to contribute towards the partnership liabilities as they stood on 31 October 1990 and as they subsequently accrued, alternatively as they accrued after 31 October 1990.

By the hearing of the appeal the plaintiff had concluded settlements with, or ceased proceedings against, the majority of the defendants and the appeal was pending against only the first, fourth, tenth, eleventh, twelfth, eighteenth and nineteenth defendants.

The facts are state in the opinion of Lord Millett.

Clive Freedman QC and Charles Samek for the plaintiff. The defendants' conclusion of the dissolution agreement on 31 October 1990 constituted a repudiatory breach of the partnership agreement. The breach was the same as if the plaintiff had been expelled from the partnership. There was no general dissolution of the partnership so the regime under the Partnership Act 1890 cannot apply. The case may turn on its peculiar facts rather than general principles. The plaintiff cannot be expected to contribute to such liabilities of the partnership, most significantly the lease on the King Street premises, as have accrued and continue to accrue subsequent to 31 October 1990.

The reasoning of Hobhouse LJ is correct and should be adopted. The partnership was a contractual partnership arising from a special contract and is governed by the law of contract as are the consequences of the wrongful renunciation of the contract by the defendants. The relevant principle of contract law is encapsulated in Colonial Bank v European Grain and Shipping Ltd [1989] AC 1056, 1098–1099. Consequently, as the obligation to pay rent after 31 October 1990 was conditional upon what thereafter occurred and thus had not accrued by that date, the plaintiff was discharged from such obligation on 31 October 1990 upon his acceptance of the repudiatory breach by his partners.

In so far as some of the partners were trustees of the lease for all the partners, the trust came about solely as the result of a special contract. That contract included an express clause for the recovery of the trustees' expenses. It was only on the basis of the partnership agreement that the plaintiff agreed to become a partner and thereby a cestui que trust of the trustees. Their claim for indemnity against the plaintiff did not survive the repudiatory breach of the contract and it would be inequitable for them to be able to assert rights in equity following their conduct: see Hardoon v Belilios [1901] AC 118.

The sole purpose of a clause relating to partnership premises is to enable the partners to use the premises during the currency of the partnership. The effect of the defendants' repudiatory conduct was to deprive the plaintiff of the ability to carry on the partnership business in accordance with the partnership agreement. Since there was no longer a partnership business there was no longer a need for partnership premises. There is no reason for a clause relating to partnership premises to survive a repudiatory breach of a partnership agreement: see Bowstead on Agency, 16th ed (1996), arts 62, 64, 65.

The property rights were not severable as the contract involved continuing mutual obligations which were interdependent. It is contrary to principle in contract law and in equity that the guilty parties should be able to enforce obligations which are interdependent with the contract against the innocent party whilst they are unwilling to observe and perform the contract themselves. The defendants, having chosen to use the partnership assets for their own purposes, must bear the cost of doing so. They cannot approbate, by using the property as their own, and reprobate, by demanding a contribution from the plaintiff: see Lissenden v CAV Bosch Ltd [1940] AC 412; Johnson v Agnew [1980] AC 367; Express Newspapers plc v News (UK) Ltd [1990] 1 WLR 1320; Alghussein Establishment v Eton College [1988] 1 WLR 587. The analogy with an arbitration clause (e g Heyman v Darwins Ltd [1942] AC 356) is inappropriate as an arbitration clause is separable from the main contract.

Philip Hoser for the first, fourth, tenth, eleventh and twelfth defendants. When a partnership comes to an end each of the partners is entitled to have its affairs wound up. This entitlement constitutes a fundamental incident of contracts of partnership. In the absence of agreement to the contrary, members of a partnership are liable to contribute to any shortfall or share any surplus in the proportions in which during the continuance of the partnership they shared profits: section 44 of the Partnership Act 1890.

As a general proposition, when a contract is brought to an end by one party's acceptance of another party's repudiatory breach, the primary contractual obligations of the party not in breach are discharged to the extent that they remain to be performed: see Photo Production Ltd v Securicor Transport Ltd [1980] AC 827, 849. However, this does not apply when the party in breach has, prior to the termination of the contract, already accrued a right to have such primary obligations performed. Rights are not divested or discharged which have already been unconditionally acquired and rights which arise from partial execution of the contract remain unaffected. A partner's obligation to contribute to losses and right to receive profits accrue the moment a partnership begins to incur liabilities. Once a liability is incurred on behalf of the firm all the partners are obliged to contribute to the discharge of that liability. The termination of a partnership draws a line so that only liabilities incurred or assumed by the partnership before that date and those properly incurred thereafter in winding up the firm's affairs are liabilities to which the accrued obligation applies.

In any event, there was no repudiation of the partnership contract. It should be noted that there is no express authority that the doctrine of repudiation applies to partnerships apart from the decision of Harman J in Hitchman v Crouch Butler Savage Associates (1982) 80 LS Gaz 550. Further, or in the alternative, the moment a partner undertakes a liability to a third party on behalf of the partnership he acquires a right to contribution from all the other partners in respect of their proportionate share of the liability. Such right to contribution is not lost merely because he subsequently repudiates the contract and that repudiation is accepted: see Herbert Smith v Honour The Times, 4 March 1999.

Andrew Hochhauser QC for the nineteenth defendant. There was no effective appeal by the plaintiff to the Court of Appeal against the nineteenth defendant because the appeal against the nineteenth defendant had been stayed. Accordingly, it is not open to the plaintiff to seek relief against the nineteenth defendant from the House. Should the appeal against the nineteenth defendant not be struck out the arguments of the other

A defendants are adopted and, in addition, Kelly v Cooper [1993] AC 205 is relied upon.

Clive Freedman QC in reply. The nineteenth defendant made no objections to the plaintiff's application for leave to appeal to the House and participated in the drawing up of the agreed statement of facts and issues. He has, therefore, waived his right to make a procedural objection to the appeal.

B The eighteenth defendant did not appear and was not represented.

Their Lordships took time for consideration.

30 March.

C LORD BROWNE-WILKINSON My Lords, I have read the speech prepared by my noble and learned friend, Lord Millett. For the reasons which he gives, I, would dismiss the appeal.

LORD NICHOLLS OF BIRKENHEAD My Lords, I have had the advantage of reading in draft the speech of my noble and learned friend Lord Millett. I agree that for the reasons he gives this appeal should be dismissed. I, too, prefer to keep open for another occasion the question whether a D partnership can be automatically dissolved by an innocent partner or partners treating the other partner's or partners' breach as repudiatory. That question does not call for decision in the present case.

LORD HOPE OF CRAIGHEAD My Lords, I have had the advantage of reading in draft the speech which has been prepared by my noble and learned E friend, Lord Millett. I agree with it, and for the reasons which he has given, I, too, would dismiss the appeal.

LORD CLYDE My Lords, I have had the advantage of reading in draft the speech of my noble and learned friend, Lord Millett, and I agree, for the reasons which he gives, that the appeal should be dismissed.

F LORD MILLETT My Lords, it sometimes happens that a partnership is dissolved following a fundamental breach of the partnership agreement by one or more of the partners. The question in this appeal is whether the innocent partner or partners are thereby discharged from all further liability to contribute to the debts and obligations of the partnership, whether accrued at the date of dissolution or accruing thereafter.

G The facts

Mr Hurst has been in practice as a solicitor since 1975. In 1986 he joined a firm of solicitors by the name of Malkin Cullis & Sumption ("MCS") as a salaried partner. The firm carried on practice from Inigo House, Covent Garden, London, WC2 ("Inigo House"). On 1 June 1989, following a merger with five of the partners of another firm by the name of Janners, H MCS changed its name to Malkin Janners. On the same day Mr Hurst joined the firm as an equity partner on the terms of a partnership deed dated 3 May 1989. There were 20 partners in all.

Shortly before this MCS had taken a 20 year lease of additional premises at 15 King Street ("King Street") at an annual rent of £95,000. The terms of the lease had been negotiated towards the end of 1988, and the lease was taken in the names of four of the equity partners of MCS as trustees for the firm. Mr Hurst, who was not yet an equity partner, was not consulted on this transaction. Nothing, however, turns on this. Clause 3 of the partnership deed of 3 May 1989 (which replaced a clause in almost identical terms in the MCS partnership deed) was in the following terms:

> "3.1 The partnership business shall be carried on under the firm name of 'Malkin Janners' and the principal places of business shall be at Inigo House, 29 Bedford Street, Covent Garden, London WC2E 9RT and additionally or alternately at such other place or places as the partners may from time to time determine ('the partnership premises'). 3.2 The partnership premises shall be held by the partners as partnership property and the cost of all rent, rates, repairs and insurance and other outgoings and expenses relating thereto or to any other property acquired for the purpose of the partnership business shall be borne by the partnership. 3.3 The legal estate in all freehold or leasehold property acquired for the purpose of the partnership (including the leasehold property referred to in clause 3.1) shall be vested in the partners upon trust for sale or in some of the partners as trustees for all the partners and the net proceeds of sale and the rents and profits until sale shall form part of the partnership assets and the trustees shall be entitled to be indemnified by the partnership against the rent and all outgoings in respect of the said property and the costs and expenses of observing the covenants relating thereto."

Clause 3.3 merely set out in terms what would be the legal position in the absence of express agreement. Malkin Janners was not the same firm as MCS by a new name. It was a new partnership with new partners who included Mr Hurst. It took over King Street as well as Inigo House and assumed liability for the rent of both properties. By becoming a partner in Malkin Janners Mr Hurst acquired a beneficial interest in both leases and became jointly with his fellow partners liable for the rent.

By the spring of 1990 relations between the partners had deteriorated to such an extent that several of them were actively considering giving notice of retirement with a view to moving elsewhere. At a partners' meeting in July 1990 all five former Janners partners indicated their intention to serve notices of retirement. During August all the remaining partners except one served such notices to take effect on 31 May 1991. Mr Hurst was among those who served notice. Had these notices been allowed to take effect, the firm would have been dissolved on 31 May 1991.

It was clear that the firm had no future. By September most of the partners were in agreement that it would not be possible to continue the partnership until the following May. Steps were put in hand to bring about its earlier dissolution. Staff were given notice. On 4 October 1990 all Mr Hurst's fellow partners entered into an agreement ("the dissolution agreement") to dissolve the partnership on 31 October 1990. Under the terms of the dissolution agreement five of the partners would form a new firm under the name Malkins with effect from 1 November 1990; Malkins would carry on practice from Inigo House; Malkin Janners would assign Inigo House to Malkins; and any continuing liabilities in respect of King Street would remain the responsibility of the partners of Malkin Janners.

A Mr Hurst was invited to sign the dissolution agreement but refused to do so. The judge (Carnwath J) described his attitude as unrealistic. On 2 November 1990 Mr Hurst informed his partners that he regarded their conduct in entering into the dissolution agreement as a repudiatory breach of the partnership agreement which he had had no alternative but to accept with effect from 31 October 1990. He had already accepted an offer to become a partner of D J Freeman, and he joined that firm on 5 November 1990. Other partners moved to other firms.

B It is obvious that the partnership did not survive these events, and it is common ground that, if it was not dissolved with effect from 31 October 1990 (as Mr Hurst alleges) by his acceptance of his partners' repudiatory breach of contract, it was dissolved with effect from that date by mutual consent.

C A steering committee was formed to wind up the firm's affairs. Mr Hurst attended occasionally and received some of the papers, though not all of them. The partners in Malkins duly took over Inigo House and assumed responsibility for the tenants' obligations under the lease. They paid no premium for the lease because it was considered to have no value. There had been a substantial fall in property values since the rent for King Street had been negotiated at the end of 1988, and it proved impossible to dispose of D the property or to sublet it except at a rent considerably below the rent payable to the landlord. It has been sublet but remains undisposed of to this day. There is a continuing liability for rent.

In other respects the winding up of the affairs of Malkin Janners was completed without difficulty. An interim dissolution account was prepared by the firm's accountants. It contained no entries in relation to Inigo House

E or King Street. It has still not been possible to produce a final account because of the continuing liability in respect of King Street. The interim account showed a small sum slightly in excess of £4,000 to be due to the firm from Mr Hurst.

Mr Hurst began these proceedings against his former partners in 1992. His main object was to avoid the continuing liability under the King Street lease. To this end he alleged that the partnership had been dissolved by his

F acceptance of his partners' repudiatory breach of contract and sought a declaration that he was thereby discharged from any obligation to contribute to the liabilities of the firm as they stood at 31 October 1990 or as they accrued thereafter. In addition he asked for a general partnership account to be taken by the court. The defendants counterclaimed for payment by Mr Hurst of his share of the partnership liabilities.

G In 1993 the landlord of King Street brought proceedings for arrears of rent against the four partners in whose name the lease had been taken. They in turn brought third party proceedings for contribution against their former partners including Mr Hurst. By his third party defence Mr Hurst denied liability on the grounds (i) that any trust which might have been created by clause 3 of the partnership deed had come to an end on 31 October 1990;

H (ii) that the claimants' right to contribution was entirely dependent on clause 3.3 of the partnership deed; and (iii) that he was discharged from all obligations under the partnership deed with effect from 1 November 1990 by reason of his acceptance of his partners' repudiatory breach of contract.

Although the defendants denied that their conduct in entering into the dissolution agreement constituted a repudiatory breach of the partnership deed, the judge found that it did and his conclusion was unanimously upheld by the Court of Appeal. There has been no further appeal to your Lordships' House from this finding or from the underlying assumption in both courts below that it was this which brought about the dissolution of the partnership.

The judge exercised his discretion by refusing to order the taking of a general partnership account, and in this respect also the Court of Appeal unanimously upheld his decision. As the judge pointed out, it would be very unusual for the court to order a complete audit of the firm's accounts to be undertaken by an independent accountant. Where, as in the present case, detailed accounts had already been prepared by competent accountants, these would normally form the basis for any further accounts and inquiries. Any partner would have the right to surcharge and falsify the accounts, but the burden would be upon him to do so.

In the present case the only significant dispute concerned King Street and Inigo House. Mr Hurst challenged the terms on which Inigo House had been transferred to Malkins, but it was incumbent upon him to show that the lease had a value which was not realised by the disposal. He failed to do so. The judge found that the lease was regarded as burdensome and its acquisition by Malkins was a matter of intense negotiation with the other partners. There was no evidence that any group of partners obtained any special advantage at the expense of the others. There were a number of groups with different interests and the arrangements with Malkins were the result of hard bargaining between them. Mr Hurst adduced no valuation evidence, and the judge concluded that he would not be justified in ordering an account on the speculative chance that there might be some additional value in Inigo House, which had not been taken into account.

Mr Hurst's main contention was that his partners' repudiatory breach of the partnership agreement discharged him from all further obligations under the partnership deed. These included his obligation to contribute to the liabilities of the partnership which had accrued prior to its dissolution as well as to those which continued to accrue thereafter. The judge rejected both contentions. He held that partnership liabilities which arose prior to dissolution remained liabilities of the partnership as a whole notwithstanding the repudiatory breach of contract and consequent dissolution. Mr Hurst's responsibility for his share of those liabilities depended, not on the continuation of the partnership, but on the fact that he was a partner at the time they were incurred. The same principles, he reasoned, applied to the continuing liabilities accruing after dissolution which resulted from transactions entered into prior to dissolution. It made no difference that the partnership was brought to an end by repudiation rather than by agreement. Mr Hurst was, therefore, liable to contribute to the rent due in respect of King Street accruing after as well as before the dissolution of the partnership. The judge dismissed the action and granted a declaration on the counterclaim that Mr Hurst was liable to pay his share of the partnership liabilities, including continuing liabilities for rent. His decision was upheld by a majority of the Court of Appeal (Simon Brown and Peter Gibson LJJ, though for different reasons). Hobhouse LJ dissented.

Mr Hurst now appeals to your Lordships' House. He has succeeded in settling the dispute with 11 of the defendants. Another is believed to be insolvent. Accordingly only seven of the original defendants remain as

A respondents to the present appeal. These include the nineteenth defendant, a Mr Trepass, who has been separately represented before your Lordships.

Repudiatory breach of contract as an independent ground of dissolution

The consequences when a contract is brought to an end by the acceptance by one party to it of a repudiatory breach of contract by the other party are B well established. They were clearly stated by Dixon J in McDonald v Dennys Lascelles Ltd (1933) 48 CLR 457, 476–477, where he said:

> "When a party to a simple contract, upon a breach by the other contracting party of a condition of the contract, elects to treat the contract as no longer binding upon him, the contract is not rescinded as from the beginning. Both parties are discharged from the further C performance of the contract, but rights are not divested or discharged which have already been unconditionally acquired. Rights and obligations which arise from the partial execution of the contract and causes of action which have accrued from its breach alike continue unaffected."

This passage has been expressly approved by your Lordships' House: see D Johnson v Agnew [1980] AC 367, 396, per Lord Wilberforce, and Colonial Bank v European Grain and Shipping Ltd [1989] AC 1056, 1098–1099, per Lord Brandon of Oakbrook.

The doctrine of accepted repudiation is of general application in the law of contract, and there is no reason why it should not apply to an agreement to enter into partnership or to the contractual obligations which the partners mutually undertake to observe after the partnership has come to an end. But E I have considerable doubt that it can be employed to bring about the automatic dissolution of the partnership itself.

The use of the doctrine for this purpose would certainly be unhistorical. In its modern form it is of relatively recent origin. There appears to be no trace of it before Freeman v Taylor (1831) 8 Bing 124, and it was not fully understood until much later. Of course, it had long been recognised before F then that the refusal or inability of one party to perform his part of the bargain should immediately excuse the other party from performing or preparing to perform his part. As Williston on Contracts, 3rd ed (1957), vol 1 pointed out, the reason why the plaintiff must ordinarily have performed his contract in order to recover is that the mutual performances in a bilateral contract are given in exchange for one another, and if the exchange fails on one side the other party may likewise decline to perform. G Before the middle of the 19th century, however, the common law treated the innocent party as discharged from further performance, not because the other party had committed a breach of contract, but because he had failed to perform a condition precedent to the obligation of the innocent party. Even where what was relied on was a breach of contract, therefore, the critical question was whether the parties' contractual obligations were mutually H interdependent or independent. The question whether there has been a mutual discharge of reciprocal obligations can arise only in a bilateral context.

Where one party was in breach of contract, the voluntary exercise by the innocent party of the right to refuse to perform his part of the bargain was usually described as "bringing the contract to an end" or "rescinding" it, with the result that he could not also claim damages for the breach. This fallacy was exposed by Bowen LJ in Boston Deep Sea Fishing and Ice Co v Ansell (1888) 39 Ch D 339, 365 and by Holmes CJ in Daley v Peoples Building Association (1901) 178 Mass 13. But it persisted until modern times, particularly in the Chancery Division: see Henty v Schröder (1879) 12 Ch D 666 and the cases which followed it down to Barber v Wolfe [1945] Ch 187 and Horsler v Zorro [1975] Ch 302. It was not finally laid to rest until Heyman v Darwins Ltd [1942] AC 356 and (in relation to sales of land) Johnson v Agnew [1980] AC 367. The failure to distinguish between discharge by breach and rescission ab initio has led many courts astray and continues to do so.

It is impossible to say whether the modern contractual doctrine of accepted repudiation might have infiltrated the law of partnership if partnership had been treated as merely a particular species of contract enforceable in the common law courts. Disputes between partners and the dissolution and winding up of partnerships, however, have always fallen within the jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery. This is because, while partnership is a consensual arrangement based on agreement, it is more than a simple contract (to use the expression of Dixon J in McDonald v Dennys Lascelles Ltd 48 CLR 457, 476); it is a continuing personal as well as commercial relationship. Neither during the continuance of the relationship nor after its determination has any partner any cause of action at law to recover moneys due to him from his fellow partners. The amount owing to a partner by his fellow partners is recoverable only by the taking of an account in equity after the partnership has been dissolved: see Richardson v Bank of England (1838) 4 My & Cr 165; Green v Hertzog [1954] 1 WLR 1309. Only the Court of Chancery was equipped with the machinery necessary to enable such an account to be taken, and the basis upon which the account was taken reflected equitable principles. These could be modified by agreement, but they did not find their source in contract.

The basic principles of partnership law are set out in the Partnership Act 1890 which was drafted by Sir Frederick Pollock and is still in force today. It codified (though not exhaustively) the law of partnership and reflected the pre-existing principles of equity which had been developed by the Court of Chancery. These did not include the contractual doctrine of repudiation. It is noticeable that section 1 of the Act, which defines the concept of partnership makes no reference to contract. It defines partnership as "the relation which subsists between persons carrying on a business in common with a view of profit".

Given this history, it is not surprising to find that until recently there was no recorded case of the automatic dissolution of a partnership being brought about by the acceptance of a repudiatory breach of contract, and no indication that this is a ground of dissolution in the Partnership Act 1890 or (except to doubt it) in successive editions of Lindley on Partnership over a period of more than 100 years. Generations of Lord Chancellors in the 18th and 19th centuries would have failed to recognise the concept. Thereafter, if the judges of the Court of Chancery had recognised the concept at all, it is likely that they would have rejected the idea that the dissolution of a partnership at the instance of one partner, however wronged, and against the wishes of his fellow partners can be withdrawn from the discretion of the court and left to the unilateral decision of the innocent partner.

A Repudiation as a ground of dissolution first saw the light of day in Hitchman v Crouch Butler Savage Associates (1982) 80 LS Gaz 550, where Harman J treated as axiomatic the proposition that the doctrine of repudiatory breach applies to partnership agreements as it applies to other contracts. The question, however, is not whether the doctrine applies to the contract of partnership, but whether it operates to bring about the automatic dissolution of the partnership relationship.

B This is much more doubtful. In the first place, the Act expressly states the circumstances in which a partnership is dissolved (expiry of a fixed term or termination of the adventure or undertaking, notice, bankruptcy or death of any partner, supervening illegality or order of the court). It makes no mention of repudiatory breach of contract. It is true that a partnership may also be dissolved by mutual agreement, and it may be objected that this is not C mentioned either; but in fact it is catered for by section 19 taken in conjunction with section 32(a). This cannot be relied on to support the admission of an accepted repudiation as an automatic ground of dissolution. The theory that a repudiatory breach of contract is an offer to terminate the contract which can be accepted by the offeree, thereby bringing the contract to an end by mutual consent, is discredited. The contract is brought to an end by the exercise of a right conferred by law on the parties to the contract D from the outset, not by virtue of a new agreement between them.

The admission of a new ground of dissolution which is not mentioned in the Act and which would not have been recognised by the Court of Chancery is far from axiomatic. But the supposed ground also sits uneasily with section 35(d) of the Act. This gives the court a discretionary power to decree a dissolution of a partnership when a partner, other than the partner suing, > "wilfully or persistently commits a breach of the partnership agreement, or otherwise so conducts himself in matters relating to the partnership business that it is not reasonably practicable for the other partner or partners to carry on the business in partnership with him."

It is difficult to envisage a case in which conduct of this description would not constitute a repudiatory breach of conduct which the party suing could F accept by bringing proceedings.

Even if this brought about the automatic dissolution of the partnership, it would not follow that paragraph (d) was altogether empty of content. It would not be needed where there are only two partners, but it would still be needed where there are more than two partners and there is at least one partner who is innocent of any wrongdoing and who does not accept the G repudiation. It would also arguably be needed even in a case like the present where there are numerous partners who fall into only two camps, those who are alleged to have committed a repudiatory breach and those who claim to have accepted it. What is there to bring the contract to an end as between the parties who are in the same camp? It is noticeable that the Act expressly provides that the death or bankruptcy of any partner operates to dissolve the partnership as regards all the partners. The contractual doctrine applies to H multiparty as well as to two party contracts, but it merely effects the mutual discharge of reciprocal obligations. It necessarily operates bilaterally as between each party in breach and each party accepting the breach as repudiatory by discharging them from their reciprocal obligations. It is difficult to see how it can operate to discharge the parties in the same camp, whether guilty or innocent, from the obligations they owe each other. This can only be achieved by agreement.

This would lead to a very odd distinction between those (few) cases where dissolution was automatic and those cases where it was not. To my mind, however, the strongest argument against admitting repudiatory breach as a further ground for the automatic dissolution of a partnership is that, wherever applicable, it would circumvent the discretionary power of the court under section 35. Even where the plaintiff establishes conduct on the part of his fellow partners which comes within section 35(d), the court is not bound to order a dissolution. This reflects equitable principles, but is in sharp contrast to the approach of the common law.

By entering into the relationship of partnership, the parties submit themselves to the jurisdiction of the court of equity and the general principles developed by that court in the exercise of its equitable jurisdiction in respect of partnerships. There is much to be said for the view that they thereby renounce their right by unilateral action to bring about the automatic dissolution of their relationship by acceptance of a repudiatory breach of the partnership contract, and instead submit the question to the discretion of the court. For a similar principle in a different contractual context, see Johnson v Agnew [1980] AC 367, 399, per Lord Wilberforce.

The courts below, however, found that the dissolution of the partnership was brought about by the acceptance by Mr Hurst of his partners' repudiatory breach of contract and not by mutual agreement. That finding, and the assumption on which it is based, have not been challenged before your Lordships. In these circumstances I am content to proceed on the basis of the same assumption while reserving for future consideration the question whether it is correct.

Consequences of dissolution

When a partnership is dissolved, its affairs must be wound up. This is the responsibility of the partners themselves. There is no provision for it to be undertaken by an office holder, though any of the parties can apply to the court for the appointment of a receiver if this is necessary to preserve the partnership assets.

To enable the partners to wind up the affairs of the partnership, section 38 of the Act provides that after the dissolution of the firm the authority of each partner to bind the firm, and the other rights and obligations of the partners, continue notwithstanding the dissolution as far as may be necessary to wind up the affairs of the firm and to complete transactions begun but unfinished at the date of dissolution, but not otherwise. Thus each of Mr Hurst's fellow partners had authority to negotiate for the disposal of the partnership premises or to instruct the partnership accountants. They did not need his consent to dispose of Inigo House, though he had the right, as I have explained, to challenge the terms on which they disposed of it by surcharging the account. Likewise the firm's liability for the rent of King Street and its obligation to indemnify the persons (whether partners or not) in whose names the lease was vested will continue until the lease is disposed of and the affairs of the partnership are finally wound up.

In the latter connection it is to be observed that, both under the general law and under clause 3.3 of the partnership deed, the lessees of King Street are trustees for the firm and are entitled to be indemnified by the firm, that is to say the partners jointly, and not by the individual partners. As Hobhouse LJ [1999] Ch 1, 26B pointed out, Mr Hurst's personal liability for the rent is indirect. Like any other liability of the firm it is a joint liability of the partners and, if paid by his fellow partners, is recoverable by them from him in the course of taking the dissolution account. The lessees' right as trustees to be indemnified by their beneficiaries for liabilities undertaken by them in the course of their trust establishes the firm's liability but says nothing about Mr Hurst's obligation to his fellow partners to contribute towards its discharge.

Partners are jointly and not severally liable for the debts of the firm incurred while they were partners (section 9 of the Act), and they are beneficially entitled to the assets of the firm remaining after the liabilities have been discharged. The winding up of a partnership involves the realisation of the firm's assets, the ascertainment and discharge of its liabilities, and the adjustment of accounts between the partners so that the profits can be distributed to them or the losses borne by them in the appropriate shares.

Section 44 of the Act sets out the rules which govern the final settlement of the partnership accounts. It is in the following terms:

> "In settling accounts between the partners after a dissolution of partnership, the following rules shall, subject to any agreement, be observed: (a) Losses, including losses and deficiencies of capital, shall be paid first out of profits, next out of capital, and lastly, if necessary, by the partners individually in the proportion in which they were entitled to share profits: (b) The assets of the firm including the sums, if any, contributed by the partners to make up losses or deficiencies of capital, shall be applied in the following manner and order: 1. In paying the debts and liabilities of the firm to persons who are not partners therein: 2. In paying to each partner rateably what is due from the firm to him for advances as distinguished from capital: 3. In paying to each partner rateably what is due from the firm to him in respect of capital: 4. The ultimate residue, if any, shall be divided among the partners in the proportion in which profits are divisible."

The application of the section may be varied by agreement, but it is quite general in its terms. It applies to the winding up of every partnership after a dissolution whatever the ground of dissolution and regardless of the conduct of the parties. It applies where the partnership is ordered to be dissolved under section 35(d) of the Act in the same manner as it applies in any other case, and no distinction is drawn between the rights and obligations of the partner or partners whose wrongful conduct led to the dissolution and the other partners or partner who are innocent of any wrongdoing. It would lead to an impossible situation if section 44 applied where the partnership was dissolved by the court under section 35(d) but not where the partnership was automatically dissolved following a repudiatory breach of the partnership agreement.

It would, in any event, be wrong in principle to have regard to the parties' conduct when taking the dissolution account. This is clearly the case where the account is taken in order to determine their respective entitlements to the surplus assets. These are in the nature of rights of property, and no matter how badly a partner may have behaved towards his partners he is not to be deprived of his accrued property rights. But the same must apply where there is a net deficit. It would take very clear words in the partnership agreement to require liabilities to be taken into account in ascertaining a partner's entitlement to the partnership assets to the extent of reducing his entitlement to nil but no further. The injustice of exonerating the innocent partner from his share of the firm's liabilities and throwing it upon the wrongdoers may not be apparent in the present case where there are 19 wrongdoers and only one innocent partner. But it would be very obvious in the converse (and probably more usual) case where there were 19 innocent partners and only one wrongdoer.

Mr Hurst contends that, by accepting his partners' repudiatory breach of contract, he was automatically discharged from his contractual obligation to contribute to the deficit, which must be borne exclusively by his fellow partners. One difficulty with this argument is that, when properly understood, Mr Hurst's obligation is not contractual but equitable. It is, I think, important to understand the part which section 44 plays in the winding up. The partners are jointly liable for all the debts of the firm. The firm's creditors are not concerned to enquire whose conduct has brought about the dissolution of the firm. However much an individual partner may have been wronged by his fellow partners, he remains jointly liable with them for the debts of the firm. Judgment may be taken against the firm and executed not only against partnership property but also against any individual partner. Section 44 is designed to ensure that, as between the partners themselves, any surplus is shared and any deficit is ultimately borne by the partners in the appropriate proportions. If a partner is obliged to pay more than his proper share of the firm's liabilities, section 44 entitles him to be reimbursed the excess through the taking of the dissolution account. In relation to the firm's liabilities it thus reflects the same equitable doctrine of contribution which applies between co-sureties and other co-obligors. That is a doctrine which is "bottomed and fixed on general principles of justice, and does not spring from contract; though contract may qualify it": per Eyre CB in Dering v Earl of Winchelsea (1787) 1 Cox Eq 318, 321.

Mr Hurst does not, as I understand his argument, dispute any of this. He contends that the contractual doctrine of repudiation operates at an earlier stage before section 44 or the equitable principles to which it gives effect come into play. He recognises that the contractual doctrine cannot affect his liability to third parties, but he claims that, as between himself and his fellow-partners, he is discharged from all further performance of those obligations which he undertook by becoming a partner, and these include the obligation to contribute to the firm's losses.

The difficulty with this argument is that it does not accurately reflect the contractual doctrine. As Hobhouse LJ recognised, the acceptance by one party of a repudiatory breach of contract by the other operates to discharge both parties from further performance of their contractual obligations. If Mr Hurst is discharged from the obligation he owes his fellow partners to contribute to the assets available to the creditors, then his fellow partners are likewise discharged from the corresponding obligation they owe him. Since the creditors are unaffected, they can still recover judgment against the firm and execute against any of the partners separately. Mr Hurst's argument does not lead to the conclusion that he can walk away from the firm's liabilities and thereby reduce the security available to the creditors, but to the conclusion that the liability for the firm's debts must rest wherever the creditors choose to let it fall. The fact is that it is not enough for Mr Hurst to avoid his liability to contribute to the firm's assets to make up any shortfall; he needs an indemnity against his liability for the firm's debts. This can only be obtained by agreement or by rescinding the partnership contract ab initio. The contractual doctrine of repudiation is not sufficient.

It is no answer to say that, as the wronged party, Mr Hurst is entitled, as his fellow partners are not, to damages for the breach of contract which brought about the dissolution of the partnership. If he can show that he was thereby deprived of income which he has been unable to earn elsewhere, he is entitled to be compensated for his loss. But this cannot be measured by the contribution he must make to the accrued and continuing liabilities of the firm pending the completion of the winding up. His liability to contribute to these had accrued before any breach of the partnership agreement occurred and has in no sense been caused by his partners' breach of contract. He would have continued to be liable for the King Street rent if his partners had committed no breach of contract and the partnership had not been dissolved. To recover this head of damages he would have to show that the acquisition of King Street was a breach of the partnership deed, and he has not alleged this.

This is only another way of saying that, although both parties are discharged from further performance of their obligations, rights are not divested which have already been unconditionally acquired. Rights and obligations which arise by the partial execution of the contract continue unaffected. Mr Hurst's liability to contribute to the accrued and accruing liabilities of the firm, and his partners' rights of contribution, arise from the fact that the liabilities were incurred (or in the case of King Street assumed) by the firm when Mr Hurst was a partner. Once the firm had undertaken or assumed liability for the rent, each partner in the firm was entitled to have the liability taken into account in ascertaining his share of the firm's profits or losses both before and after dissolution, and that right was not lost merely because Mr Hurst's partners afterwards repudiated the contract and Mr Hurst accepted it.

Mr Hurst argues that the liability for rent is not unconditional, since it is consideration for the right to remain in possession. A tenant's liability for future rent is not a simple debt; its existence depends on counter-performance by the landlord: see In re Park Air Services Ltd [2000] 2 AC 172. The short answer to this is that Mr Hurst does not claim to be discharged from his liability to the landlord. He claims to be discharged from his liability to his fellow partners, and this is not conditional upon any future counter-performance by them.

This analysis can be tested by reference to the law of agency. Where an agent is in serious breach of his duty to his principal, the principal can refuse to pay commission and the agent loses his right to be indemnified in respect of the transaction as to which the agent is in breach. But the agent does not normally lose his rights to commission already earned and indemnity in respect of past transactions which were completed before the breach: see Bowstead & Reynolds on Agency, 16th ed (1996), pp 317–322, Article 62 and the cases there cited. It may be otherwise where the agent has been guilty of fraud or breach of fiduciary duty (but see Nitedals Taendstikfabrik v Bruster [1906] 2 Ch 671 for an example where commission on some transactions was allowed); but there is no suggestion of either in the present case. The difference between the two cases is that in one the agency contract is discharged by breach and in the other it is set aside or rescinded ab initio.

In the course of argument a distinction was drawn between pre-cessation and post-cessation losses. This terminology can be misleading. Mr Hurst is not, of course, liable for the losses incurred by any other person or firm. He is not liable for the post-cessation rent of Inigo House, because this property has been disposed of and the rent is a liability of the firm which acquired it. It will be taken into account in ascertaining the profits or losses of that firm. But King Street has not been disposed of, and pending its disposal the rent is a continuing liability of Malkin Janners. Like the costs and expenses of the winding up, it falls to be taken into account in ascertaining the losses of that firm incurred during the winding up for which the former partners remain jointly liable. Section 38 of the Act continues the rights and obligations of the partners notwithstanding the dissolution as far as may be necessary to wind up the firm. Mr Hurst's liability to contribute his share of the rent continues unaffected by the dissolution unless he can demonstrate that it was unnecessary to retain King Street, a proposition which is contradicted by the evidence.

My Lords, Mr Hurst has been wronged and is entitled to damages if he can show that the dissolution of the firm has occasioned him loss which he would not otherwise have sustained. But he can neither avoid his joint liability to creditors of the firm arising from past transactions entered into while he was a partner nor, without rescinding the contract of partnership ab initio, throw his proportionate share of that liability onto his partners.

Mr Trepass

After the conclusion of the trial and while Mr Hurst's appeal to the Court of Appeal was pending Mr Trepass applied for a stay of the appeal against him on the ground that Mr Hurst had failed to comply with an earlier order for costs. That order has not been complied with to this day. Mr Hurst consented to the stay and an order was made staying the appeal against Mr Trepass and ordering Mr Hurst to pay the costs of the stay application.

Accordingly, when the appeal came on for hearing it was not effective against Mr Trepass, who had appeared in person at the trial but took no part in the appeal. The Court of Appeal dismissed the appeal but made no order in respect of Mr Trepass. Wishing to have his costs of the stay application taxed, and requiring a final order for this purpose, Mr Trepass wrote to the Court of Appeal and asked the court to include his name in the order. In his letter he stated that he understood that Mr Hurst's counsel had consented to the dismissal of the appeal against him. In the event the court merely amended the order to include an order for payment of Mr Trepass's costs, but it did not lift the stay on the proceedings against him and made no reference to him (or any of the other respondents) in the order dismissing the appeal.

In the respondents' case it is submitted that, as there has never been an effective appeal to the Court of Appeal as against Mr Trepass, Mr Hurst's appeal to your Lordships' House as against him is incompetent and should be struck out. This seems to be correct. Mr Trepass has never waived his right to be heard on the appeal to the Court of Appeal and the court did not lift the stay on the proceedings against him or in terms dismiss the appeal against him, which could only be done by consent. It merely granted him an order for the payment of his costs so that they could be taxed. Although the order of the court dismissed the appeal without distinguishing between Mr Trepass and the other respondents, this must refer to the appeal which was before the court, and this did not include the appeal against Mr Trespass which had been stayed.

Mr Trepass asks for his costs to be taxed on an indemnity basis. Although I agree that as against Mr Trepass Mr Hurst's appeal should be struck out as incompetent I can see no sufficient reason for awarding Mr Trepass indemnity costs. He did not lodge a separate objection to Mr Hurst's application for leave to appeal to your Lordships' House, but contented himself with repeated assertions in correspondence with Mr Hurst's solicitors that the appeal was of no relevance to him because the proceedings against him had been stayed and were liable to be struck out. Having made no attempt to object to the grant of leave, he instructed his own counsel to sign the respondents' case on his behalf, and personally signed the agreed statement of facts and issues. He appeared before the Appellate Committee by separate counsel, and lodged a skeleton argument which dealt with the merits as well as the competency of the appeal. In the circumstances I think that he is entitled to his costs but taxed on the standard basis in the ordinary way.

Conclusion

I would dismiss the appeal as against all the respondents including Mr Trepass, with costs to be taxed on the standard basis.

Appeal dismissed with costs.
